PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS FIRST SESSION.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, November 10, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art so patient to listen and so willing to hear. O consider us and let us go forth this day in the mood of high faith and purpose. Move us to deep earnestness to the present duties. If they are hard, O lead the way and enable us to press on with patient hearts and willing hands. Blessed Lord, in yonder place, now a holy retreat, there lies some mother's boy, a soldier lad. O God, take care of him. He once dreamed of long years and of an earthly path beneath cloudless skies and free from the keenness of mortal pain. But now he has shed his blood and died that others might live. We bow in humble gratitude and reverence at his bier, clothed in his country's flag and lit up with the deathless glow of eternal victory. May the diadem of fadeless glory rest upon the pure brow of the unknown mother forever. Grant that the holy bonds that were broken at the battle's front may be united in the kingdom of heavenly glory, ransomed by the love of our Heavenly Father for evermore. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. OLIVER, for 10 days, to attend the celebration of Armistice Day by the Farley Moody Post of the American Legion.

To Mr. VARE (at the request of Mr. McDUFFIE), for two weeks, on account of illness in his family.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS—JOSEPH L. BECK.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies the papers in the case of Joseph L. Beck (H. R. 654), Sixty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE UNKNOWN HERO.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the unknown hero. They will be very short.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the unknown hero. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, in all probability the next few weeks will be the most telling in the history of the world. On Friday next, the 11th day of November, A. D. 1921, the American people, through their representatives and in person, will march with bared heads and tearful eyes to the great Amphitheater in beautiful Arlington, where the body of the unknown American soldier, escorted by living comrades wearing the badges of distinguished valor upon their breasts, will be tenderly laid in its last resting place, and America's tribute will be paid to her unknown dead. Before the tears of sorrow have dried from the eyes of a grateful people—yes; even before that great funeral procession has broken ranks—there will assemble in the Nation's Capital representatives from the leading countries of the world for the purpose of determining officially whether or not this hero died in vain, and I pray God that the spirit of that unknown hero will counsel earnestly with that distinguished body of representatives, and that the prayers of millions of mothers of the world will hover like a sacred benediction over them, to the end that the civilization of the future may be spared the tragedies of war, and that universal peace, with all of its glorious blessings, will become the absorbing hope of the human family.

The Christian church and all fraternal, patriotic, and far-seeing organizations should exert the very last effort of their respective memberships in seeing to it that this conference is a success. It is our burden to make sure that the unknown American hero, typical of all who died in the late struggle, did not give his life in vain, but that when his noble spirit took its flight to the great beyond the mad demon of war as a human institution likewise passed from the earth. If the American dead could only know that such was the fruit of their sacrifice, their immortal spirits, now mingling with the departed saints, would sing a new song in that Heaven of Heavens, and their bodies would sleep in peace within the silence of the tomb.

ARMISTICE DAY.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the spiritual lessons of to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the spiritual lessons of to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the profound conviction deepens in my heart that somebody ought to say on the floor of the Nation's Congress, the day before Armistice Day and the meeting of the disarmament parliament, the word that I am humbly and reverently seeking to bring.

Yesterday in the shades of the early evening we listened to the "vocal silence"—the wonderful eloquence of a wonderful silence, during which more than a hundred millions of patriotic Americans paid the tender tribute of grateful tears.

The President of the Nation, the Vice President and Speaker of the House, the Chief Justice of the United States, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the general in chief of the victorious Expeditionary Forces of America, laid upon the bier of the unknown soldier the flowers that were at once the smile of a Nation and the smile of God. [Applause.]

This morning, just before the great stream of sorrowing citizens began to move by the beloved dust of this unknown hero, it was my honor and priceless privilege to place beside this casket a beautiful floral offering "From the War Mothers of Atlanta and Fulton County, Ga." Who can tell? It may be that the brave soldier boy was the son of some loyal son of the South who followed Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson; it may be that he was the son of some brave son of the North who followed Grant and Sherman in that tragic misunderstanding that eventuated in "the strife of brothers." But this we do know, that since "the Sons of the Blue from the wind-swept North and the Sons of the Gray from the sun-kissed South met on the field of France," and "the spirit of Grant and the spirit of Lee" and the spirit of God met with them all as they met on the field of France, we have—God knows we ought to have—an all-embracing national fellowship that we never knew how to see or feel before. And every citizen worthy the name of patriot will rejoice always and everywhere to do everything possible to cement the sacred fellowship of the once-sundered sections of our common country. [Applause.]

But great as is this contemplation, deep as is this passionate anxiety, I feel constrained to lay upon the hearts of my beloved colleagues and upon every citizen of our beloved country this other vital contemplation: The eyes of the world are upon the United States of America and the disarmament parliament meeting on the day of the world's great jubilee as they have never been before on any other nation or any other hour.

Not only in America but all over the world the churches of the living God are on their knees praying that the leaders of the nations meeting here shall be led by the spirit of God in order that they may do the will of the Prince of Peace. Solemn compacts between men and nations have failed through the weary blood-stained centuries; treaties of peace have failed while the suffering peoples of the earth have looked on in the agony of despair. I stand here to-day as a humble believer in Him who came preaching "peace on earth, good will to men" and declare my almost desperate conviction that a limitation of armaments itself will fail—for men fought and killed each other before firearms were ever known—all, all will fail, and treaties and agreements among nations will continue to be "scraps of paper" unless the rulers of earth and the people from whose consent they gain their power shall "go back to rock bottom and straighten up with God." All, all will fail without the regenerating and transforming power of the Christ of Calvary, the Prince of Peace, in the hearts of men and women everywhere.

It is related that in that dark and troublous hour just following the American Revolution when Tory and Liberalist were trying to graft their clash of ideas upon the instrument of the unformed Constitution, Benjamin Franklin arose and said:

Mr. Chairman, has it ever occurred to you and the men of this convention that we who are trying to project a Nation into the fellowship of the nations of earth have been very irreverent and shortsighted that we have never asked for help and guidance from the God of Nations? I move you, sir, that some God-fearing man among us be called upon to implead the Throne of Divine Grace that we who are trying to form and build a new-made Nation may be given the conscious fellowship and leadership of Almighty God.

Mr. Speaker, in this anxious and far-reaching hour, I speak in behalf of the empty-hearted mother of that unknown soldier lying yonder beneath the beauty of our flag and the wilderness of flowers and tears; I speak in behalf of 10,000,000 graves and more than 10,000,000 shadowed homes of earth; I speak in behalf of the almost shattered foundations of our cherished civilization, when I declare that nothing would so deeply impress the watching nations of the world as to see the members of the American Congress fall on their knees and cry in confession of sin and contrition of heart—

God of our Fathers be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget.

[Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1880. An act providing for the appointment of Warrant Officer Herbert Warren Hardman as captain in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, to take rank under the provisions of section 24a of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920;

S. 29. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to Lloyd E. Gandy, of Spokane, Wash., his heirs and assigns, the right to overflow certain lands on the Fort George Wright Military Reservation, at Spokane, Wash., on such terms and conditions with respect to improvements to be made on the present target range as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, or in lieu of such improvements to be made on the present target range the Secretary of War may accept a conveyance to the United States of such other lands to be designated by the Secretary of War as may be deemed suitable for a target range in exchange for such overflow lands; that to facilitate the acquisition of the necessary additional lands the Secretary of War is authorized to condemn land necessary and suitable for target-range purposes, such condemnation to be at the expense of said Lloyd E. Gandy, grantee, his heirs and assigns;

S. 2649. An act to extend the benefits of section 260 of the Judicial Code to Walter I. Smith, United States circuit judge; and

S. J. Res. 90. Joint resolution authorizing the Director of Aircraft Production, as holder of stock in the United States Spruce Production Corporation, to vote to sell the assets of the corporation and to impose conditions on such sales.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 2232) in reference to a national military park on the Plains of Chalmette below the city of New Orleans, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 151. Joint resolution to provide that deferred grazing fees received prior to December 31, 1921, shall be considered as receipts of the fiscal year 1921.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1880. An act providing for the appointment of Warrant Officer Herbert Warren Hardman as captain in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 29. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to Lloyd E. Gandy, of Spokane, Wash., his heirs and assigns, the right to overflow certain lands on the Fort George Wright Military Reservation, at Spokane, Wash., on such terms and conditions with respect to improvements to be made on the present target range as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, or in lieu of such improvements to be made on the present target range the Secretary of War may accept a conveyance to the United States of such other lands to be designated by the Secretary of War as may be deemed suitable for a target range in exchange for such overflow lands; that to facilitate the acquisition of the necessary additional lands the Secretary of War is authorized to condemn land necessary and suitable for target-range purposes, such condemnation to be at the expense of said Lloyd E. Gandy, grantee, his heirs and assigns; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2649. An act to extend the benefits of section 260 of the Judicial Code to Walter I. Smith, United States circuit judge; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. J. Res. 90. Joint resolution authorizing the Director of Aircraft Production, as holder of stock in the United States Spruce Production Corporation, to vote to sell the assets of the corporation and to impose conditions on such sales; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 904. An act for the relief of Elijah C. Putman;

S. 1408. An act authorizing the Rolph Navigation & Coal Co. to sue the United States to recover damages resulting from collisions;

S. 1894. An act to amend section 26 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs," etc.;

S. 2153. An act authorizing the owners of the steamship Texas to bring suit against the United States of America;

S. 513. An act granting a deed of quitclaim and release to J. L. Holmes of certain land in the town of Whitefield, Okla.; and

S. 1283. An act for the relief of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co.; the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co.; and the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co.

CORPL. LOMAN.

Mr. MICHAELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHAELSON. Mr. Speaker, I notice in the gallery one of my constituents, Corpl. Berger Loman, a hero of the World War. Corpl. Loman was awarded the congressional medal of honor, the croix de guerre with two palms, the medal militaire, the Montenegrin medal, and was cited for the Belgian war cross, the Italian war cross, and the Victoria medal with the four battle fronts. This makes him the most decorated American soldier. [Applause.]

Corpl. Loman enlisted at Chicago in 1917 and served overseas through the entire war. Corpl. Loman during the course of the war captured single-handed and alone in all 140 prisoners, bringing in at one time 70 and at another time 26 and at another time 14, and was the first soldier in the American Army to capture a German major and the first private decorated by Gen. Pershing at Chaumont, France. [Applause.]

At the Meuse-Argonne, with the assistance of another soldier, he turned a German 77 fieldpiece around and fired four shells on the retreating enemy before the company was counter-attacked. This feat broke the entire German line.

Through all these remarkable and heroic exploits Corpl. Loman came through unscathed. [Applause, the Members rising.]

THE LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the following announcement:

The Clerk read as follows:

At the opening session of the international conference on the limitation of armaments to be held Saturday morning at Memorial Continental Hall, Daughters of the American Revolution Building, located at Seventeenth and D Streets, Members of the House should arrive not later than 10 o'clock, since the doors will be closed at 10.15. Members will be admitted at the entrance on D Street.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the unknown dead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the unknown dead. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE UNKNOWN SOLDIER.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent, a request which I have never made heretofore during my service. I desire to incorporate in the RECORD a short poem dedicated to the memory of our unknown dead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a short poem dedicated to the memory of our unknown dead. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The poem is as follows:

MILES IGNOTUS.

(By Gustave Frederick Mertins.)

You sought no golden Czeco and no Spicy Isles
Called you to conquest; but along the drab,
Unshining way to Duty, and to Death.
Your feet unwavering went and then you died
"Somewhere in France," somehow, God only knows.
O Unknown Soldier! When at Arlington
The scarlet leaves shall fall beside the gold,
And russet leaves shall drift above them all,
Our kindly Mother Earth will claim you once again.
You shall not lie alone! Spirits of men
Who died at Wheeler, Sheridan, and Dix,
At Sherman, Jackson, Lee, and Beauregard—
Men whom the dark seas claimed—men whom the air
Released to dizzying death—all, all shall come!
And there for all who died, the life shall wait,
The shattering volleys leap, the bugle sing
A high, clear prayer to God to guard their rest.
You are our blessed Dead! But are you that alone?
Time now reverts; I hear a mighty roar
Of million voices raised to greet the Flag,
I hear the tramp of columns swinging down the street.
On wheel, on wing, on eager springing feet,
On spurning keel, the boys go forth to war.
I see the look of exaltation as they go,
And shining in their eyes see once again
The glance that glorified.
You are the Spirit of the Flag! You are the Soul
Of all the boys who went but did not die.
The clods that fall upon your coffin bones,
Are sown as seed for one Eternal Truth.
All else must die! All else must be destroyed!
O Unknown Soldier! When the pageant winds
Through storied Arlington, Mortality shall then Raise Immortality whose bright light shall tell:
"One Flag, one Country, and one Hope," till God Shall gather in His handiwork and will:
Only the Infinite shall be.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 8.10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 8.10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if he intends to adjourn from to-morrow until Monday?

Mr. MONDELL. I intend to submit such a request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen have received a mimeograph copy of suggestions made by the officer who is charged with the responsibility of providing for placing the membership of the House in line of march to-morrow, which contains the request that upon adjournment to-morrow Members remain in their seats until the Speaker, the majority and minority floor leaders, the chairmen and ranking members of the Committees on Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, and Foreign Affairs take their places in the aisle and at the head of the column of the House, to be followed by ex-service men.

This suggestion relative to the three committees that I have named was made because of the fact that provision has been made for the seating in boxes at Arlington of the chairmen of the three named committees—War, Navy, and Foreign Affairs.

It has occurred to me that it would be quite proper if in addition to this suggestion made by the officer in charge the chairmen and ranking members of what we know as exclusive committees would also fall in line at the head of the column. Of course, it is optional with gentlemen whether they do it or not; but it would seem to me quite seemly and proper for them to do so. That would include quite a number of committees in addition to the three named by the officer in charge. I submit that suggestion to Members to be followed if they deem it wise and proper to do so.

THE TAX BILL.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, there lies on the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8245, known as the internal revenue tax bill, passed by the Senate, which contains 833 amendments, many of them trivial and not important. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be taken from the Speaker's table and the House disagree to all the amendments and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8245, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to say that I understand the conferees will state to the House that before agreeing in conference to the amendment with reference to the difference in surtaxes between the House and Senate they will bring that matter back to the House and give the House an opportunity to express itself.

Mr. ANDERSON. I understand the gentleman to say that amendment No. 122 will be brought back in disagreement, thus giving the House an opportunity to vote on it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire whether the House will have an opportunity to vote on the 50 per cent amendment, aye or no, as to whether they want it or not?

Mr. FORDNEY. That is the purpose, to give the House an opportunity to express itself on whether they want 32 or 50 per cent or any other rate between those two.

Mr. LITTLE. The question is, Will the House have an opportunity to vote aye or no on the 50 per cent or will it be clouded by some rule?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; it will be brought back for the House to express itself as it sees fit on any rate—32 per cent or 50 per cent or any per cent between them.

Mr. LITTLE. Will there be any rule brought in that will take away that right?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I have said that before any agreement by the conferees the matter will be brought back for the consideration of the House.

Mr. LITTLE. On the question of 50 per cent, aye or no?

Mr. FORDNEY. On any rate—32, 50, or any rate between.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, to have the request for unanimous consent again stated?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request is to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8245, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House be instructed in conference to agree to Senate amendment numbered 122, without amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let us dispose of the point of order first.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would like to hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can not conceive of any point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama demands the regular order, and the gentleman from Ohio will state his point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this amendment No. 122 is the well-known amendment dealing with the surtax question. It seems to me that there is no reason why the House may not and should not at this time express its position upon that amendment. The amendment is very well understood. As the revenue bill passed the House the maximum average surtax rates were 32. As it has passed the Senate, the maximum average is 50 per cent. This is a matter of vital and far-reaching importance. The opportunity is now presented for the House to express itself upon that question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. For a question or for time?

Mr. STAFFORD. For a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will not the House have an opportunity to express itself under the agreement stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If "eventually, why not now"? [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Because as a Republican I have faith in the word of the gentleman from Michigan. I believe that he will present that to the House for its expression of opinion upon that subject before action is taken upon it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That may be a satisfactory reason to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I certainly do not impugn the gentleman from Michigan, but the House legislates and—

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know how many more Representatives are in the same situation that I am, but I am not prepared at this time to vote on this matter. I listened to the statement or the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], and I hope to be prepared later on to express myself upon this proposition. I am not prepared to do so at this time. As I say, I do not know how many men are like unto me, because I do not know whether I am for or against the proposition—I have not read it, I am ashamed to say—and I suspect there are others in the House in the same situation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that my friend from Illinois, the legislator of longest experience in the House, is not prepared to vote on this matter, which has been the subject of discussion for so long a time. I know there are many gentlemen on that side of the House in a different situation from the gentleman from Illinois, because we have had every assurance that for many days quite a large number of gentlemen on that side have been prepared to vote on this matter. It is partly for their benefit, I will say, that I am offering this motion now.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. I did not very distinctly hear the gentleman's motion as it was read from the desk, but am I right in thinking that if we vote "yea" on his motion we are voting for a 50 per cent surtax?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman is correct. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to consume time. Does any gentleman on the other side desire time? I wish to retain control of the floor to move the previous question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I wanted to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not aware of the fact that I had asked any question. However, I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman asked the question, if eventually, why not now?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, yes; that is correct.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would state this, that if we go into conference uninstructed, we will have a great advantage over going into the conference instructed, so far as the other amendments are concerned. The gentleman is aware of that as well as I, for he has been on a number of conferences.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I can only say in response to the gentleman from Iowa that according to the statement which has been made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] the conferees will have 832 other amendments on which to trade, and I think they could get along without this one. I am somewhat disappointed in the position of my friend from Iowa about this matter. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire any time?

Mr. FORDNEY. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentleman of the House, I hope the House will not instruct the conferees on this very important matter. I have already stated to the House that before the conferees would agree on that amendment which relates to the surtax, the all-important amendment to the bill, perhaps, the conferees would come back to the House and give the House an opportunity to express itself upon that amendment. At that time, of course, the conferees could be instructed if the House so desired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If the conferees came back to the House and submitted this particular amendment 122, and the gentleman from Michigan should move that the House recede and concur in the amendment, and some other gentleman should rise in his place and move to recede and concur in the amendment with an amendment, would not the latter motion have precedence, and if we then did concur with an amendment would not that prevent the House from voting directly upon the 50 per cent?

Mr. FORDNEY. My sole purpose, and the purpose of the other conferees, is to bring back that question and give the House full opportunity to express itself upon it, however that might be done under the rule; but I do not want the House to tie the hands of the conferees at this time on a bill of such importance, which carries 833 amendments, many of them of great importance, although perhaps this one is of greatest importance to Members of the House. The conferees should be left free under the circumstances, particularly when it has been agreed that we will come back and give the House an opportunity to express itself upon this amendment.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. I have no desire to participate in instructing the conferees, but I have a very great desire to be permitted to vote in favor of concurring with the Senate amendment. I want the gentleman to be candid with me and tell me whether, if this motion is defeated, the conferees will come back to the House and give us an opportunity to vote squarely upon the Senate amendment—not upon some compromise of it, but on the Senate amendment itself.

Mr. FORDNEY. I should say on the Senate amendment. Perhaps the conferees may come back and say to the House what they believe they may be able to obtain in conference and permit the House to vote on any rate permitted in conference to be considered, from 32 to 50 per cent, or on more, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. REAVIS. Then the conferees, as I understand it, will give the House an opportunity to vote squarely upon the proposition of concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. I should say without doubt that it is the intention of the conferees.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. May I have the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] for a moment? I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska—and the authorities on the proceedings of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CHRIS] and others here I am satisfied will not differ with me—that the conferees having come back here with a disagreement, it will be impossible to prevent the House having a vote on the 50 per cent amendment or anything else they want.

Mr. REAVIS. What I wanted to know is whether the conferees were coming back acting in perfect good faith with those who would oppose the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] by giving them an opportunity, before there is any agreement in conference, to vote squarely on the 50 per cent?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, the parliamentary situation is this: A motion is now in order pending the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to recede and concur with an amendment. That amendment could be made 32 per cent, or any per cent between that and 50 per cent. I do not think such a motion should be made because there has been no opportunity to study the effect on the revenues or on the total revenue needed of any particular per cent of surtax; but when the House has gone to conference and the conferees come back, then the preferential motion is a direct motion to recede and concur. At this time a motion could be made and will be made, if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] thinks it wise to make it, to concur with an amendment of 40 per cent or any other amount. But when the bill comes back after having gone before the conference, the preferential motion is to recede and concur. So if the House wants an opportunity to vote squarely on that proposition they will vote down the motion of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman from Wyoming has stated the matter correctly, and I would really prefer that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee be voted down, and that the House wait until the conferees come back, so that we may take this and other amendments under consideration and see what we may be able to do and then be able to express ourselves to the House when a direct motion is made in the House.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Before voting on this question I would like to have one good reason advanced why this House, that has heard this discussion and read about it, is not qualified at this time to vote on the question of whether they want a 32 per cent tax or a 50 per cent tax. [Applause.] I have not heard any good reason.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, very rarely do I trespass upon your time and patience by addressing you, and I would not do it now but for the reason that I realize how important the action you are going to take to-day will be to the already overburdened taxpayers of the country and to the honor and dignity of this House collectively as a coordinate branch of the Government.

Now, gentlemen, this revenue bill, according to my way of thinking, is the most indefensible and inequitable tax bill that has ever been seriously proposed. I think a proper title for it would be, "A bill to shift the burdens of taxation from the backs of the rich to the backs of the poor." The effect of it when enacted into law, and it will be enacted into law because the Republicans have 170 majority, will be to make the rich richer and the poor poorer.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. No; I will not.

In the last campaign, gentlemen, both parties in their platforms and in their speeches told the taxpayers they would reduce taxation and repeal these iniquitous, annoying, nuisance taxes. The Republicans won. This bill fails to keep the promise you made the people. Some of those taxes are repealed, some of them are reduced, but the greatest change in the tax is in the reduction of $450,000,000 excess-profits taxes paid by the large corporations and to relieve those who are fortunate enough to have big incomes from paying high income surtaxes.

Now, in my judgment, the Senate amendments have greatly improved this bill. It is a better bill than when it passed the House, but there is one particular amendment to which I desire to confine my remarks, and that is amendment No. 122, the surtax amendment. Now, gentlemen, unquestionably the conscience and judgment of a large majority of this House is that these high incomes should pay a surtax of at least 50 per cent. When this bill originally passed the House the Democrats offered a motion to recommit, retaining these surtaxes as high as 65 per cent, and at least 50 of the independent, brave Republicans voted for that motion with the Democrats. It was a Democratic motion. I assume, of course, that those gentlemen still feel the same way. Certainly, if they favored 65 per cent, they can favor 50 per cent, and when you are voting to retain this amendment at 50 per cent you are voting for a Republican amendment. It was put in in the Senate. If the progressive Republican Senators in the Senate could afford to provide this amendment, why can not the progressive Republicans in this House, who favor it, now vote for it?

Now, gentlemen, I love my chairman, Mr. FORDNEY, and I felt sorry for him when he was on his feet trying to answer some of the questions propounded to him by his colleagues on this side, notably the inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE]. Of course, he could not answer it. If the conferees tie themselves and agree to bring this amendment back, what advantage do they have in conference with trading? Do not the conferees of the Senate know that they are gagged and that they can not do anything? It is but a subterfuge to gain time for the Republican leaders to bring pressure to defeat 50 per cent surtaxes. Now, if you favor the Senate amendment why postpone action on it until the conferees report a disagreement on it. Why march up the hill and then march down again?

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRISP. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. May I not ask if you mean, if they keep their promise and give us a vote on it, they will not have anything to trade on?

Mr. CRISP. Absolutely not. On any proposition I have implicit confidence in the integrity of the conferees of the House.

But, gentlemen, you know the views of the majority of the conferees of both this body and the other body as to this amendment. You know what in their hearts they favor. They can not trade in conference on this amendment if you send it to them with the obligation to bring it back. My dearly beloved chairman says the conferees would discuss the matter and come back and report to you about what they can get. I tell you you can get 50 per cent right now. [Applause.] The Senate has passed it. If you adopt this resolution, the House conferees are compelled to concur in the Senate amendment just as it passed the Senate. The conferees will have no power to alter or modify it and it will become the law. [Applause.]

Now, gentlemen, as I said, I am sure the conferees will keep their word and report this amendment back, but you know when they come in here with it there are many slips between the cup and lip, and there are many slips in parliamentary law, especially under the rules of the House of Representatives. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. CRISP. Will you give me credit for the time I was interrupted? Will the gentleman from Tennessee give me three minutes more?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. CRISP. I want to discuss for a minute the parliamentary features of the situation. Under the rules of the House when a bill is first up for consideration with Senate amendments a motion to concur with an amendment is preferential over a motion to concur straight. But that is past. They can not make that motion now, because this amendment has been disagreed to. When the Houses have disagreed and the conferees report a disagreement, then a motion to recede and concur straight is preferential over a motion to recede and concur with an amendment. But under the rules of the House a motion to recede and concur is divisible, and if it is divided and you vote first on the question to recede, and that prevails, then a motion to concur with an amendment is preferential over a motion to concur straight, so you see it is possible to prevent a vote on concurring in the Senate amendment just as it is now written.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I will not yield now.

Gentlemen, you who want to vote for this 50 per cent amendment, making the possessors of enormous incomes in this country pay $50,000,000 more taxes than they will have to pay under the House bill, will you take any chance of losing what you want when, if you will vote for this motion to instruct the conferees, the matter is settled, and you absolutely know you will have income taxes of 50 per cent? The question is right up to you, gentlemen.

Now, if you send this back to conference, is not the effect of your action that the great House of Representatives, which our forefathers intended to be the body to prepare and originate legislation to raise revenue, will abdicate its power? In this case you are not abdicating your power to the Senate, a coordinate branch of the Government, but to 10 conferees. Will you do it? [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CRISP. No; I will not.

If you vote against this motion to instruct, that is the effect of your vote. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized. I do not want to take his time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I want to admonish my colleagues on this side of the House, and particularly those who desire to vote for an income-tax rate greater than that passed by the House, to give heed to that good old adage, "I fear the Greeks bearing gifts." [Applause on the Republican side.]

My friend from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] smilingly said a few moments ago that he was offering this amendment largely for the benefit of those gentlemen. We did not make this bill a political bill in the first place. It was made a political measure by gentlemen on that side of the aisle. Now they are undertaking to control this bill. [Applause.] The gentleman from Tennessee has said that he proposes to hold the floor, now that he is in charge, until he desires to move the previous question. He is trying to take you into camp, my friends [applause], and get the credit—such credit as there may be due—in pushing this thing through on his terms and not on our terms. The chairman of this committee has told you, has given you his word, that we, the Republican conferees on the part of this House, will give you an opportunity to vote for any rate you please. [Applause.]

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not now. They are trying to control you and whip you into line to do what they want.

Mr. SINNOTT. As to that adage which the gentleman quoted, is it not also true that "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush"? [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, there is a good deal of difference, I will say to my friend, as to who hands you the bird and what kind of a bird it is. [Applause and laughter.]

I prefer in this instance and regard it as the more appropriate the adage, "Fear the Greeks bearing gifts." [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Wyoming such time as he desires.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not desire to deprive the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] of time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I promised these two gentlemen to yield to them. I wish to yield to him. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] said he loved our chairman [Mr. FORDNEY]. I think he does have an affection for him. I certainly have an affection for my friend, the gentleman from Georgia. He is a dear personal friend, and I have enjoyed that relationship for a long time. But when he said he felt sorry for the chairman of our committee, that he was not able to answer the question propounded to him and refused to yield to me to ask him a certain question, I felt sorry for my friend, the gentleman from Georgia, and regretted that he felt called upon to criticize the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee for what he had been doing himself.

I felt sorry for him also when he attempted to state the parliamentary situation here to gentlemen on this side, and told you that conferees instructed, with their hands absolutely tied, could make as good a bargain as they could if they were not instructed. Why, I wonder how many times the gentleman from Georgia has talked to the contrary here on the floor. Gentlemen, you have every opportunity guaranteed to you by the conferees of this House. You now have the question to decide whether you as Republicans will control this bill or whether you will turn it over to the Democratic side for them to do with it as they see fit. Vote on this question to-day! Why? Gentlemen may be just as well informed at this time, but the committee is not as well prepared to submit this matter now as it will be later. Is there anyone here who distrusts the conferees, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. FORDNEY], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], and myself? I think not. My friend, the gentleman from Georgia, said he had abundant confidence in the conferees.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Is it not a fact that if the conferees agree and the House finally passes anything less than 50 per cent it will be the fault of the House and the conferees?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly, if I understand the gentleman correctly.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. The Senate has put it up to 50 per cent.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The whole situation is simply this: Will you act for yourselves and with your fellow Republicans as conferees giving you everything that you can possibly get in any way at this time or any future time, or will you act with the Democrats and take what they give rather than to take it from your own conferees? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if I am correct in my account of the time, I have 26 minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 26 minutes remaining.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this seems to me to be a matter entirely divorced from politics. It is not a question whether Democrats or Republicans propose it. A Republican Senate has sent to us a proposition for 50 per cent limitation in surtaxes. Why can we not accept it in preference to the 32 per cent limitation as passed by the House. I opposed that rate then and do so now. I support the higher rate. What have you to gain by postponing action? Here is the situation. Let me bring it home to my Republican colleagues. When the soldiers' compensation bill passed the House with a 65 per cent surtax last session, we added 3 per cent to finance the measure, making a surtax of 68 per cent in all, and we voted for it almost unanimously on this side of the House and passed it. That is over twice the rate fixed in the House bill. Who best represents the people now, the Senate or the House? If we could do that then, why can we not accept a 50 per cent limitation that the Senate has now offered? The danger in postponement is suggested by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT]: We have a bird in hand that is worth two in the bush. Why do we talk about Republican or Democratic leadership at a time like this upon a purely economic proposition? Who cares who offered the proposal to instruct? It is for us to decide what the American people want, and they want to put the burden of taxation on those best able to pay. It is dangerous to shift it on to those least able to pay as proposed by the 32 per cent House rate. Mr. Speaker, I have taken no part in conferences that have been held—I simply speak for myself. I have as high respect for the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. FORDNEY] as anyone has, but I insist that efforts to make retroactive the excess-profits tax repeal and the efforts to put through a dye embargo, and many other propositions under the guise of political expediency, are grave mistakes, and we are leading ourselves, or are being led, into a dangerous, indefensible position. No thinking man can fail to find a warning in the result of the elections held last Tuesday. We had better pay attention to the taxpayer and less to political strategy in the House. Let us vote for what we believe is right and what will help the people of the country. We will do so if we instruct the conferees to support the Senate amendment. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin yields back one minute.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I thought I asked a fair question of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means when I put the question whether this House was not capable at this time of voting upon whether we should lower the surtaxes down to 32 per cent or accede to the Senate amendment of 50 per cent; but the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means made no answer to that question.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I did not get his question—

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. No satisfactory reason has been advanced why this House at this time, after hearing the discussion for weeks in the House and Senate, is not prepared to vote on the simple proposition whether we shall have a 50 per cent surtax or a 32 per cent surtax. I feel as if I was as prepared to vote on it now as next week or next month, and for fear I may never get an opportunity to vote on the proposition, I want to vote for it now. It looks to me as if the repeal of the excess-profits tax was a tremendous mistake.

But after you have repealed the excess-profits tax and lost $450,000,000 that would have gone into the Treasury of the United States if you had retained it, and then propose to reduce the surtaxes from 65 per cent to 32 per cent, losing at least $90,000,000 more to the Treasury, I feel that it is going too far. In reducing taxes you begin at the wrong end and ignore a fundamental proposition that the burdens of government should be borne in proportion to the ability of the citizen. You begin first with the man who gets over $1,000,000 income and reduce the surtax on his income from 65 per cent down to 32 per cent. You say to the men who have an income of from $500,000 a year to $1,000,000 a year, "We will reduce your taxes from 64 down to 32 per cent." You continue right on until you get down to the man receiving an income of $5,000, $6,000, $7,000, $8,000, or $9,000 or $10,000, the man who perhaps needs some reduction, the man who has children to educate, the small-income man, and your reduction on his income practically amounts to nothing.

VIOLATION OF FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES.

The reduction of surtaxes as proposed, and the repeal of the excess-profits tax, as I have stated, violate one of the fundamental principles laid down by every authority on taxation:

That the burdens of government should be borne by all of the people, and that every person owes an obligation to pay in proportion to his ability to pay.

The amount of surtaxes for the year 1921, as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, amount to $380,000,000.

LOSS IN REVENUE.

By reducing surtaxes, as proposed by the House bill, from 65 per cent to 32 per cent the Government would lose in revenue $90,000,000. No one pays a surtax who is not receiving an income of over $5,000 per annum, and then only 1 per cent. This is a progressive tax and increases until a tax of 65 per cent is paid on net incomes that exceed $1,000,000 per year. One would naturally suppose if taxes were to be reduced that a man with a five and six thousand dollar income would be the man to receive the benefit. But not so. Congress seems more solicitous of the man receiving an income of $1,000,000 or more a year, and his surtax is reduced from 65 per cent to 32 per cent.

This bill proposes to make the following reduction in surtaxes, to wit—it will be noted that the larger the income the greater the reduction:

On net incomes exceeding $1,000,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 65 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 33 per cent.)

On net incomes from $500,000 per year to $1,000,000 the surtax is reduced from 64 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 32 per cent.)

On net incomes from $300,000 per year to $500,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 63 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 31 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $200,000 to $300,000 per year the tax is reduced from 60 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 28 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $150,000 and not exceeding $200,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 56 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 24 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $100,000 and not exceeding $150,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 52 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 20 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $98,000 and not exceeding $100,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 48 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 16 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $96,000 and not exceeding $98,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 47 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 15 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $94,000 and not exceeding $96,000 the surtax is reduced from 46 per cent to 32 per cent. Tax reduced 14 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $92,000 and not exceeding $94,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 45 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 13 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $90,000 and not exceeding $92,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 44 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 12 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $88,000 and not exceeding $90,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 43 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 11 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $86,000 and not exceeding $88,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 42 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 10 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $84,000 and not exceeding $86,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 41 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 9 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $82,000 and not exceeding $84,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 40 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 8 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $80,000 and not exceeding $82,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 39 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 7 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $78,000 and not exceeding $80,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 38 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 6 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $76,000 and not exceeding $78,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 37 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 5 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $74,000 and not exceeding $76,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 36 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 4 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $72,000 and not exceeding $74,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 35 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 3 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $70,000 and not exceeding $72,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 34 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 2 per cent.)

On net incomes exceeding $68,000 and not exceeding $70,000 per year the surtax is reduced from 33 per cent to 32 per cent. (Tax reduced 1 per cent.)

As an illustration of who would be benefited by the reduction of surtaxes, I take the State of Wisconsin, which is an average agricultural State. The following table shows the number of people in the State of Wisconsin who would profit by reduction of surtaxes. (The following table is taken from the last Treasury report, which was for the year 1918:)

Net income class:	Number of returns.
$300,000 to $400,000	1
$200,000 to $300,000	1
$150,000 to $200,000	6
$100,000 to $150,000	24
$90,000 to $100,000	10
$80,000 to $90,000	19
$70,000 to $80,000	24
$60,000 to $70,000	33
$50,000 to $60,000	58
$40,000 to $50,000	82
$30,000 to $40,000	198
Total	237

The lowering of the surtax would help 237 people in Wisconsin who are getting net incomes of from $30,000 to $500,000 per year. The rest of the taxpayers of the State would have to make up in some way the amount of the Government losses in revenue by reason of its generosity toward its citizens who have the big incomes.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

This bill proposes to repeal all excess-profits taxes. I believe that this is a very great mistake.

The present revenue law of 1919—section 312 of the act—provides:

That the excess-profits credit shall consist of a specific exemption of $3,000 plus an amount equal to 8 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year.

The law further provided that any net income from the taxable year less than $3,000 shall be exempt from the excess-profits tax.

LOSS OF REVENUE.

It is admitted that the Government would collect for the year 1921 at least $450,000,000 from the excess-profits tax that this bill proposes to repeal. The excess-profits tax does not take a penny away from anyone who is not receiving over 8 per cent interest on his invested capital. One billion four hundred and thirty million dollars from excess-profits taxes were received for the year 1919, and I am informed by the Treasury Department that the excess-profits tax for 1920 will amount to $850,000,000.

The ruling that corporations must report their inventories at the market prices rather than at cost lowered the amount of taxes paid very materially; otherwise a very much larger amount would have been paid. With returning prosperity and with inventory losses adjusted to the lower price level, the revenue derived from excess profits for the year 1922 will undoubtedly yield a very much larger amount than either of the two preceding years.

With a war debt of $24,000,000,000 and the annual interest amounting to over $1,000,000,000, I am not satisfied with the argument presented by the Senate committee justifying the repeal of the excess-profits tax when it announced in its report at the outset "that the time for discussion is past and the time to repeal the excess-profits tax has arrived."

MANY SMALL CORPORATIONS MISLED.

The average small corporation will pay a much larger tax under the proposed law than under the former law, and many of them have been misled by the propaganda sent out and have joined in the chorus of "Repeal the excess-profits tax." Under the House bill they would pay 12½ per cent flat tax and by the Senate bill 15 per cent tax, retaining the exemption of $2,000 given by the existing law.

OFFICIAL FIGURES.

The last Treasury publication Statistics of Incomes for the Year 1918, page 18, shows a total of 202,000 corporations reporting net incomes. Of these, 69,000 had net incomes of less than $3,000, and therefore paid nothing; 79,000 corporations whose incomes were less than $10,000 paid excessive-profits taxes of about $200 on the average. In that year the total excess-profits tax amounted to $2,500,000,000, more than three-fourths of this, or $1,955,000,000, was paid by 4,251 corporations reporting $250,000 or more of net income. In other words, 2 per cent of the corporations reporting net incomes paid over three-fourths of the excess-profits tax, or over $1,900,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, I can not blindly follow party leaders when they propose legislation that favors the few at the expense of the many and which benefits 2 per cent of the people and is oppressive to 98 per cent of our people.

The same official figures show that 180 corporations are making annually from $5,000,000 up to $300,000,000.

With a flat corporation tax of 12½ per cent and no excess-profits tax, corporations making under 10 per cent net income will pay at least 50 per cent more than they formerly paid, and the corporation making from 20 per cent to 50 per cent will pay over 50 per cent less than before.

OFFICIAL FIGURES SHOW NEED OF EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

The last report of the revenue commissioners available is for the year 1918. This report shows that the United States Steel Corporation made over $500,000,000 in net profits. That 180 corporations had net incomes of $2,554,000,000. These companies would only have paid $203,000,000 income tax if they had not had to pay an excess-profits tax. Thanks to the excess-profits tax they paid $848,000,000 in excess profits. These corporations made excessive profits, and some of them as high as 100 per cent, on a large capitalization.

WEALTHY CORPORATIONS ARE BENEFITED.

We know there are many corporations making large profits to-day, and when normal times return they will make excessive profits. That is why they are fighting the excess-profits tax. The Standard Oil Co. and the many oil companies connected with it made from 30 to 100 per cent before the war. The steel company, the coal companies, the packers, and many other corporations have always made excessive profits.

A short time ago one of the New York papers carried the following financial item which illustrates the effect of abolishing the excess-profits tax:

The * * * Co. is attaching much importance to the proposed tax changes because of the expected benefits to accrue to it. If the tax is changed to 15 per cent on net profits, which is the rate proposed in the new bill now before Congress, it is estimated that earnings available for dividends on the present common stock in 1922 will be equivalent to over $42 a share. For example, in 1918, when profits available for common were $2,810,999, taxes amounted to $1,250,000, whereas on estimated earnings for the next year of $5,000,000, taxes are forecast at $771,000.

One would think that very few were making excess profits from some of the debates in Congress. If that were a fact then an excessive-profits tax would certainly do no harm to people who did not have to pay it. The fact is, however, that many of the large corporations are making excessive profits.

Senator KENYON, in the Senate (p. 7410, CONG. REC.), made the following statement:

Before our committee investigating the West Virginia situation a few days ago we had a great coal operator, a fine-appearing gentleman, and he told us about their coal company. We delved into the profits, and the profits were enormous.

His company last year paid an excess-profits tax of $1,000,000. I asked him if that had injured his company, and he said no. Outside of paying that large excess-profits tax of $1,000,000 they have paid large dividends. The prices of coal had not been increased to the American people on account of that. It simply meant that if the excess profit of $1,000,000 was not collected by the Government it would have gone into dividends. That is one picture that stood out in my mind.

On the Monday following that, the other picture came before me. I was called to the anteroom of the Senate by card. There was a man who said he had been a soldier from my State. He was a veteran of the Rainbow Division, that wonderful division which was the rainbow of hope to the people of distracted Europe. He had gone overseas. He was sitting out in this anteroom with 35 cents in his pocket. He was an Iowa boy. He had a sick wife and baby whom he had brought from New York. He had not a cent on earth outside of his 35 cents, and he was hungry.

The Federal Trade Commission of the United States, in its investigation of certain companies in 1918, on page 9 of the report, gave a statement of what some of the steel companies were making:

	Profits, per cent.
Alan Wood Iron & Steel Co.	52.63
Allegheny Steel Co.	78.92
American Tube & Stamping Co.	40.03
Central Iron & Steel Co.	71.35
Eastern Steel Co.	30.24
Forged Steel Wheel Co.	105.40
Fallansbee Bros. Co.	112.48
Nagle Steel Co.	319.67
West Penn Steel Co.	159.01
West Leechburg Steel Co.	109.05

The report of the Treasury Department, 1917, Senate Document No. 259, shows that some coal companies were making excess profits and that profits as high as 100 per cent were not uncommon on capital stock. The Treasury Department also shows that 185 out of 404 of the coal companies reported upon earned profits on their capital stock of 100 to 7,856 per cent for the year 1917. In other words, nearly one-half of the coal companies paid profits equal to their entire capital stock, and one of the mines paid profits equal to seventy-eight times its capitalization.

The Treasury Department also shows that out of 45 woolen and worsted mills 1 earned 1,770 per cent on its capital stock. In other words, a person having $100 worth of stock was able to draw $1,770 profit in a single year. Out of the returns of 45 woolen and worsted mills 17 reported profits of more than 100 per cent on their capital stock.

The report further shows that out of 122 meat packers 30, or 1 out of every 4, made more than 100 per cent profit on their capital stock.

I have quoted from the latest official reports of the Treasury "Statistics of Income," which were in print as shown by the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., November 5, 1921.

HON. EDWARD E. BROWNE,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BROWN: Receipt is acknowledged of your request of November 3 for a copy of the latest report entitled "Statistics of Income," and of the one preceding it.

As the 1919 returns are to be ready for distribution very shortly, it is presumed that you desire the 1918 and 1919 reports. The 1918 compilation is being forwarded to you to-day, and as soon as the 1919 compilation is available a copy will be sent you.

Sincerely, yours,

D. H. BLAIR,
Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

NO VALID REASON FOR REPEAL OF TAX.

The argument advanced that excess-profits taxes and surtaxes injure business, and that capital will invest in nontaxable bonds, as an excuse for repealing these taxes is not sound. It would be impossible for individuals or corporations having capital invested in business enterprises, manufacturing plants, and other lines of business, both wholesale and retail, to convert such property into capital and invest that capital in bonds. Take the big steel corporations, Standard Oil, and the "Big Four" packing companies. Can any of these companies convert their property into cash and invest it in nontaxable bonds? Certainly not!

The amount of capital that would be withdrawn from business because of the net income of that capital of over 8 per cent was taxed, would be so small that it would be negligible. Nontaxable securities bring only from 3½ to 5 per cent interest and they are limited, while under the excess-profits tax all business is allowed 8 per cent net profit free from the excess-profits tax.

The argument that capital will not invest, that it will not contribute anything toward paying our war debt is not only untenable, but is a selfish, dog-in-the-manger, unpatriotic position to take.

The other standard argument that the ultimate consumer pays the tax is also unsound and so utterly inconsistent with the argument that the excess-profits tax kills business that the two can not be successfully advanced before a public of average intelligence at the same time. A month or two at least should elapse between the presentation of both of these propositions in deference to average intelligence.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX NOT THE CAUSE OF HIGH PRICES.

The claim has been made and accepted by some that the excess-profits tax has been the cause of high prices. Wholesale prices had already risen 60 per cent before America had entered the war, and 80 per cent before the excess-profits tax was imposed. In 1919 the tax rates were so greatly reduced that the amount received from excess profits fell from $2,500,000,000 to $1,500,000,000. Notwithstanding this lowering of the excess-profits tax prices continued to rise steadily until May, 1920, they stood at 275 per cent of the prewar level. Then without any reduction in the tax rates prices fell steadily until 148 per cent of the prewar level in June, 1921. These facts show clearly that excess-profits taxes or surtaxes had nothing to do with the high prices. Economists without exception have held for a century past that a tax on differential profits has no effect upon prices. The facts prove conclusively that the economists are correct and that excess-profits taxes and kindred taxes have nothing to do with the increased cost of living.

I do not believe in repealing the excess-profits tax or radically reducing surtaxes until our national war debt is paid. This debt is a sacred obligation and the large corporations that profited by the war and doubled and quadrupled their capital should pay according to their ability to pay.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. May I yield two minutes of that to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the gentleman who just yielded the floor [Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin] states that the reduction of surtaxes made by the House repeals $450,000,000 of taxes.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield? I want to make a correction.

Mr. FORDNEY. Wait a minute. If he couples the $450,000,000 taxes with the excess-profits tax, he is still in error, because the House bill increases the corporation income tax from 10 per cent to 12½ per cent, and the Senate increased it to 15 per cent—

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I decline to yield—to make up the loss by the repeal of the excess-profits tax. These rates will make up that sum. The House provision would repeal less than $90,000,000 of the surtax, according to the statement of the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask for one minute to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I regret that I can not yield any more time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, taking advantage of a technicality—and it is a pure technicality in this case—the gentleman from Tennessee makes a motion to instruct the conferees to concur in the Senate amendment. It is true that the gentleman from Michigan, when he submitted his request that the bill be sent to conference, did not add the words "without instructions." I was at the moment being interrogated and was not listening to him closely, and supposed that he had used those words, but it seems that those two words were not added. The Chair not having immediately announced the conferees, the gentleman from Tennessee did have his opportunity. I think there is no Member on this side but what understood that if the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Michigan to send the bill to conference was agreed to that it was to be without instructions. But it seems after inquiry that the gentleman from Michigan did not use those two words. That gave the gentleman from Tennessee his opportunity.

Now, the question is whether we shall at this time, without having had an opportunity to consider the effect upon this bill of the various surtaxes, determine without that investigation what the maximum surtax shall be at this particular time. I propose to offer a motion at the proper time to lay this motion of the gentleman from Tennessee on the table. If that is carried and the bill goes to conference without instructions there will be an opportunity for Members of the House to vote on this question squarely after the committee of conference has had an opportunity to study the question and determine the exact effect in the matter of revenue and otherwise of the various surtaxes which may be suggested between 32 and 50 per cent. At a later time I think we can vote intelligently. At this time we would be voting without information as a pure matter of guesswork as to the effect on the revenues and on the remainder of the bill, taking the word of another body, without any investigation of the matter whatever; and what is more, transferring the control of the situation to the other side when we have not had sufficient evidence of approval of sound policies on that side to justify us in doing that at this or at any other time. I assure the Members that an opportunity will be given them on this question after the conferees have had time to study it and deliberate upon it, and to set before the House the effect of the different surtaxes as they may be suggested between the amount fixed by the Senate and the amount fixed by the House. I trust that gentlemen will vote for the motion to table the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee in order that the conferees may go to conference uninstructed, as it was understood by the great majority of Members we were to do when unanimous consent was given.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, there is just one proposition before this House, and only one, and that every gentleman must decide for himself. That is whether you want 50 per cent surtaxes or 32 per cent or any percentage between those two. If you are in earnest, and I know that some of you are, you are going to take this opportunity to get 50 per cent. If you are not in earnest and still want to make a record so that you could go back and say to your constituents that you wanted 50 per cent, you will follow the course suggested by the chairman of the committee and let it go to conference, and when it comes back make a motion to agree with an amendment at 45 per cent. You will take that and tell the people at home that that was the best you could get.

Now let us see what will happen. You have got 10 members on the conference committee; you have got 3 Republicans from the Senate and 3 Republicans from the House. There is not a single one of them that wants 50 per cent. You have got your bill in the hands of 6 Republicans who were opposed to the 50 per cent, and you have the Secretary of the Treasury backing them up.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARNER. In just a moment. I take the record in the Senate and I take the record in the House for this statement. I say to you Republicans it is not a matter of politics, for, God bless you, it is a matter of the people in this country who want wealth to pay its part rather than the masses to pay all. The West and the South are standing together in this matter, and I do not blame them, for it is natural that they should. Let us see. We go into conference. Mr. FORDNEY sits up at this end of the table and Senator PENROSE at the other end. Mr. COLLIER and myself will be sitting in a back seat, somewhere off here. We will begin to consider the bill, and we will come along finally to amendment No. 122. The question then will be, "What about this?" and somebody will say the best thing to do is to let this pass over, for there is a controversy about that. Very well; we will pass it over, as we do other amendments. We get rid of the nonessentials first, and then finally we come down to the consideration of this particular amendment, and what happens?

In the meantime the Secretary of the Treasury and every other man who is opposed to the 50 per cent proposition who has any influence, brings it to bear upon the Members on the Republican side of the House to get them to agree to a less rate than 50 per cent, and gentlemen know it. Let us deal fairly with each other here.

Mr. FORDNEY, if you want to give the House an opportunity to vote on this, why do not you do it now? What is the reason, Mr. MONDELL, that you are not willing now to have the House vote on this proposition?

Mr. MONDELL. I stated the reason, that up to this time we have no information as to the effect, the general effect, on the revenues of the different surtaxes that have been suggested.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, the gentleman—

Mr. MONDELL. And the gentleman wants to transfer the sovereignty, the control, the jurisdiction from this body to the other body.

Mr. GARNER. Ah, gentlemen, every man in this House knows that I am just as jealous of its rights as any Member, and I yield to no man in that particular.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is not showing it now.

Mr. GARNER. But, gentlemen, this is merely a question of right, not a question of principle other than a question of the principle of right. You have to do one of two or three things. You have to take the 32 per cent or you have to take the 50 per cent, or you have to take some point in between those. Is not that correct?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I yield to the gentleman, although I have only eight minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Michigan, the chairman of the committee, stated to the membership of the House that he would bring the question of the surtax back for a vote.

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And give the membership of the House an opportunity to vote on whether they would take the Senate 50 per cent or not. Does not the gentleman from Texas—

Mr. GARNER. Oh, the gentleman from Kansas is the chairman of the Committee on Rules, and I ask him this question and I want him to answer it. If we bring this proposition back here and the gentleman from Michigan moves to recede and concur, and I make a demand for a division and we vote to recede, then can not the gentleman from Kansas move to concur with an amendment, and will not that take precedence? I ask you that question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But I take the word of the gentleman from Michigan, as I would the word of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. And I do also. I take the word of the gentleman from Michigan. I have not said that I would not, but I ask the gentleman this question. If the gentleman from Michigan comes back and moves to concur in the Senate amendment, and then the gentleman from Wyoming demands a division of the question—

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman from Wyoming will not do that.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Wyoming guarantee that there is no man in the House who will do it?

Mr. MONDELL. It does not matter whether some one does it or not.

Mr. GARNER. But it does.

Mr. MONDELL. It does not. It is perfectly easy to vote down a proposition to divide the question—

Mr. GARNER. Oh, the gentleman is now talking about voting down something. Of course, you have got to vote down something in order to get a direct vote.

Mr. MONDELL. We are going to keep our word. Why, gentlemen on the other side told me repeatedly that they had no objection to sending this bill to conference without instructions.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I be permitted to keep recognition on the floor when I have it. The gentleman from Wyoming will not tell me that he told me any such thing. I want to clear my skirts now. I keep my agreements, if I have to cut off this right arm to do it. I ask the gentleman from Wyoming in all candor—his colleagues are here—does he intend to adopt the 50 per cent proposition?

Mr. MONDELL. I intend to have a vote upon it.

Mr. GARNER. Ah, ah! The gentleman is going to have a vote on it. The gentleman knows now, just as I said awhile ago, that it will take two weeks to adopt this report in conference.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wyoming does not—

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield. The gentleman wants to take up all of my time. In the meantime the gentleman from Wyoming and other influential gentlemen in this country will be picking them off, until you can count them on these fingers. We got 50 votes on the Republican side of the House on the question to recommit, and that involved a 65 per cent surtax. We ask you now, when it involves 50 per cent surtax, will you join with us, will you do the thing that is in your heart, join with us and adopt once and for all the 50 per cent, put it on the statute books, because if you want it in the law, you have got to do it now, or else you will get 40 per cent or 42 per cent or 43 per cent or even 49 per cent, for they will do anything even to cut it down 1 per cent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I should very greatly regret if anyone should draw the conclusion from the remarks of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that there has been on the part of anyone on the Democratic side of the House any breaking of faith, any violation of any agreement.

I do not suppose the gentleman from Wyoming meant to intimate that, but some Members upon my own side wondered just what some of his words might mean. If they meant to intimate such a thing as that, it was unworthy of the gentleman. There has been no shadow of violation. I have said to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] from the beginning of discussion about the matter that in so far as it lay within my power I would endeavor to prevent any objection upon this, the Democratic side of the Chamber to this particular bill being sent to conference by unanimous consent, and there was no objection to it being sent to conference by unanimous consent. It is there now. All that we Democrats did was to exercise unquestioned and unquestionable rights under the rules of the House, with which surely gentlemen on the Republican side are familiar—some of you, at least—to move to instruct the conferees—

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman make that statement with the reservation in his mind that if some gentleman failed to say the two words—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me say this, if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] had put his request so as to include the words "without instructions," then I can say to the gentleman that it would have been objected to. That would have wholly changed the parliamentary situation. I never would have consented to cut off the right of this House to instruct the conferees, and if you had endeavored by a special rule to have cut them off you would have had one of the liveliest scraps that you have had for many days in this House.

Mr. Speaker. I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order it is not in order to move to lay the previous question on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] moves to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] on the table.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is that the motion for the previous question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House if an amendment to a pending bill is laid on the table, the precedents say it carries with it the principal question, and carries the bill to the table. My inquiry is, This being a motion to instruct, does that same principle obtain?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the view of the Chair this is an independent motion operating only on those who shall be made the managers on the part of the House, as a guide for their action, and while it may limit the freedom of action on the part of the conferees, it is not directly and intimately related to the bill which has been sent to conference, in such a manner, as in the opinion of the Chair, would carry the bill to the table. When a motion to reconsider the vote by which a bill is passed is laid on the table it does not carry the bill to the table, and this would seem to be an independent motion of a character which if tabled does not carry with it a bill to which it is related.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming does not take precedence over the motion for the previous question at this time. I am aware of the fact that the general rule provides the order when questions are under debate in which motions shall be in order, to wit, adjourn, to lay on the table, and the previous question. The rule says such questions shall be determined without debate. At the time the gentleman made that motion this matter was not under debate. Debate had concluded, and I had moved the previous question. It seems to me we would have to dispose of that proposition first under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wyoming desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not desire to take the time of the Chair. I think the matter is perfectly clear. I do not think there is any question about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the same question arose on June 17, 1909, when Mr. Speaker CANNON ruled that at the close of an hour's debate, the previous question being moved, the Member moving it thereby yielded the floor, and then a Member had the right under the rules to make the preferential motion, the motion to lay the resolution on the table, the same right that he would have had if he had moved to adjourn, and that the motion to lay upon the table takes precedence over the motion for the previous question.

The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. The question is upon the motion to lay the motion to instruct the conferees on the table.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 200, nays 133, answered "present" 3, not voting 96, as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota with Mr. RAINY of Illinois.
Mr. HOGAN with Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.
Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening when his name was called?

Mr. IRELAND. I am unable to say positively whether I was here when my name was reached or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not qualify unless he can say he was here when his name was reached.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. STEENERSON. I stepped just outside, right here at the door.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present in the Hall listening when his name was called?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. They were on the "Ls" when I came in, right on my name. I did not hear my name called, but I was right here, and I suppose it was called, but I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LARSEN of Georgia, and he answered "nay."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I am paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. I wish to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," but I recall that I had agreed to pair with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]. Therefore I wish to change my vote from "nay" to "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. FORDNEY, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. LONGWORTH, Mr. GARNER, and Mr. COLLIER.

Mr. WALSH resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. FLOOD, for three days, on account of important business.

EMERGENCY TARIFF BILL.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 8643) to extend the tariff act approved May 27, 1921, known as the emergency tariff bill, be taken from the Speaker's table and that the Senate amendment be agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan calls from the Speaker's table the bill, of which the Clerk will report the title, and moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8643) to extend the tariff act approved May 27, 1921.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to ask what the Senate amendment is.

Mr. FORDNEY. The Senate amendment is very short. The House limited the time of this emergency tariff bill to February 1. The Senate has stricken out that limitation, and therefore, with the Senate amendment agreed to, the bill remains in force and effect until repealed or superseded by the regular tariff bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In other words, you are making permanent law out of what was an emergency bill, until it is repealed or until the regular tariff bill takes its place.

Mr. FORDNEY. There will be a provision in the regular tariff bill to substitute rates in that bill for the rates provided for in the emergency tariff bill—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When that passes. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORDNEY. When that passes.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman think this will facilitate the passage of the regular tariff bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. I hope so.

Mr. GARNER. I ask the gentleman if he thinks this will facilitate the passage of the regular tariff bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, ask me something easy. [Laughter.] I am in hopes, Mr. Speaker, that by agreeing to this amendment it will make it impossible for importers to fill our warehouses with foreign-made goods and hold them until an opportunity might be afforded by the fact that when the tariff bill is in conference and likely to pass in two or three days, in one or more days, time might elapse between the limitation of time here and the passage of the other bill and make it possible for men to flood this market with foreign goods now in bonded warehouses. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the measure before us deals with the so-called emergency tariff bill. We are proposing to extend that bill to the time when the emergency shall cease to exist through the passage of a permanent tariff bill. Therefore what we are doing to-day is a perfectly logical thing to do.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asked the question, "Will or will not the extension of the emergency tariff bill, as suggested, delay the passage of the permanent tariff law?"

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will permit, I did not ask that question.

Mr. MONDELL. What was the gentleman's question? I want to answer it if I can.

Mr. GARNER. I asked the gentleman from Michigan if he honestly believed that the passage of this emergency tariff bill will facilitate the passage of the permanent tariff bill, and he answered by saying, "Ask me something easy." [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. I will answer that question and say that in my opinion it will, and I will explain why it will. The warehouses of this country are filled with wool, dyestuffs of various sorts and kinds, and foreign-grown and foreign-produced commodities affected by this bill. It is to the interest of a great many people to have this period if possible, long or short, brief or otherwise, between the date when the emergency tariff no longer controls and before the permanent tariff bill becomes a law. Now, in another body it is the easiest thing in the world to delay action. That has been proven abundantly of late. There is no difficulty whatever in holding up a bill, holding up a conference report, indefinitely. There is a conference report now in the Senate that was agreed upon by the House some two months or more ago, that has not been agreed upon over there. How do we know that the same thing will not happen again?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Do I understand the gentleman to argue that we ought to adopt the Senate amendment simply because if we disagree and send it to conference the Senate will hold up the conference report?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no. I am sorry the gentleman from Tennessee did not give me his attention. I am answering the question of the gentleman from Texas, and giving reasons why the adoption of this amendment will expedite the passage of the permanent tariff bill. It will expedite it because it will remove from the minds and the hearts and the will and the purpose of a great many gentlemen a desire, an inclination, a determination to delay the final enactment of the permanent tariff bill in order to create a hiatus between the time when the temporary tariff law controls and the time when the permanent tariff bill becomes a law. Now, we have avoided all that, and by so doing we have removed the danger of obstructive tactics intended to be helpful to those who might want to import goods that are affected by the emergency tariff bill.

Further than that, those who are in favor of the emergency tariff are also in favor of a permanent tariff, and therefore the friends of the two measures are one and the same, and as they desire the temporary tariff, they desire the permanent tariff even more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield me three minutes more?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. While I am on my feet let me emphasize the fact that this country desires the speedy enactment of a permanent tariff law [applause], that the Republican membership of this House without an exception desire a speedy enactment of a permanent tariff law, that we have no patience with those either within or without our party—if there be any within—who are preaching the doctrine that this is not the time to enact a permanent tariff law. We are pledged to the American people for the speedy enactment of such a law. This House considered and passed such a law, and this House is as firm in its determination now, in its insistence now, as it ever has been, for the speedy enactment of such a law, and so far as our influence here goes it will be exerted at all times to speed the final enactment of the law which this House passed months ago. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were—ayes 119, noes 47.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors. The Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. Those in favor of concurring in the Senate amendment will, when their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 234, nays 93, answered "present" 2, not voting 103, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. DUPRE. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized to state that my colleagues, Mr. LAZARO and Mr. MARTIN, are unavoidably absent. If they were present, they would have voted "aye."

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendment was agreed to was laid on the table.

STANDARD HAMPERS AND BASKETS FOR FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7102) to fix standards for hampers, round-stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruit and vegetables, and for other purposes. Pending that motion I want to ask the gentleman from Arkansas if we can not agree on time for general debate. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] was recognized in opposition to the bill.

Mr. WINGO. I had just got the floor for an hour when we adjourned.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill shall not exceed two hours, including the time used by myself the other day when the bill was under consideration, one half of that time to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], the time already used for general debate to be included. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. VESTAL was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time and yield to my colleague, Mr. PARKS, such time as he may desire.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, a condition unique in the economic history of this country confronts us to-day. Not since the time when Coxey led his weary hosts across the country to camp under the shadow of the Capitol's dome has unemployment been so rife. At the time the unemployed gathered themselves together under his leadership factories were idle because their products sold on the market below the cost of production. But to-day, with millions of men idle, with some of the breadwinners of the Nation who recently wore the uniform of their country being sold like slaves in the market, the factories are running, the cost of raw material is ridiculously low, and yet the price of practically every article that is necessary to man's comfort is just a little less than it was during the war period. The wages of the laborer have gradually been forced down, until he is compelled to deny himself and family the comforts of life. There are two classes now whose condition is appalling. The farmers and cattle raisers can not sell their products for enough to pay the freight from the field and the ranch to the markets. The press of to-day carries a statement from the Secretary of Agriculture advising the farmers to use their corn for fuel because of its low price and the almost prohibitive price of coal. The profiteer has continued to force down the price of raw material and to maintain the high level of prices of the manufactured article. The producer of raw material, not being organized, is perfectly helpless and has sacrificed his products on a low market. Then, that the profits might continue to be as great as they have been during the past four years, a general cut in wages in every industry has been begun.

Chief among the profiteers are the great railroad systems of the United States. Backed and supported by the Federal Government and sympathized with by the Interstate Commerce Commission, they began an assault upon the wages of their employees while maintaining the high rates of transportation. A continued propaganda has been spread throughout the land by the railroads setting forth their pretended terrible financial condition in an effort to enlist the support of the general public in their campaign for higher rates to themselves and lower wages to their employees.

From time to time applications have been made to the Interstate Commerce Commission by shippers for reduced freight rates. Not only have they been refused but it is said that an application for a reduction in rates on a railroad owned by Henry Ford was refused by this commission. The power to regulate freight and passenger rates rests in the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the power to regulate the wages of the employees of the railroads rests with the United States Railroad Labor Board. Just why both rates and wages should not be handled by one board or commission I can not understand, unless it is to increase the number of men drawing salaries out of the Federal Treasury. A decrease of 12 per cent in the wages of railroad employees was granted by the Labor Board, effective July 1. No corresponding decrease was made in freight or passenger rates, and neither has there been a material decrease in the cost of living. The employees of the railroads, unlike the producers of raw material, were organized. Finally, that they might understand what to expect in the future and doubtless preparatory to adjusting themselves to the 12 per cent cut in their wages, the employees inquired of the railroads if an additional reduction was contemplated, or if the 12 per cent wage reduction would be final if accepted. The answer made to this inquiry was like a challenge; they were told that another decrease in wages would be applied for immediately, and then it was that a strike was ordered. This threatened strike of the railroad employees, that greatly alarmed but did not terrify the people of the country, has been averted, and the world has gone about its affairs again, forgetting, perhaps, what had passed, and careless of the cause that had precipitated it.

Organized labor has been condemned from one end of the country to the other for the order to strike. There was a general uneasiness felt all over the land. While I hold no brief for organized labor, yet I believe sincerely in fair play for him who toils and that a final judgment on any question should be rendered only after all the facts in the case have been fairly and impartially considered.

I come from a district where organized labor possesses little political power, and I have never asked and, so far as I know, I have never received the indorsement of organized labor. I do not desire the support of any organization if I must obtain it by being partial to its interests or unfair to any opposing interest, and I am sure no labor interest will ever expect or desire anything but a square deal from me.

Those who receive the least good and suffer the most from a general strike are neither the employers nor the employees, but are those we usually term "the public." It is not to be doubted that every business interest in existence suffers an irreparable loss when a strike comes, and, indeed, it seems strange to the outsider that both capital and labor can not recognize that the success of one depends upon the cooperation and honest service of the other.

As the danger of a strike is now passed no harm can come from a discussion of this question, but perhaps some good may be done if the facts are laid before the public.

It was not a refusal to accept a reduction of 12 per cent in wages that caused the strike order, but because the railroad executives informed the officers of the employees that in addition to the reduction of 12 per cent already ordered an application would soon be filed with the Labor Board for an additional reduction in wages. That this was an indiscreet and an unwise act at a time when the first reduction had not been accepted can not be disputed. In our haste to lay the blame upon somebody and to do something that will in the future take away the possibility of this danger returning, we have not carefully made a survey of existing conditions.

It has been said—and I presume it is true—that the employees of the railroads are among the highest paid men anywhere to-day. Looking back across the years to the beginning of the life of organized labor and the day of starvation wages, what do we find? Without organized labor, without their battle for a fair and just wage and reasonable hours of work, what would have been the condition of labor to-day? It was only at the command of the Congress of the United States that the railroads equipped their trains with safety appliances for the protection of the lives and the limbs of those who drive the locomotive, set the brakes, or direct the train. I recall that again these men, seeking to earn their bread in the sweat of their faces—men who were free and not slaves—found it necessary to appeal to the lawmakers, and the Government once more stepped in and said that a man should not be required to work more than 16 hours a day; and then when the day of fast trains with the increased hazards incident thereto came, and with the terrible responsibilities of life and property in the hands of the employees, they again found it necessary to appeal to the Government to say what should be a day's work.

That sometimes the leaders of this great organization have not acted either to the interests of their constituents or to the people's I have no doubt. The fact that legislation has been enacted from time to time at the demand of organized labor; that it has been upheld by the highest courts of the States and of the United States, and is to-day accepted by the railroads, is some evidence of the justness of their contention.

The unions are perhaps less popular to-day than at any time in their history. This began, perhaps, when a general strike or walkout was ordered just before the war, and the press and the people from one end of the land to the other complained that it showed a lack of patriotic spirit to threaten this strike when we were about to engage in war. Every man recalls that up to that hour prices of all commodities and articles of trade had gone up from a hundred to a thousand per cent. Men who were in business of every kind had increased their prices in order to meet the high cost of living and in many instances had added a tremendous profit thereto—one has only to go to the returns made to the income-tax collector to know that this is true—while the man who worked for a fixed wage stood helplessly by and received the full force of the blow of high prices. It was then only that his demand for high wages and his threat of a strike came. Was it right or wrong? The Congress of the United States hastened to acknowledge the justness of the demand and passed the Adamson law, and it remains unchanged upon the statute book to-day. A Democratic Congress enacted the law and it was signed by a Democratic President. A Republican Congress and a Republican President have permitted it to stand.

While the laborer was gaining something and while the Government came to his aid in an effort to prevent poverty and want, it took care of the railroads and tucked them under the protecting wing of the United States Treasury. The history of Government operation of the railroads is too well known to need mention here, but out of all the wreck and destruction and turmoil of the war the railroads alone had behind them the United States Government, which practically guaranteed that no injury should come to them and they were permitted to increase their freight and passenger rates to such an extent as to almost destroy the traffic; and to this hour, with the wages of the employees already reduced, not one penny has been taken from the freight or passenger rates. When the peak of high prices was passed, when business was slowed down, when every business institution under the shining sun took stock of itself—charged off its losses and endeavored to begin anew—the railroads were the only concerns on earth that refused to take their losses along with the rest of us. Then Congress, looking away from the people, forgetting the taxpayer, poured into the coffers of the railroads multiplied millions of dollars of the people's money.

It now seems that the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the constant demand of the public and under the threat of a strike, has waked up and determined that it is time for it to act and has ordered a reduction in freight rates on some commodities in the West. A few short months ago, along with a great many farmers and their representatives, I attended a hearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission and there heard a member of the commission say that the railroads were operated at a loss and nothing could be done to remedy the terrible high freight rate that now exists, and indicated that the world was at the mercy of the railroads.

I have seen the fruit crop of my State almost a total loss to the grower because the freight rate was prohibitive; I saw the melon and vegetable crops confiscated by the railroads; and I appealed to this Government agency in vain.

The lumber industry, which is a great business in my State, giving employment to thousands of people, has been almost destroyed on account of the freight rates. It is estimated that there is a shortage to-day of a million and a half homes, and probably very many more. There are 30,000 sawmills competing for the lumber business and there is only a need for 20,000. Lumber has gone down until it is being sold almost at the cost of production. To-day it costs in freight alone nearly $600,000,000 a year to move the product of the sawmills from their yards to the place where the lumber is used. In fact, it costs as much to ship a carload of lumber to its destination as it does to manufacture that lumber and get it ready for shipment, and never in all the history of transportation have the railroads considered any other interests on earth but their own.

From the day the first piece of steel was laid until this hour, they have demanded all from the laborer that physical endurance and the laws of the land would permit; they have taken from the public every ounce of flesh they were able to extract; they have never yielded until they had fought every inch of the way and exhausted every remedy known to the law; they have demanded of communities rights of way, station sites, and bonuses; they have received from the hands of the Government enormous tracts of land to induce them to extend their lines, until to-day their properties are worth twenty billions of dollars.

As an evidence of the way in which the farmers have been pillaged and plundered by the railroad companies, the following was sent me by Mr. R. E. Woods, of the Blevins Board of Trade:

BLEVINS, ARK., September 11, 1921.

HOB. TILMAN B. PARKS, M. C.,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PARKS: The Blevins Board of Trade has instituted a campaign in behalf of the many truck growers residing along the line of the Prescott & Northwestern Railroad. During the past season the truck business was almost an entire failure in a financial way, owing to the fact that the freight rates were unbearable, and in many cases where cantaloupes and watermelons sold at fair prices in the markets of the North and East, after the freight and charges connected with transportation and marketing had been deducted, there was a deficit. In all of the shipments the freight rates this year have been prohibitive.

In addition to our efforts for the growers locally as stated above, we will cooperate with Hope, Horatio, Highland, and all points interested in the fruit and truck growing of Arkansas, and we hope to be able to show up this matter in its true state, and in so doing have the railroad refund the excessive charges on the 1921 crop and reduce the rate so that hereafter we may be able to market our products with a reasonable profit. Unless this is done the truck business is dead in Arkansas, and that would be a terrible fall to us.

During this season Imperial Valley and other truck-growing sections of the far West marketed their cantaloupes in the same markets with ours and at a profit. Ours sold at top prices all along and we lost money. They had a long railroad haul as compared with ours, and the reason is obvious—they had a reduced freight rate and in addition they received a bonus from the railroads. This is discrimination and we should be protected. Blevins is the center of the truck-growing region and we are asked to take the lead in this matter, which we have consented to do.

Please let us hear from you at once with your advice for procedure, setting it out as fully in detail as you are able to do without inconvenience. Also, we would like to know your feeling toward the move.

With kindest personal regards from the writer, we beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

R. E. Wood, Secretary.

The town of Blevins, in my home county, is in the center of a large fruit and truck growing area, and the following statement shows that a car of cantaloupes shipped by the Fruit and Truck Growers' Association brought a fancy price on the market, but after the freight was deducted the grower received only $38.17, while the price paid for the car of melons was $586.20; another car was shipped to Chicago and sold for $417, and after deducting the freight, commission, and loading the grower received $45.74; on a car of cantaloupes shipped to Cincinnati, which sold for $448.60, after deducting freight, commission, and loading the grower received $92.63; a shipment of peaches, containing 30 bushels, sold in St. Louis for $75, which was more than $2 a bushel, after paying the transportation charges the grower received $20.

The following shows the returns on car lot and express shipments of fruits and truck, with itemized account showing cost of transportation, commission charges, and net receipts to the grower:

SHIPPED TO PITTSBURGH, PA.

One car of cantaloupes shipped by the Hope Fruit & Truck Growers' Association, sold for	$586.20
Freight to Pittsburgh, Pa.	361.16

Net to grower	29.30

This is only one instance, but it shows, Mr. Chairman, what is happening everywhere.

But to get back to the question of wages. It must not be forgotten that the average employee of a railway company must spend years in the service before he finally reaches a position as responsible as that of conductor upon a freight or a passenger train, and almost every hour of these years must be spent in a place of danger. Yes; while you and I and the world are safely sleeping after a day's work, these men, who are so severely censured when they stand up for what they deem to be their rights, and even threaten to strike, must go out into the night and into the storm and rain, doing their part to keep the wheels of trade moving and to silence the howl of the wolf at the door. Shall we condemn the man for using the only weapon for his defense that he has?

As much, Mr. Chairman, as a strike discomforts and displeases me, I shall not condemn the railroad laborer until we furnish him a place where his claim can be heard, and not only a place where his claim can be heard but a tribunal that has the power to enforce its decision. We forget that his is not a life of safety and ease. How many go out from their families happy and strong who never come back again, or come back maimed and crippled for life! I never stand by the railroad track and see the great giant engines thunder by that I do not feel that the men who ride in the cabs are continually and heroically facing death in the service of their country.

Let us inquire if he is really overpaid under present conditions. The Labor Board has recently said that the average day's wage for all classes of railway employees is $4.54. Allowing nothing for sickness or vacations, taking out only the 4 Sabbath days a month, he works 26 days a month and earns $118.04, or $1,416.48 for a full year. Naturally, some deduction must be made for sickness. It is easily seen that this is not sufficient to supply a man of family with the necessities of life.

But that I may not misstate the case I will take the statement sent broadcast as propaganda by the Erie Railroad Co. showing the salaries of 20 of the highest paid classes, and the average monthly wage of these is only $186.79. But turning aside from a statement based upon averages, we will take a concrete case. I recently read a letter from one who had been a passenger conductor continuously for 24 years, and he prior to that time had for many years been serving his apprenticeship in preparation for the place he now holds. This is an excerpt from that letter. He writes:

We are paid $192 per month of 30 days—$6.40 per day, or 64 cents per hour, and 10 hours before any overtime accrues. My necessary expenses away from home amount to $50 per month. Some spend less than this and some more. Many runs compel a man to be away from home three-fourths of the time. We were willing to take the cut of July 1, but certainly can not take another one until the cost of living has gone down. My rent was raised $20 per month the last year; my shoes, that formerly cost $5, are now $10, $12, and $15, and not as good, either. Some groceries went down a little, but are now going up again. Gas, electric, and telephone service went up, as did street car fares. Before the war we were paid $162 per month of 26 days, extra for Sundays, and 15 days per year vacation. We have lost that and work a 30-day month instead of 26. We are expected to be diplomats and Chesterfields, as well as having a perfect knowledge of practical railroading, which we learn in a hard school.

But, Mr. Chairman, there are men in the employ of the railroads who are adding to the cost of operation of the roads much more than the ordinary wage earner, and they are receiving salaries entirely out of proportion to the services rendered. I refer to the officers and attorneys of the roads. Recently I inquired of the Interstate Commerce Commission for a list of the salaries paid by the principal roads, and I was referred to an official statement published by the United States Railroad Labor Board in 1917. Doubtless these salaries are in effect to-day, for nobody ever heard of reducing the salaries of the railroad presidents, general managers, and attorneys. From a list of attorneys and officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad I have selected 20 whose aggregate annual salaries reach the stupendous figure of $614,450, or an average yearly salary of $30,722.50 per man. It might be interesting to read a list of those persons in the employ of this road drawing a salary of $20,000 and up per annum. Listen to this:

Samuel S. Rea, president	$75,460
James J. Turner, vice president	40,620
W. W. Atterbury, vice president	40,000
W. Heyward Myers, vice president	35,200
Edward B. Taylor, vice president	31,235
G. L. Peck, vice president	30,030
George Dallas Dixon, vice president	30,000
D. T. McCabe, vice president	30,000
B. McKeen, vice president	25,020
W. Heyward Myers, vice president	25,000
J. M. Schoonmaker, vice president	25,000
Henry Tattall, vice president	25,000
James F. Fahnestock, treasurer	20,000
William Newell Bannard, special assistant to general manager	25,000
Thomas Rodd, chief engineer	21,080
Francis I. Gowen, general counsel	30,000
C. B. Heiseman, general counsel	20,000
Henderson & Burr, solicitors	29,700
Loech & Richards, solicitors	25,805
G. S. Patterson, general solicitor	30,000

Surely these gentlemen will not care to strike. They live like lords, and have not only the comforts but the useless luxuries of life.

President Harding receives $75,000 per annum as head of a great Nation of more than 100,000,000 people, and seems thoroughly satisfied with both his pay and his place. The president of the Pennsylvania Railroad draws an annual salary of $75,460. Is it any wonder that the Interstate Commerce Commission finds that the dear old poverty-stricken (?) railroads must still be allowed to plunder the American people in order that the higher-ups may live on the fat of the land and dwell in gilded palaces? From the same publication, I will submit another list of officers and attorneys of railroads who are receiving princely salaries at the expense of the outraged shippers and taxpayers. Do you think, Mr. Chairman, that the shipper who sold the car of cantaloupes for $586.20 and then paid $361.16 out of this amount for freight on the shipment feels that he is being fairly dealt with when he learns that part of his cantaloupes went to hire a $75,000 railroad president? Has the man who goes out to fight the battle of life from the top of a box car at $125 per month a right to complain that he is unfairly dealt with when he knows that a general attorney for the same road rides in a Pullman car on a salary of $55,000 a year? And what about the cost of living? Does the instance cited by me of the shipper in my home county not show where the greatest item of cost is?

Here I have a list of the salaries paid to the officers and attorneys of the principal trunk-line railroads of this country. It can scarcely be believed, but here it is. Does this add materially to the expense of operating the roads, and how does it affect the cost of living?

Mr. Chairman, the business of this country and the property of its people should not be destroyed. A strike ought never to be necessary. I do not believe that Congress should sit by year after year and see these conditions growing worse and propose no remedy. The Interstate Commerce Commission, instead of resolving all the doubts in favor of the railroads, should compel the railroads to reduce both freight and passenger rates to the point where they will return only a reasonable profit. Not until then should the United States Railroad Labor Board reduce the wages of the employees, and then only to that figure where they will receive a fair price for their labor. But I contend, Mr. Chairman, they should begin first with the presidents, attorneys, general managers, and other officers who are drawing princely salaries, and not with the section foreman, the car knocker, and the brakeman. Let Congress lay its restraining hand upon the throats of the profiteers and compel them to pay the expense of the Government. Until this is done I shall not condemn the laborer who strikes in self-defense, and I shall continue to demand that the railroads give to the public and the employee a square deal.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I feel that candor compels me to say that the committee has considerably improved this bill. Since they first offered it, some Congresses ago, they have whittled out many objectionable features, and have got it, with one exception, about as unobjectionable as it could be aside from the power of Congress to pass such a bill. Under the five-minute rule some gentleman will call attention to one provision which I think will be objectionable in the bill, even from the standpoint of the proponents. I am against the whole proposition, but I am always willing, in my humble way, to do anything I can to carry out the express intentions of the framers along the least objectionable lines.

Of course, the real objection is that you are not doing what you claim. I want to help you eradicate the evils that you name in your argument, but I do not approve of the method which you use. I believe under the Constitution we have no authority whatever to pass a bill of this kind.

Under the Constitution we can only fix the standard of weights and measures. Now, the constitutional authority to fix the standard weight measure does not give us authority to undertake to fix the shape or color or texture or the form of a container. We can fix the standard either of weights or measure, and in this instance it would be measure. If we could do what you propose in this bill you could say that all yardsticks should be made of iron. You could go beyond fixing 36 inches for a yard and say that the standard yardstick should be made of iron. A good many arguments could be made against using the tape measure of cloth and say that it stretches and therefore some one might be defrauded. You can always make an argument of that kind when you are seeking to eradicate an evil. Now, there has been a good deal of complaint about fraudulent containers. I do not object to fixing a standard of measure for these things, but I do object to your undertaking to say that a container shall not be used unless it be of a certain texture or shape or size. If you want to fix the measure, all right. Then, if you once fix the measure, and if I sell you something, claiming it contains so many units of that measure when it does not contain that many units, I have violated the law of every State in the Union, and if you want to undertake under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution to bar from interstate commerce things that are used as a basis and the vehicle for fraud, you can do that; but to undertake to say by Federal authority that a man shall not sell things referred to in this bill in a three-quart basket—I think you bar three quarts, do you not?—is going beyond your authority. Let me show you the difficulty you will get into. For illustration, the chairman of the committee had here on the last day when we had this bill under consideration certain photographs; I wish he had them here now. Under one law that we have passed under the gentleman's able leadership we fixed the standard for small fruits, and as I recall that it was fixed at 1, 3, and 4 quart containers.

Mr. VESTAL. One, two, four, six, eight, and twelve.

Mr. WINGO. For strawberries, 1, 2, 4, 6, and 8. Now for this bill for grapes, what have you?

Mr. VESTAL. It runs up to 12.

Mr. WINGO. You have a 1-quart measure?

Mr. VESTAL. No.

Mr. WINGO. A three?

Mr. VESTAL. No.

Mr. WINGO. A four?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Very well. The small producer of fruits or of berries might have a possible waste. Let me show you where you will get into other evils whenever you start doing things in a wrong way. Let us say there is a berry grower—and I know one; I have him in mind now—who, in addition to his berries, also grows grapes. In the berry season, earlier in the year, we will say that he buys a certain quantity of berry containers, but does not use them. Later, if he happens to use them for his grapes in the fall, even though he sells them to a local store and that local store retails them in that same township, not even across the State line, he violates the law under this bill.

Mr. VESTAL. Oh, no.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes; he does if he sells them in that sort of a container, because you prohibit sales, do you not, in other than a standard container? Do you prohibit the manufacture of other than standard containers for grapes? In other words, it may be lawful to make a one-sized basket if you say you are making it for berries, but it is unlawful if you are making it for grapes.

Mr. VESTAL. Oh, no.

Mr. WINGO. If that is not true, then your bill does not clearly express in the English language what your intent is. What different standards do you make in the quart unit for grapes and the quart unit for berries?

Mr. VESTAL. Absolutely none.

Mr. WINGO. What is the difference in the container?

Mr. VESTAL. There would be no violation of the law if you use this standard container; I do not care whether you put grapes in it or berries in it or whatever you may put in it, so long as the standard container is used.

Mr. WINGO. Under this bill you do not provide a 2-quart standard container for grapes?

Mr. VESTAL. Certainly not.

Mr. WINGO. And you make it unlawful to use any other than a standard container for grapes. So if a berry man who under one law may use a certain kind of container for one fruit should use it for another he violates the law.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Without any law the gentleman can go down to the market and see that naturally there is an evolution in the container for grapes, that there is naturally an evolution for a bag of flour. This is only intended by law to meet the evolutionary process that is going on.

Mr. WINGO. That is a new excuse that is offered for it. You are willing to violate the Constitution in order to help along the progressive development of the Darwinian theory of evolution as applied to containers. [Laughter.] That is a new argument.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Does it not occur to the gentleman that this bill, the whole structure of it, will have the effect of putting out of business the average farmer, the ordinary farmer, the fellow with a little dab of this and a little dab of that who brings it to town and sells it, and that it is in the interest of the big fellows, who are well organized, who have their great vineyards, their great peach orchards, their great orange orchards, and all that sort of thing—to give these well-organized fellows an advantage and to kick out of the way the little fellows, the ordinary farmers?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, with his usual astuteness, has discovered the real object of the bill.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I can not yield now.

Mr. LAYTON. I simply want to say that the farmers in the gentleman's district can go and carry whatever they please in a horse cart.

Mr. WINGO. I know that. That is the inherent right of the farmer, but if you pass this bill, if he puts up his fruit in other than standard containers and puts the fruit on the market, you can hale him before one of these great moguls called a Federal judge, and you only have to talk about taking the average small grape grower before a Federal judge in order to scare him so that he will be ready almost to quit growing grapes. It is the same old proposition. Every lawyer knows that if the farmer or anyone else by means of a false device, by misleading language, or by any other misrepresentation, sells you something supposed to be different from what you get there is a law to reach him without Congress enacting one. You have already a pure food law and a branding law and a law for this, that, and the other. If you want to make it fraudulent to use a deceptive container, that is a different proposition. I see my good-natured lawyer friend over here, and he will recall that they actually brought a bill into this House in which they undertook to determine the number of splits, the thickness of the splits, and in this bill you name the material.

Mr. Chairman, of course, you are going to pass it. The country has gone crazy on having the Federal Government regulate everything from the picking of berries to the birth of children, and sooner or later, as I suggested once before on this floor, some fool will come along and ask Congress to regulate the period of gestation and suspend the law of gravity. I made that statement once and I was flooded with some of the most learned dissertations by philosophical gentlemen, saying it was perfectly feasible to regulate the period of gestation, saying that the Greeks did it and that it would improve the human race. And one went so far as to express the hope that I would forget my bourbon democracy and bring Congress around to the necessity of improving the breed of men by fixing a standard by law and killing off all who do not conform to the standard.

When you throw the Constitution to the wind, when you say you are going to set up machinery to regulate everything—

Mr. LAYTON. Did you throw the Constitution to the wind when you established a dollar with so many grains of gold in it or a bushel basket with so many cubic inches in it?

Mr. WINGO. You are not trying to do that. If you want to say that a standard bushel basket for grapes shall contain so many cubic inches and fix that as a standard, all right; but whenever you undertake to say it shall have a certain shape and of a certain material you go beyond your power, however good the ends you seek.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I yield myself three minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LAYTON. I do not want to usurp the privileges of the chairman of this committee—

Mr. WINGO. Please do not usurp mine, either.

Mr. LAYTON. Or yours, either. I understand the bill is based on established quantities.

Mr. WINGO. I will be perfectly frank. The gentleman has never yet caught, and I could not in an hour's time make him understand, my fundamental objection to the bill, because it is a constitutional objection.

Mr. LAYTON. I know more about packages and the manufacture of packages than the gentleman ever dreamed of.

Mr. WINGO. That is right. I say that. But the gentleman's knowledge of the law is in inverse ratio to his knowledge as a packer.

Mr. LAYTON. I am a constitutionalist.

Mr. WINGO. You should be, because you have violated its theories often enough to acquire some knowledge of it, but it seems you have not.

Gentlemen, I do not want to take any more time. Eradicate these evils in a proper way, but do not undertake to fix the shape and material of the containers under a pretense of fixing a standard of weights and measures.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am opposed to this bill for the reasons that have been assigned by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO]. I shall take occasion to give them more fully when I move to amend it in certain particulars under the five-minute rule. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of this committee to one thing he has in here which he admitted before was improper. The bill heretofore provided for the material out of which the baskets should be made. By common consent that went out because that was beyond the power of Congress. Now, by a provision in this bill they provide that the Secretary of Agriculture can prescribe the material which may be used in the basket. I see that the chairman shakes his head. When we come to that I will show it to him. We are just merely conferring on or delegating a power to the Secretary of Agriculture which we ourselves have not got.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I can not yield now.

There is another provision in here which is vicious, and that says that this shall be confined to wooden baskets. Now, what are you going to do with a fellow who has wire baskets? Are you legislating for the benefit of the wire-basket people, or for whom are you legislating? Under the right to establish standards of weights and measures can you establish the texture of the vessel in which the material is carried?

I want to talk for a while about this question of armaments. The disarmament conference which has been called here everybody knows is for the purpose not merely of reducing armaments, because that is impossible unless something else is done; but it must, if it succeeds, have a basis which will make improbable or, at least, less probable wars between the nations of the world. There is no necessity for it unless that is the case. You can not induce nations to reduce their armaments unless you reduce the probabilities of war.

Now, there are five causes that have been universal causes of war in the past:

First, you have the rights of a sovereign or of a group of people in a nation to plunge a nation into war for their own ambitious purposes without the people's permission, without any discussion, without any proper consideration by the nation of the reasons for the war. And that has been a fruitful source of it.

Second, you have the heartburning suspicions and jealousies which grow out of secret diplomacy and secret arrangements between nations, which has been another fruitful source of war, and which has been illustrated by the great controversy that has been going on about the alliance between Japan and England.

Those are two of the sources of war.

Third, then you have the enormous profit that has been made and is made always out of the manufacture of munitions of war. Those profits are always in the hands of very rich people who control the press, who control the public opinion through the press, and foment troubles between nations, who suggest trouble between nations in order to bring up a cloud of war, and the result is a tremendous sale of the most profitable manufacture that the world has ever seen.

Fourth, then you have the greed for territory, one nation undertaking to take the land of another nation, and that has also been a wonderfully fruitful source of war.

Fifth, and finally, you have the enormous armaments which men build up, which sovereigns, which nations, build up, and when they get to a large size there is always a heartburning among the people on account of the expense of them, and in order to prevent the uprising of the people and the smashing of a Government because of the expense of the great armaments they begin to try them out; they drive the people, the nations, into war in order to use the great armaments which they have created.

Now, how are you going to do it? We had a proposition which involved the correction of those things in the League of Nations, but it had this provision, that the nations all agreed to see that that was enforced; in other words, that armaments were to be reduced; that the nations of the earth were to take over the manufacture of the munitions of war; that the territorial integrity of every nation as it was should be guaranteed; and that secret diplomacy should be uprooted and no treaty should be binding that was not reported in a public place, and that no nation should go to war until there had been six months at least for consideration and the submission of complaints to certain tribunals before war was declared. Those things were all provided for. They have been rejected by the American people, and they have been rejected because the claim was made that they infringed upon our sovereignty.

Now, do you think that the nations can come together and have an agreement that they will not go to war, that they will reduce armaments, unless there is some agreement as to the removal of these causes of war? Will France enter in unless there is an agreement to guarantee France against the incursion of the German nation whenever it becomes sufficiently powerful and attempts to take Alsace-Lorraine? Will Italy or any of the other great nations go in unless there is some agreement that their territory shall be preserved? If they will not, you will have nothing done.

Oh, it has been said, and the Washington Post said a day or two ago, that it required either a treaty, a covenant, or an agreement to bring about a reduction of armaments. Suppose you make agreements without anything to enforce them, without any power or any arrangement amongst the nations to enforce them. What will be the effect of it? Can America afford to sit down with a mere agreement, without any cooperation amongst the nations? We can come as near it as anybody, but can we afford to reduce our armament to the point where we would not be prepared to defend our coasts? Have we the right as a nation to abrogate the power to protect our coasts and our commerce unless there is a general agreement that any nation that breaks the agreement shall be coerced into returning to a respect for the agreement?

I submit that it is impossible, and therefore if the present disarmament is to effect anything, it must agree on some program whereby the five things that I have stated must be corrected, and especially the manufacture of the munitions of war and the incursions upon the territory of others; those two shall be guaranteed against.

"Well," you say, "but if we had that, we will infringe our sovereignty." Let us look at that for a minute. Take the case of aggressions upon territory. Here is a nation that has certain territory; another nation claims it. There is a dispute about it. We have provided a great court of international justice to which to submit that dispute. If that is submitted to a court of international justice and it decides that one nation is entitled to it and that another is not, are the nations to be allowed to disregard it?

Now, you say if one of the nations disregards it and you coerce it into regarding it, then you have degraded its sovereignty. I say you are mistaken. It is a question which should be a question of law and fact. The nations have agreed to leave it to a great tribunal to determine the facts and the law, and when they have done so that determines the right, and the nation that yields to the decision as to what is right and what is wrong is not destroying its sovereignty, but it is demonstrating its regard for international law, international justice, and international righteousness. That is the situation as to that.

Well, are we in any way likely to get anything out of this conference? If we stand on the position taken by a good many newspapers of this country and a good many of the statesmen, that we can agree to disarm, but that it must be entirely a matter of voluntary acquiescence, and that there must be nothing binding that we can not disregard, you have gotten nowhere. You will have no agreement that is enforceable. If you do not agree for the Governments to take over the manufacture of the munitions of war, the Governments will say,

"Well, we are not manufacturing munitions of war; the manufacturers are manufacturing them"; and the manufacturers, who expect enormous profits whenever a war cloud arises from the sale of their enormously profitable wares, will continue to manufacture, and will continue through the press and through their emissaries to foment troubles and bring about war clouds annually and perennially, as they have done ever since I can remember.

There will have to be an agreement, and there will have to be some way of enforcing that agreement, to take over the manufacture of munitions, and also to protect the territorial integrity of the nations of the world, or you will never have any agreement which will amount to a sufficient warrant for any nation to reduce its armaments as they stand to-day. The United States could not afford to do it, and neither can the other nations of the world afford to do it.

Well, they say that proposition means that we will have to go into war. Now let us see about that. Panama and Costa Rica arbitrated their territorial dispute some time ago. When Costa Rica undertook to take possession in accordance with the decree, Panama resisted and war began. Did we get into war? You say we should not interfere with other nations. Mr. Hughes sent a telegram down there stating that if Panama continued in her course in disregarding the findings of the court of arbitration it would be considered by the United States as an unfriendly act, and intimated that force would be applied. Did we have to apply any force? No; she got out at once. There is no escaping the fact that when the powerful nations of the earth agree that they will have disputes between nations settled by a great international court such as has been established, and that when they are settled the nations must conform to them, not a nation in the world will attempt to lift its puny arm against the combined public opinion of the world, to say nothing else.

Not only that, but when you come to the proposition of enforcement, the nations of the earth can get together and make an agreement, and they should do so, and they did so at Paris, an agreement whereby a nation that refuses to abide by right and justice and by the decisions of properly constituted tribunals will be the object of a trade and commerce boycott by the other nations which will forever and a day stop any nation from undertaking to override the decision of a proper judicial tribunal to which its controversy has been submitted and where it has been decided. In other words, there is not a nation on earth that can afford to have the doors of its commerce shut up against the balance of the world.

The United States of America has been paralyzed in the last 12 or 14 months by reason of the inability of the balance of the world to buy from it. Suppose there had been an absolute shutdown of our commerce by an embargo by all the nations of the earth. The most self-sustaining and self-supporting nation, greatest in resources and in ability to live upon itself, could be thrown into commercial panic inside of 30 days if such a step as that was taken. Do you tell me that it would be necessary to have war to bring about the enforcement of the decrees of such a tribunal? I say no. I do not think the conclusion can be successfully controverted. That being the case, are we prepared to go to the point of agreeing that whenever nations fail to conform to an agreement which is made in this great conference which has been properly called, and which for a thousand years should be one of the landmarks of the progress of the Anglo-Saxon race and of the world; the other nations of the earth shall compel conformity to that agreement? If we are prepared to enter into an agreement of that kind, it is perfectly possible to enforce it by agreeing to stop the flow of commerce with any nation that violates the agreement.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. STEVENSON. To be sure.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman think of the propriety, while that soldier is lying in the Rotunda and all the world doing him homage, of our wrangling here about an apple-basket bill? I think we ought to adjourn.

Mr. STEVENSON. I heartily agree with the gentleman; but inasmuch as we were wrangling over an apple-basket bill I thought I would talk about a real, live question that concerns this country and all the world at this particular time as it never has before.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I assume that the gentleman is like the rest of the Democrats. We are not responsible for the program to-day. We are perfectly willing to adjourn right now.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; I will yield for a motion to adjourn and be glad to do so, so far as that is concerned, if the distinguished leader of the majority will make the motion.

There is just one other thing I want to say. The rock upon which disarmament will split, in my judgment, is the rock of money. The manufacturers of munitions of war, who have become fabulously rich, who have become so wealthy that they can not count their money, will see to it that this disarmament conference is a failure. But suppose it is not. Suppose they reach an agreement. An agreement which binds the United States will be a treaty. It will have to go to the Senate of the United States. If it comes to the point of taking over the manufacture of armaments in this country it will have to go to a Senate in which sits Mr. PENROSE, the great friend of the United States Steel Trust, that makes enormous sums of money out of the manufacture of armor plate and out of the manufacture of cannon material, and out of the thousand and one kinds of steel that go into munitions of war. Mr. PENROSE is a leader there. Mr. LONG is pretty friendly to that crowd, and Mr. DU PONT, Senator from Delaware, is head of the greatest manufacturing trust of munitions of war that there is in the world. Mr. WATSON of Indiana is credited with being a close friend of the United States Steel Corporation. These are all valiant leaders of the majority in the Senate. Will they allow any agreement to be ratified which will cut down the business of great and influential combinations to whom they are so friendly and who are so friendly to them on occasions of elections?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a question has been raised here by an old and very able Republican Member of the House. I do not see him present, but in order to give an opportunity to carry out his contention I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. VESTAL. I wish the gentleman would withhold that. Mr. WINGO. It so happens that two Democrats have talked to-day, and I do not care to have such a reference as that made in the Record and that we be held responsible for it. Get a quorum in here, or get the gentleman back here and let him apologize for injecting into a gentleman's speech a criticism for debating this particular bill on this occasion. We are not responsible for the program of the House, and I resent the suggestion that when Democrats speak a Republican should suggest that we are wrangling about something when we should be thinking about something else. This side would have gladly adjourned to-day, but it is the duty and prerogative of the majority to determine these questions of propriety as to adjournment. I insist on my point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think it is entirely proper and seemly that the House should at any time go on in a proper way with its business.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Wyoming was not present to hear the remarks of an old and experienced Republican Member of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. I agree with the gentleman from Arkansas that it is extraordinary that anyone should make the remark that I understand the gentleman says has been made, but if the gentlemen think that it would perhaps be well that we should not be in session to-day I am sure we are all willing to listen to a proper suggestion to that effect.

Mr. WINGO. May I say that I think it is proper. I have not seen occasion to criticize gentlemen for the program, and I regret that the matter was raised, especially by a Member of age and discretion. I think the objection would have been better if made in private to those responsible for the proceedings of the House. But the gentleman saw fit to interrupt the speech of the gentleman on this side, a very rude interruption, to say the least, and carried the implication that the gentlemen who were talking had no respect for the occasion.

Mr. MONDELL. A session of the House of Representatives is as honorable a procedure as I know of—

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. And I think it is entirely proper for the House on any week day to be in session when it has business to perform. But, Mr. Speaker, if there is anyone anywhere who thinks the House ought not to be in session to-day, I am sure the gentleman from Indiana will be glad to defer to any proper expression and to move that the committee rise and the House adjourn.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not the floor.

Mr. WINGO. I have the floor, and I will yield.

Mr. CROWTHER. I want to say that I do not think the gentleman from Wisconsin intended the slightest discourtesy to the gentleman who had the floor and was speaking, but it was on the general proposition that we were in session. I do not think he intended the slightest suggestion of impropriety on the part of the gentleman who was speaking.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH as Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7102, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the youngest soldier who made the supreme sacrifice in the last war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I make a similar request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, out of respect to the unknown soldier lying dead in the Rotunda, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, under its previous order, to 8 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m., Friday, November 11, 1921.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ACKERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7764) authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust certain accounts of certain diplomatic and consular officers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 466), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8701) granting a pension to Sarah R. McGrew, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 9085) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Nelsonville, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JACOWAY: A bill (H. R. 9086) establishing the Petit Jean National Park, in the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WOODYARD: A bill (H. R. 9087) to provide for the erection of a post-office building at Parkersburg, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HADLEY: A bill (H. R. 9088) to authorize the development of methods of preservation of west coast fishes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BENHAM: A bill (H. R. 9089) for the relief of John W. Perkins; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FREE: A bill (H. R. 9090) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth H. Burns; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 9091) granting a pension to Arthur Cox; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 9092) granting a pension to Malinda Morris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9093) granting a pension to Minerva Jackson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9094) granting a pension to Samuel E. Acuff; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH: A bill (H. R. 9095) granting a pension to Charles W. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 9096) granting a pension to Elizabeth Mills; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLPP: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 222) authorizing the President of the United States to amend the discharge certificate issued Ramon B. Harrison, formerly captain, Infantry, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2991. By Mr. BLAND of Virginia: Petition of the Retail Druggists' Association of Elizabeth City County, Va.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2992. By Mr. CULLEN: Resolutions adopted by the Brooklyn Bar Association, relative to a bill providing for the appointment of an additional judge in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3013. By Mr. VARE: Memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, asking for the repeal of the Adamson law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, November 11, 1921.

The Senate met at 8 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, the God of our fathers, our hope everlasting, we bow before Thee this morning with chastened feelings. A nation mourns before Thee. We recognize the solemn circumstances of the hour, the sanctities of this day, all that it brings to us of the past, and what it presents to us for the present hour and for the future. As we bow before the bier this morning of an unknown soldier we sympathize with the mothers throughout the land, so many of whom may be wondering whether it is their boy. And we ask, our Father, that the sweetest consolations of Thy grace may be ministered in every home where a great sacrifice has been made, and so help us to look out beyond the mere circumstances of death to the triumphs of victory, the possibilities of the future.

May Heaven's benediction rest upon our land, upon the President and both Houses of Congress, and all who have to do with the prosperity of the Nation. The Lord, our God, be with us in the midst of anxiety, in the presence of hope, and in the enthusiasm of victory. We ask through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

On request of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday last was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

OPENING OF DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is in receipt of a communication which the Secretary will read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Senators who will attend the first meeting of the Disarmament Conference at Memorial Hall, Seventeenth and D Streets, Saturday morning, will please be on hand not later than 10.15, as the doors will be closed at that hour. The doors open at 9.30. The meeting will be called to order at 10.30. Entrance by the north door on D Street. No tickets required.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts in what building the conference is to be held to-morrow morning? I did not catch the name of the building from the reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the Memorial D. A. R. Hall.

Mr. LODGE. The Hall of the Daughters of the American Revolution on Seventeenth and D Streets.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if tickets will be issued to Senators.

Mr. LODGE. No tickets will be required.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary has just read the statement to that effect.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I did not hear it read.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. In order that the Senate may proceed to the Rotunda to join in the procession to Arlington, I move that the Senate adjourn, the adjournment being under the previous order, until Monday at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock and 15 minutes a. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, November 14, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, November 11, 1921.

The House met at 8 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m.
The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, glory be to Thee in the highest heaven. Holy, holy is Thy name; and we the creatures of Thy mercy would offer at Thy footstool our psalms of praise and thanksgiving. We hail this day which commemorates the mission and message of Him whose name is Wonderful Counselor and the Prince of Peace. O, as He died to make men holy, let us labor to make them good. We bless Thee for this hour of sacred commemoration which makes our beloved country one in purpose, one in hope, and one in prayer with the millions of Thy children throughout the broad earth. In the name of the Father of men. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 16 minutes a. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until Monday, November 14, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SCOTT of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 9097) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Allen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VOLK: A bill (H. R. 9098) providing for the appointment of Stewart Blackman as first lieutenant, Regular United States Army, to take rank under the provisions of section 24a of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

3014. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition or memorial of Keasbey & Mattison Co., Ambler, Pa., U. S. A., protesting against present surtaxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3015. Also, petition or memorial of Stern Brothers, New York City, protesting against the American valuation plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3016. Also, petition or memorial of Jessie Isidor Straus, New York City, protesting against the American valuation plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3017. Also, petition or memorial of L. Swed & Co. (Inc.), New York City, protesting against the passage of the emergency tariff; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

MONDAY, November 14, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, in these days of rapidly making history and of such crucial significance to the world's welfare we turn our thoughts unto Thee, seeking for guidance in the presence of every problem and asking for strength to know what to do, and then gladly to do it. The Lord realize himself to those gathered in the great conference of the nations. May such results come from their deliberations that there may be had peace and good will to men in a better recognition of the highest claims of Thy government upon human government. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8643) to extend the tariff act approved May 27, 1921.

The message also announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate, and that Mr. FORDNEY, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. LONGWORTH, Mr. GARNER, and Mr. COLLIER were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7394) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Ironwood Bluff, in the county of Itawamba, Miss., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 513. An act granting a deed of quitclaim and release to J. L. Holmes of certain land in the town of Whitefield, Okla.;

S. 904. An act for the relief of Elijah C. Putman;

S. 1283. An act for the relief of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co.; the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co.; and the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co.;

S. 1408. An act authorizing the Rolph Navigation & Coal Co. to sue the United States to recover damages resulting from collisions;

S. 1894. An act to amend section 26 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs," etc.;

S. 2153. An act authorizing the owners of the steamship Texas to bring suit against the United States of America;

H. R. 8643. An act to extend the tariff act approved May 27, 1921; and

H. J. Res. 151. Joint resolution to provide that deferred grazing fees received prior to December 31, 1921, shall be considered as receipts of the fiscal year 1921.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	McNary	Shields
Ball	Harrison	Nelson	Shortridge
Borah	Hefflin	New	Simmous
Broussard	Johnson	Newberry	Smith
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Smoot
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Spencer
Caraway	Kendrick	Overman	Sutherland
Culberson	Kenyon	Owen	Swanson
Cummins	Keyes	Page	Townsend
Curtis	King	Penrose	Trammell
Dial	Ladd	Phipps	Wadsworth
Edge	La Follette	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	Lodge	Poinceter	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	McCumber	Pomerene	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Ransdell	Watson, Ga.
Gooding	McKinley	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
Hale	McLean	Sheppard	Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

MICHIGAN SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I desire to announce to the Senate that in the Ford-Newberry contest, after conference with the representatives of the minority who made the minority report, we intend to call that matter up in the Senate to-morrow on the assembling of the Senate. I hope the Senate this afternoon will agree to take a recess until to-morrow, so that the case may be called up when the Senate meets to-morrow.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief reply to what the Senator from Missouri has just said. We have, I think, both been eager to have this matter disposed of at the earliest possible time, but I am compelled to say that after conferring with some of the other Senators we have felt that perhaps there might not be sufficient time this week to present the arguments and to reach a vote.

Definite arrangements have been made by the special committee investigating the Haitian situation and the Santo Domingo question to leave Philadelphia on Saturday, and it will be necessary for us to leave here on Friday. That would only give Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and perhaps a part of Friday for the consideration of this contested matter. We have no objection to taking up the subject for discussion, but because of the enforced absence of some of us we would prefer to have a date fixed early in the next session, which is not very far off, when the final vote may be taken.

I think that perhaps during the afternoon there can be certain conferences between the majority members of the committee and the minority members looking to some agreement along that line.

Mr. SPENCER. I am sure the Senator from Ohio will bear me out in the statement that the understanding to take up the matter to-morrow was agreed upon by himself and myself. Doubtless something has intervened to change his previous opinion. The agreement was not on my part alone.

Mr. POMERENE. That is not quite accurate, as I recall the fact. It had been generally suggested that the matter would be taken up to-day. We learned on Saturday that the Senator from Missouri expected to call it up on Tuesday. I realize that this is a question of the very highest personal privilege and we have no desire whatever to unduly interfere with the matter, but there is going to be considerable discussion. There is a record of nearly 2,000 pages. I do not know how other Senators may feel about it, but I would never pass on any man's title to a seat in the Senate without reading the committee's record, which I have done twice.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. How many speeches on the subject will be made on the other side of the Chamber?

Mr. POMERENE. I am not able to say as to that now. There will be a goodly number of them, and I have understood that there will be a number of speeches made on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. So far as members of the committee are advised, there will not be very many speeches made on this side.

Mr. POMERENE. My information is that there will be a considerable number of speeches made on this side of the Chamber. I know the members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or at least three or four of them and perhaps five of them, will speak on the subject. There are other Senators on this side who I am advised will speak. I think it is a matter which deserves very full consideration before the final vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I apprehend that no one will desire to force the matter under consideration to a vote during the absence of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who has followed it with very great care since its inception. It seems quite unlikely that the debate will be brought to a close before the regular session in December. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if he can tell us now about when it is expected the committee will complete its work in Haiti and return?

Mr. POMERENE. I regret that the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] is not here this morning. He has more definite information on that subject than I have. In my judgment it is going to take four or five days at least in Haiti and perhaps that long in Santo Domingo to take the testimony. I may say I think without any impropriety that there is a good deal of conflicting testimony; and the Senator from Montana, with his very wide experience as a trial lawyer, knows that when we reach a situation such as that it is next to impossible to determine just how long it is going to take to have the testimony presented. My judgment is that we will be gone for perhaps three weeks. I know that it is my desire, and I am sure it is the desire of every member of that committee, to get back just as quickly as we can.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to suggest to Senators on the other side that probably there will be no difficulty about entering into an arrangement for a final vote very promptly on the return from Haiti of the Senator from Ohio. Considering the fact that the matter has been pending for two years, a delay now of three weeks will be of no serious consequence.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I have been of the opinion that if the subject is to be taken up to-morrow, and we sit to-morrow and to-morrow night for awhile, and on Wednesday and Wednesday night, we can give everyone an opportunity to express himself on the question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that, judging from the expressions of Senators on both sides, the hopes of the Senator in that respect can not possibly be realized. I think that there probably would be no difficulty whatever about securing an agreement for a vote in a matter of 3 weeks or 30 days from now on the return of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what is the necessity for having any discussion now if action on the subject is then to be postponed for three weeks?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. As the Senator in charge of the unfinished business I feel that I ought to say a word with regard to this situation. I have felt that a question which involves the right of a Senator to a seat in this body is not only of the highest importance but of the highest privilege, and I have said to the Senator in charge of the report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections that, in so far as I am concerned, I would be willing to give way for a reasonable time for the consideration of the case presented by the contest against the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY]. I can not, however, agree, so far as I can control, to give way for a long period of time, a time which would consume practically the remaining days of the session. I may not be able to control the matter, of course; but, so far as I am concerned, I want to be understood that if the Newberry case may be disposed of within a reasonable time I shall not bring forward the railroad bill after to-day until that case shall have been disposed of. I do not, however, want it understood that I am willing to allow it to consume the remainder of the present session. I think I ought to say so much in order to make myself thoroughly understood and to be consistent in what I shall hereafter endeavor to do.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not think any Senator will charge me with speaking at undue length on any subject before the Senate; I have not been in the habit of doing that, and I do not intend to do that in the present case, but I feel the necessity of full discussion of the matter. It so happens that I served in the Senate during the discussion of the Wisconsin case, involving Senator Stephenson's title to his seat, and during the second Lorimer case. Those cases were not disposed of in a day or two days or three days or four days; there was full discussion in both instances, and questions of fact as well as of law are just as much involved in the present case as they were in either of those two cases.

I am quite willing that the discussion shall go on; I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] will bear me out in the statement that both he and I have felt that the matter ought to be disposed of; but we have had the revenue measure before the Senate, and I think we were in agreement that it would not be right to interfere with the consideration of that bill.

The question comes on here at a time when the special Haitian committee is compelled to proceed with its investigation and leave the city now or else be absent during the early weeks of the next session. I think we can make some arrangement so as to have the discussion of the election case proceed now in part and agree to a vote early in the next session. If that is done, I believe it will solve the situation and will be reasonably satisfactory.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. Of course there must be ample opportunity for discussion upon both sides, and there can be no doubt on either side that there should be no curtailment of full and fair discussion. I would not even have brought the matter up this morning if I had not thought that the Senator from Ohio and myself were in perfect agreement as to proceeding with it to-morrow. I am very anxious to dispose of it. Not only the rights of the Senator whose seat is affected but the right of the State which he now represents are at stake. I recognize that the argument ought not to go on when the Senator from Ohio is out of the city or is away on congressional business in the island of Haiti, but I had hoped, and I still think, that if the Senator would be willing after recess to-night to take the case up to-morrow morning we should by Wednesday night find that the matter was close to a time when we could all agree as to when a vote would be taken. If, however, it should not so develop, if the debate should be much more protracted than anticipated, and if there should be those who want to be heard at greater length than I can now foresee, there could not be any objection to laying the matter over so as to allow ample opportunity for discussion.

Mr. POMERENE. I think—

Mr. SPENCER. Just one moment, if I may finish the sentence. But the Senator from Ohio will agree with me, I am sure, that to carry the matter over from this session to the next session would be alike unfair to the Senate, to the sitting junior Senator from Michigan, and to the State of Michigan.

If we can avoid such a contingency, I should be very glad to avoid it.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not want this case to be continued or to go on one day longer than is necessary; but I have a very distinct recollection of having been criticized very severely because, as was stated, I was unduly pressing this case for a hearing at different times. There seemed to be no special hurry in taking up this matter until it finally reached the stage of hearings, and then it was pressed, if not unduly pressed. I think that perhaps during the afternoon there can be certain conferences between members of the majority and members of the minority of the committee, and then we can agree upon some program.

PROSPECTIVE ADJOURNMENT OF SESSION.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to make a request; that is all.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator while he is on his feet apropos of the discussion which has just taken place. Some of us who live at quite a distance would be very glad if we could be enlightened as to whether or not there has been any discussion or conclusion as to the possibility or probability of adjourning the present extraordinary session.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not aware of any discussion of that subject here in the Senate. I know Members of the House are anxious—I say “anxious,” but, at any rate, such an expression has come to me—that a final adjournment of the extraordinary session of Congress be brought about on the day before Thanksgiving, which would give an interval of about 10 days before the meeting of the regular session on the first Monday in December. I think the House desires that some such course as that be followed, instead of having the usual recess at Christmas. That is what has been stated to me. I have not had any further talk with Mr. MONDELL, but that is the expression that came to me some days ago.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thank the Senator.

ADDRESSES OF PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY OF STATE (S. DOC. NO. 77).

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that the address of the President of the United States at the opening of the Conference on Limitation of Armaments on Saturday last and the address of the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, on the same occasion, together with a statement of some details as to the reduction or limitation of armaments proposed by Mr. Hughes in his address when he set forth the American proposal, may be printed in the RECORD and also as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The addresses referred to are as follows:

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AT THE OPENING OF THE CONFERENCE ON LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS AT WASHINGTON, NOVEMBER 12, 1921.

Mr. Secretary and members of the conference, ladies, and gentlemen, it is a great and happy privilege to bid the delegates to this conference a cordial welcome to the Capital of the United States of America. It is not only a satisfaction to greet you because we were lately participants in a common cause, in which shared sacrifices and sorrows and triumphs brought our nations more closely together, but it is gratifying to address you as the spokesmen for nations whose convictions and attending actions have so much to do with the weal or woe of all mankind.

It is not possible to overappraise the importance of such a conference. It is no unseemly boast, no disparagement of other nations which, though not represented, are held in highest respect, to declare that the conclusions of this body will have a signal influence on all human progress—on the fortunes of the world.

Here is a meeting, I can well believe, which is an earnest of the awakened conscience of twentieth century civilization. It is not a convention of remorse nor a session of sorrow. It is not the conference of victors to define terms of settlement. Nor is it a council of nations seeking to remake humankind. It is rather a coming together, from all parts of the earth, to apply the better attributes of mankind to minimize the faults in our international relationships.

Speaking as official sponsor for the invitation, I think I may say the call is not of the United States of America alone; it is rather the spoken word of a war-weary world, struggling for restoration, hungering and thirsting for better relationship; of humanity crying for relief and craving assurances of lasting peace.

It is easy to understand this world-wide aspiration. The glory of triumph, the rejoicing in achievement, the love of liberty, the devotion to country, the pangs of sorrow, the burdens of debt, the desolation of ruin—all these are appraised alike in all lands. Here in the United States we are but freshly turned from the burial of an unknown American soldier, when a Nation sorrowed while paying him tribute. Whether it was spoken or not, a hundred millions of our people were summarizing the inexcusable causes, the incalculable cost, the unspeakable sacrifices, and the unutterable sorrows, and there was the ever-impelling question: How can humanity justify or God forgive? Human hate demands no such toll; ambition and greed must be denied it. If misunderstanding must take the blame, then let us banish it, and let understanding rule and make good will regnant everywhere. All of us demand liberty and justice. There can not be one without the other, and they must be held the unquestioned possession of all peoples. Inherent rights are of God, and the tragedies of the world originate in their attempted denial. The world to-day is infringing their enjoyment by arming to defend or deny, when simple sanity calls for their recognition through common understanding.

Out of the cataclysm of the World War came new fellowships, new convictions, new aspirations. It is ours to make the most of them. A world staggering with debt needs its burden lifted. Humanity which has been shocked by wanton destruction would minimize the agencies of that destruction. Contemplating the measureless cost of war and the continuing burden of armament, all thoughtful peoples wish for real limitation of armament and would like war outlawed. In soberest reflection the world's hundreds of millions who pay in peace and die in war wish their statesmen to turn the expenditures for destruction into means of construction, aimed at a higher state for those who live and follow after.

It is not alone that the world can not readjust itself and cast aside the excess burdens without relief from the leaders of men. War has grown progressively cruel and more destructive from the first recorded conflict to this pregnant day, and the reverse order would more become our boasted civilization.

Gentlemen of the conference, the United States welcomes you with unselfish hands. We harbor no fears; we have no sordid ends to serve; we suspect no enemy; we contemplate or apprehend no conquests. Content with what we have, we seek nothing which is another's. We only wish to do with you that finer, nobler thing which no nation can do alone.

We wish to sit with you at the table of international understanding and good will. In good conscience we are eager to meet you frankly, and invite and offer cooperation. The world demands a sober contemplation of the existing order and the realization that there can be no cure without sacrifice, not by one of us, but by all of us.

I do not mean surrendered rights, or narrowed freedom, or denied aspirations, or ignored national necessities. Our Republic would no more ask for these than it would give. No pride need be humbled, no nationality submerged, but I would have a mergence of minds committing all of us to less preparation for war and more enjoyment of fortunate peace.

The higher hopes come of the spirit of our coming together. It is but just to recognize varying needs and peculiar positions. Nothing can be accomplished in disregard of national apprehensions. Rather, we should act together to remove the causes of apprehensions. This is not to be done in intrigue. Greater assurance is found in the exchanges of simple honesty and directness, among men resolved to accomplish as becomes leaders among nations, when civilization itself has come to its crucial test.

It is not to be challenged that government fails when the excess of its cost robs the people of the way to happiness and the opportunity to achieve. If the finer sentiments were not urging, the cold, hard facts of excessive cost and the eloquence of economics would urge us to reduce our armaments. If the concept of a better order does not appeal, then let us ponder the burden and the blight of continued competition.

It is not to be denied that the world has swung along throughout the ages without heeding this call from the kindlier hearts of men. But the same world never before was so tragically brought to realization of the utter futility of passion's sway when reason and conscience and fellowship point a nobler way.

I can speak officially only for our United States. Our hundred millions frankly want less of armament and none of war. Wholly free from guile, sure in our own minds that we harbor no unworthy designs, we accredit the world with the same good intent. So I welcome you, not alone in good will and high purpose, but with high faith.

We are met for a service to mankind. In all simplicity, in all honesty and all honor, there may be written here the avowals of a world conscience refined by the consuming fires of war, and made more sensitive by the anxious aftermath. I hope for that understanding which will emphasize the guaranties of peace, and for commitments to less burdens and a better order which will tranquilize the world. In such an accomplishment there will be added glory to your flags and ours, and the rejoicing of mankind will make the transcending music of all succeeding time.

ADDRESS OF CHARLES E. HUGHES, SECRETARY OF STATE OF THE UNITED STATES AND AMERICAN COMMISSIONER TO THE CONFERENCE ON LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS, ON ASSUMING THE DUTIES OF PRESIDING OFFICER AT THE CONFERENCE, WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 12, 1921.

Gentlemen, it is with a deep sense of privilege and responsibility that I accept the honor you have conferred.

Permit me to express the most cordial appreciation of the assurances of friendly cooperation which have been generously expressed by the representatives of all the invited Governments. The earnest desire and purpose, manifested in every step in the approach to this meeting, that we should meet the reasonable expectation of a watching world by effective action suited to the opportunity is the best augury for the success of the conference.

The President invited the Governments of the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan to participate in a conference on the subject of limitation of armament, in connection with which Pacific and Far Eastern questions would also be discussed. It would have been most agreeable to the President to have invited all the powers to take part in this conference, but it was thought to be a time when other considerations should yield to the practical requirements of the existing exigency, and in this view the invitation was extended to the group known as the principal allied and associated powers, which, by reason of the conditions produced by the war, control in the main the armament of the world. The opportunity to limit armament lies within their grasp.

It was recognized, however, that the interests of other powers in the Far East made it appropriate that they should be invited to participate in the discussion of Pacific and Far Eastern problems, and, with the approval of the five powers, an invitation to take part in the discussion of those questions has been extended to Belgium, China, the Netherlands, and Portugal.

The inclusion of the proposal for the discussion of Pacific and Far Eastern questions was not for the purpose of embarrassing or delaying an agreement for limitation of armament, but rather to support that undertaking by availing ourselves of this meeting to endeavor to reach a common understanding as to the principles and policies to be followed in the Far East and thus greatly to diminish, and if possible wholly to remove, discernible sources of controversy. It is believed that by interchanges of views at this opportune time the Governments represented here may find a basis of accord and thus give expression to their desire to assure enduring friendship.

In the public discussions which have preceded the conference there have been apparently two competing views; one, that the consideration of armament should await the result of the discussion of Far Eastern questions, and another, that the latter discussion should be postponed until an agreement for limitation of armament has been reached. I am unable to find sufficient reason for adopting either of these extreme views. I think that it would be most unfortunate if we should disappoint the hopes which have attached to this meeting by a postponement of the consideration of the first subject. The world looks to this conference to relieve humanity of the crushing burden created by competition in armament, and it is the view of the American Government that we should meet that expectation without any unnecessary delay. It is therefore proposed that the conference should proceed at once to consider the question of the limitation of armament.

This, however, does not mean that we must postpone the examination of Far Eastern questions. These questions of vast importance press for solution. It is hoped that immediate provision may be made to deal with them adequately, and it is suggested that it may be found to be entirely practicable through the distribution of the work among designated committees to make progress to the ends sought to be achieved without either subject being treated as a hindrance to the proper consideration and disposition of the other.

The proposal to limit armament by an agreement of the powers is not a new one, and we are admonished by the futility of earlier efforts. It may be well to recall the noble aspirations which were voiced 23 years ago in the imperial rescript of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia. It was then pointed out with clarity and emphasis that "The intellectual and physical strength of the nations, labor, and capital are for the major part diverted from their natural application and unproductively consumed. Hundreds of millions are devoted to acquiring terrible engines of destruction, which, though to-day regarded as the last word of science, are destined to-morrow to lose all value in consequence of some fresh discovery in the same field. National culture, economic progress, and the production of wealth are either paralyzed or checked in their development. Moreover, in proportion as the armaments of each power increase, so do they less and less fulfill the object which the Governments have set before themselves. The economic crises, due in great part to the system of armaments a l'outrance and the continual danger which lies in this massing of war materials, are transforming the armed peace of our days into a crushing burden, which the peoples have more and more difficulty in bearing. It appears evident, then, that if this state of things were prolonged it would inevitably lead to the calamity which it is desired to avert, and the horrors of which make every thinking man shudder in advance. To put an end to these incessant armaments and to seek the means of warding off the calamities which are threatening the whole world—such is the supreme duty which is to-day imposed on all States."

It was with this sense of obligation that His Majesty the Emperor of Russia proposed the conference, which was "to occupy itself with this grave problem" and which met at The Hague in the year 1899. Important as were the deliberations and conclusions of that conference, especially with respect to the pacific settlement of international disputes, its result in the specific matter of limitation of armament went no further than the adoption of a final resolution setting forth the opinion "that the restriction of military charges, which are at present a heavy burden on the world, is extremely desirable for the increase of the material and moral welfare of mankind," and the utterance of the wish that the Governments "may examine the possibility of an agreement as to the limitation of armed forces by land and sea, and of war budgets."

It was seven years later that the Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. Elihu Root, in answering a note of the Russian ambassador suggesting in outline a program of the second peace conference, said: "The Government of the United States, therefore, feels it to be its duty to reserve for itself the liberty to propose to the second peace conference, as one of the subjects for consideration, the reduction or limitation of armaments, in the hope that, if nothing further can be accomplished, some slight advance may be made toward the realization of the lofty conception which actuated the Emperor of Russia in calling the first conference." It is significant that the Imperial German Government expressed itself as "absolutely opposed to the question of disarmament" and that the Emperor of Germany threatened to decline to send delegates if the subject of disarmament was to be discussed. In view, however, of the resolution which had been adopted at the first Hague conference the delegates of the United States were instructed that the subject of limitation of armament "should be regarded as unfinished business, and that the second conference should ascertain and give full consideration to the results of such examination as the Governments may have given to the possibility of an agreement pursuant to the wish expressed by the first conference." But by reason of the obstacles which the subject had encountered, the second peace conference at The Hague, although it made notable progress in provision for the peaceful settlement of controversies, was unable to deal with limitation of armament except by a resolution in the following general terms: "The conference confirms the resolution adopted by the conference of 1899 in regard to the limitation of military expenditure; and inasmuch as military expenditure has considerably increased in almost every country since that time, the conference declares that it is eminently desirable that the Governments should resume the serious examination of this question."

This was the fruition of the efforts of eight years. Although the effect was clearly perceived, the race in preparation of armament, wholly unaffected by these futile suggestions, went on until it fittingly culminated in the greatest war of history; and we are now suffering from the unparalleled loss of life, the destruction of hopes, the economic dislocations, and the widespread impoverishment which measure the cost of the victory over the brutal pretensions of military force.

But if we are warned by the inadequacy of earlier endeavors for limitation of armament, we can not fail to recognize the extraordinary opportunity now presented. We not only have the lessons of the past to guide us, not only do we have the reaction from the disillusioning experiences of war, but we must meet the challenge of imperative economic demands. What was convenient or highly desirable before is now a matter of vital necessity. If there is to be economic rehabilitation, if the longings for reasonable progress are not to be denied, if we are to be spared the uprisings of peoples made desperate in the desire to shake off burdens no longer endurable, competition in armament must stop. The present opportunity not only derives its advantage from a general appreciation of this fact, but the power to deal with the exigency now rests with a small group of nations, represented here, who have every reason to desire peace and to promote amity. The astounding ambition which lay athwart the promise of the second Hague conference no longer menaces the world, and the great opportunity of liberty-loving and peace-preserving democracies has come. Is it not plain that the time has passed for mere resolutions that the responsible powers should examine the question of limitation of armament? We can no longer content ourselves with investigations, with statistics, with reports, with the circumlocution of inquiry. The essential facts are sufficiently known. The time has come, and this conference has been called, not for general resolutions or mutual advice, but for action. We meet with full understanding that the aspirations of mankind are not to be defeated either by plausible suggestions of postponement or by impracticable counsels of perfection. Power and responsibility are here, and the world awaits a practicable program which shall at once be put into execution.

I am confident that I shall have your approval in suggesting that in this matter, as well as in others before the conference, it is desirable to follow the course of procedure which has the best promise of achievement rather than one which would facilitate division; and thus, constantly aiming to agree so far as possible, we shall, with each point of agreement, make it easier to proceed to others.

The question, in relation to armament, which may be regarded as of primary importance at this time, and with which we can deal most promptly and effectively, is the limitation of naval armament. There are certain general considerations which may be deemed pertinent to this subject.

The first is that the core of the difficulty is to be found in the competition in naval programs, and that, in order appropriately to limit naval armament, competition in its production must be abandoned. Competition will not be remedied by resolves with respect to the method of its continuance. One program inevitably leads to another, and if competition continues its regulation is impracticable. There is only one adequate way out and that is to end it now.

It is apparent that this can not be accomplished without serious sacrifices. Enormous sums have been expended upon ships under construction and building programs which are now under way can not be given up without heavy loss. Yet if the present construction of capital ships goes forward other ships will inevitably be built to rival them and this will lead to still others. Thus the race will continue so long as ability to continue lasts. The effort to escape sacrifices is futile. We must face them or yield our purpose.

It is also clear that no one of the naval powers should be expected to make these sacrifices alone. The only hope of limitation of naval armament is by agreement among the nations concerned, and this agreement should be entirely fair and reasonable in the extent of the sacrifices required of each of the powers. In considering the basis of such an agreement, and the commensurate sacrifices to be required, it is necessary to have regard to the existing naval strength of the great naval powers, including the extent of construction already effected in the case of ships in process. This follows from the fact that one nation is as free to compete as another, and each may find grounds for its action. What one may do another may demand the opportunity to rival, and we remain in the thrall of competitive effort. I may add that the American delegates are advised by their naval experts that the tonnage of capital ships may fairly be taken to measure the relative strength of navies, as the provision for auxiliary combatant craft should sustain a reasonable relation to the capital ship tonnage allowed.

It would also seem to be a vital part of a plan for the limitation of naval armament that there should be a naval holiday. It is proposed that for a period of not less than 10 years there should be no further construction of capital ships.

I am happy to say that I am at liberty to go beyond these general propositions, and on behalf of the American delegation, acting under the instructions of the President of the United States, to submit to you a concrete proposition for an agreement for the limitation of naval armament.

It should be added that this proposal immediately concerns the British Empire, Japan, and the United States. In view of the extraordinary conditions due to the World War affecting the existing strength of the navies of France and Italy, it is not thought to be necessary to discuss at this stage of the proceedings the tonnage allowance of these nations, but the United States proposes that this matter be reserved for the later consideration of the conference.

In making the present proposal the United States is most solicitous to deal with the question upon an entirely reasonable and practicable basis, to the end that the just interests of all shall be adequately guarded and that national security and defense shall be maintained. Four general principles have been applied:

- (1) That all capital-ship building programs, either actual or projected, should be abandoned;
- (2) That further reduction should be made through the scrapping of certain of the older ships;
- (3) That in general regard should be had to the existing naval strength of the powers concerned;
- (4) That the capital-ship tonnage should be used as the measurement of strength for navies and a proportionate allowance of auxiliary combatant craft prescribed.

The principal features of the proposed agreement are as follows:

CAPITAL SHIPS.

UNITED STATES.

The United States is now completing its program of 1916 calling for 10 new battleships and 6 battle cruisers. One battleship has been completed. The others are in various stages of construction; in some cases from 60 to over 80 per cent of the construction has been done. On these 15 capital ships now being built over $330,000,000 have been spent. Still the United States is willing in the interest of an immediate limitation of naval armament to scrap all these ships.

The United States proposes, if this plan is accepted—

- (1) To scrap all capital ships now under construction. This includes 6 battle cruisers and 7 battleships on the ways and in course of building, and 2 battleships launched.

The total number of new capital ships thus to be scrapped is 15. The total tonnage of the new capital ships when completed would be 618,000 tons.

- (2) To scrap all of the older battleships up to, but not including, the Delaware and North Dakota. The number of these old battleships to be scrapped is 15. Their total tonnage is 227,740 tons.

Thus the number of capital ships to be scrapped by the United States, if this plan is accepted, is 30, with an aggregate tonnage (including that of ships in construction, if completed) of 845,740 tons.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The plan contemplates that Great Britain and Japan shall take action which is fairly commensurate with this action on the part of the United States.

It is proposed that Great Britain—

- (1) Shall stop further construction on the four new Hoods, the new capital ships not laid down but upon which money has been spent. These four ships, if completed, would have tonnage displacement of 172,000 tons.

- (2) Shall, in addition, scrap her predreadnaughts, second line battleships, and first line battleships up to, but not including, the King George V class.

These, with certain predreadnaughts which it is understood have already been scrapped, would amount to 19 capital ships and a tonnage reduction of 411,375 tons.

The total tonnage of ships thus to be scrapped by Great Britain (including the tonnage of the four Hoods, if completed) would be 583,375 tons.

JAPAN.

It is proposed that Japan—

- (1) Shall abandon her program of ships not yet laid down, viz, the Kii, Owari, No. 7 and No. 8 battleships, and Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8 battle cruisers.

It should be observed that this does not involve the stopping of construction, as the construction of none of these ships has been begun.

- (2) Shall scrap 3 capital ships (the Matsu launched, the Tosa, and Kago in course of building) and four battle cruisers (the Amagi and Akagi in course of building, and the Atoga and Takao not yet laid down, but for which certain material has been assembled).

The total number of new capital ships to be scrapped under this paragraph is seven. The total tonnage of these new capital ships when completed would be 289,100 tons.

- (3) Shall scrap all predreadnaughts and battleships of the second line. This would include the scrapping of all ships up to, but not including, the Settsu; that is, the scrapping of 10 older ships, with a total tonnage of 159,828 tons.

The total reduction of tonnage on vessels existing, laid down, or for which material has been assembled (taking the tonnage of the new ships when completed), would be 448,928 tons.

Thus, under this plan there would be immediately destroyed, of the navies of the three powers, 66 capital fighting ships, built and building, with a total tonnage of 1,878,043.

It is proposed that it should be agreed by the United States, Great Britain, and Japan that their navies, with respect to capital ships, within three months after the making of the agreement shall consist of certain ships designated in the proposal and numbering for the United States 18, for Great Britain 22, for Japan 10.

The tonnage of these ships would be as follows: Of the United States, 500,650; of Great Britain, 604,450; of Japan, 299,700. In reaching this result, the age factor in the case of the respective navies has received appropriate consideration.

REPLACEMENT.

With respect to replacement, the United States proposes:

(1) That it be agreed that the first replacement tonnage shall not be laid down until 10 years from the date of the agreement;

(2) That replacement be limited by an agreed maximum of capital ship tonnage as follows:

	Tons.
For the United States	500,000
For Great Britain	500,000
For Japan	300,000

(3) That subject to the 10-year limitation above fixed and the maximum standard, capital ships may be replaced when they are 20 years old by new capital ship construction;

(4) That no capital ship shall be built in replacement with a tonnage displacement of more than 35,000 tons.

I have sketched the proposal only in outline, leaving the technical details to be supplied by the formal proposition which is ready for submission to the delegates.

The plan includes provision for the limitation of auxiliary combatant craft. This term embraces three classes; that is, (1) auxiliary surface combatant craft, such as cruisers (exclusive of battle cruisers), flotilla leaders, destroyers, and various surface types; (2) submarines; and (3) airplane carriers.

I shall not attempt to review the proposals for these various classes, as they bear a definite relation to the provisions for capital fighting ships.

With the acceptance of this plan the burden of meeting the demands of competition in naval armament will be lifted. Enormous sums will be released to aid the progress of civilization. At the same time the proper demands of national defense will be adequately met and the nations will have ample opportunity during the naval holiday of 10 years to consider their future course. Preparation for offensive naval war will stop now.

I shall not attempt at this time to take up the other topics which have been listed upon the tentative agenda proposed in anticipation of the conference.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT AT ARLINGTON (S. DOC. NO. 78).

Mr. LODGE. I also ask unanimous consent that the address of the President at Arlington on Friday may be printed in the RECORD and also as a document, separately from the other addresses which have just been ordered printed, as the address at Arlington is not connected immediately with the work of the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address of the President of the United States referred to is as follows:

ADDRESS AT THE BURIAL OF AN UNKNOWN AMERICAN SOLDIER, ARLINGTON CEMETERY, NOVEMBER 11, 1921.

Mr. Secretary of War and ladies and gentlemen, we are met to-day to pay the impersonal tribute. The name of him whose body lies before us took flight with his imperishable soul. We know not whence he came, but only that his death marks him with the everlasting glory of an American dying for his country.

He might have come from any one of millions of American homes. Some mother gave him in her love and tenderness, and with him her most cherished hopes. Hundreds of mothers are wondering to-day, finding a touch of solace in the possibility that the Nation bows in grief over the body of one she bore to live and die, if need be, for the Republic. If we give rein to fancy, a score of sympathetic chords are touched, for in this body there once glowed the soul of an American, with the aspirations and ambitions of a citizen who cherished life and its opportunities. He may have been a native or an adopted son; that matters little, because they glorified the same loyalty, they sacrificed alike.

We do not know his station in life, because from every station came the patriotic response of the five millions. I recall the days of creating armies, and the departing of caravels which braved the murderous seas to reach the battle lines for maintained nationality and preserved civilization. The service flag marked mansion and cottage alike, and riches were common to all homes in the consciousness of service to country.

We do not know the eminence of his birth, but we do know the glory of his death. He died for his country, and greater devotion hath no man than this. He died unquestioning, uncompaining, with faith in his heart and hope on his lips, that his country should triumph and its civilization survive. As a typical soldier of this representative democracy, he fought and died, believing in the indisputable justice of his country's cause. Conscious of the world's upheaval, appraising the magnitude of a war the like of which had never horrified humanity before, perhaps he believed his to be a service destined to change the tide of human affairs.

In the death gloom of gas, the bursting of shells and rain of bullets, men face more intimately the great God over all, their souls are aflame, and consciousness expands and hearts are searched. With the din of battle, the glow of conflict, and the supreme trial of courage, come involuntarily the hurried appraisal of life and the contemplation of death's great mystery. On the threshold of eternity, many a soldier, I can well believe, wondered how his ebbing blood would color the stream of human life, flowing on after his sacrifice. His patriotism was none less if he craved more than triumph of country; rather, it was greater if he hoped for a victory for all human kind. Indeed, I revere that citizen whose confidence in the righteousness of his country inspired belief that its triumph is the victory of humanity.

This American soldier went forth to battle with no hatred for any people in the world, but hating war and hating the purpose of every war for conquest. He cherished our national rights, and abhorred the threat of armed domination; and in the maelstrom of destruction and suffering and death he fired his shot for liberation of the captive conscience of the world. In advancing toward his objective was somewhere a thought of a world awakened; and we are here to testify undying gratitude and reverence for that thought of a wider freedom.

On such an occasion as this, amid such a scene, our thoughts alternate between defenders living and defenders dead. A grateful Republic will be worthy of them both. Our part is to atone for the losses of heroic dead by making a better Republic for the living.

Sleeping in these hallowed grounds are thousands of Americans who have given their blood for the baptism of freedom and its maintenance, armed exponents of the Nation's conscience. It is better and nobler for their deeds. Burial here is rather more than a sign of the Government's favor; it is a suggestion of a tomb in the heart of the Nation, sorrowing for its noble dead.

To-day's ceremonies proclaim that the hero unknown is not unhonored. We gather him to the Nation's breast, within the shadow of the Capitol, of the towering shaft that honors Washington, the great father, and of the exquisite monument to Lincoln, the martyred savior. Here the inspirations of yesterday and the conscience of to-day forever unite to make the Republic worthy of his death for flag and country.

Ours are lofty resolutions to-day, as with tribute to the dead we consecrate ourselves to a better order for the living. With all my heart, I wish we might say to the defenders who survive, to mothers who sorrow, to widows and children who mourn, that no such sacrifice shall be asked again.

It was my fortune recently to see a demonstration of modern warfare. It is no longer a conflict in chivalry, no more a test of militant manhood. It is only cruel, deliberate, scientific destruction. There was no contending enemy, only the theoretical defense of a hypothetical objective. But the attack was made with all the relentless methods of modern destruction. There was the rain of ruin from the aircraft, the thunder of artillery, followed by the unspeakable devastation wrought by bursting shells; there were mortars belching their bombs of desolation; machine guns concentrating their leaden storms; there was the infantry, advancing, firing, and falling—like men with souls sacrificing for the decision. The flying missiles were revealed by illuminating tracers, so that we could note their flight and appraise their deadliness. The air was streaked with tiny flames marking the flight of massed destruction; while the effectiveness of the theoretical defense was impressed by the simulation of dead and wounded among those going forward, undaunted and unheeding. As this panorama of unutterable destruction visualized the horrors of modern conflict, there grew on me the sense of the failure of a civilization which can leave its problems to such cruel arbitrament. Surely no one in authority, with human attributes and a full appraisal of the patriotic loyalty of his countrymen, could ask the manhood of kingdom, empire, or republic to make such sacrifice until all reason had failed, until appeal to justice through understanding had been denied, until every effort of love and consideration for fellow men had been exhausted, until freedom itself and inviolate honor had been brutally threatened.

I speak not as a pacifist fearing war, but as one who loves justice and hates war. I speak as one who believes the highest function of government is to give its citizens the security of peace, the opportunity to achieve, and the pursuit of happiness.

The loftiest tribute we can bestow to-day—the heroically earned tribute—fashioned in deliberate conviction, out of unclouded thought, neither shadowed by remorse nor made vain by fancies, is the commitment of this Republic to an advancement never made before. If American achievement is a cherished pride at home, if our unselfishness among nations is all we wish it to be, and ours is a helpful example in the world, then let us give of our influence and strength, yea, of our aspirations and convictions, to put mankind on a little higher plane, exulting and exalting, with war's distressing and depressing tragedies barred from the stage of righteous civilization.

There have been a thousand defenses justly and patriotically made; a thousand offenses which reason and righteousness ought to have stayed. Let us beseech all men to join us in seeking the rule under which reason and righteousness shall prevail.

Standing to-day on hallowed ground, conscious that all America has halted to share in the tribute of heart and mind and soul to this fellow American, and knowing that the world is noting this expression of the Republic's mindfulness, it is fitting to say that his sacrifice, and that of the millions dead, shall not be in vain. There must be, there shall be, the commanding voice of a conscious civilization against armed warfare.

As we return this poor clay to its mother soil, garlanded by love and covered with the decorations that only nations can bestow, I can sense the prayers of our people, of all peoples, that this Armistice Day shall mark the beginning of a new and lasting era of peace on earth, good will among men. Let me join in that prayer.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

LISTS OF AMERICAN SOLDIER DEAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Quartermaster General of the Army, transmitting lists of American soldier dead returned from overseas, to be reinterred in the Arlington National Cemetery, Thursday, November 17, 1921, at 2.30 p. m., which, with the accompanying lists, was ordered to lie on the table for the inspection of Senators.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a memorial of the national executive committee, Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion, of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 1565, making eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided for officers of the Regular Army all officers of the United States Army during the World War who have incurred physical disability in line of duty, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the Casper (Wyo.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring consideration by the American delegation to the disarmament conference of the broad question of chemical disarmament, and also inclusion in the permanent tariff bill for a limited period of a selective embargo against importation of synthetic organic chemicals, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Casper (Wyo.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the enactment of legislation authorizing the United States to enter into an agreement with the Dominion of Canada to build a deep-ship channel from the Great Lakes via the St. Lawrence to the sea, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented telegrams, letters, and communications in the nature of petitions, from the Community Church, of Salt Creek; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Hanna; the Adult and Win One Classes of the Methodist Sunday School, of Cheyenne; the union meeting held in Washakie County; and the First Baptist Church, of Casper, all in the State of Wyoming, praying for the enactment of the so-called Willis-Campbell antibeer bill and enforcement of the prohibition laws, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KENDRICK presented a petition of the Casper (Wyo.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring inclusion in the permanent tariff bill of a selective embargo for a limited period of years against importation of synthetic organic chemicals, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions signed by over 2,000 members of the student body of the University of Minnesota, praying for a prompt limitation of armament that may be real and definite, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McCUMBER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Elgin, N. Dak., favoring the limitation of armament and reduction of military and naval expenditures so as to decrease taxation, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Beatrice and Home City, Kans., praying that the Government of the United States recognize the Irish republic, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ELKINS presented a resolution adopted by the Keyser Auxiliary, Woman's Home Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church (Frederick district) of the Baltimore conference, at Keyser, W. Va., urging that the United States enter the disarmament conference wholeheartedly and unreservedly, favoring the greatest possible limitation of armament, and also favoring an open conference, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WILLIS presented a memorial of the Central Trades and Labor Council, of Zanesville, Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation weakening, destroying, subordinating, or amalgamating the activities of the United States Department of Labor, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. LADD presented resolutions adopted by the faculty and students of the State Normal and Industrial School, of Ellendale, and the Mandan Commercial Club, of Mandan, both in the State of North Dakota, indorsing the conference on limitation of armament, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry members of the Women's Civic League, of Van Hook, N. Dak., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation imposing a tax on musical instruments, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by St. John's Norwegian Lutheran Church, of Ryder, N. Dak., favoring the enactment of the so-called Willis-Campbell antibeer bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wahpeton, N. Dak., favoring the so-called Smoot manufacturers' sales tax, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE presented a resolution adopted by the Pacific Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, favoring a proposed constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Pomona, Calif., favoring the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution and the Volstead Act, and the reduction of armament, and also opposing any legislation permitting the manufacture of wine and beer, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by a mass meeting of sundry citizens of Fresno and vicinity, in the State of California, concerning the Christian people of Asia Minor, and praying that speedy and permanent relief may be afforded these long-oppressed and suffering people, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6679) to amend section 108 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 315) thereon.

Mr. ERNST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2682) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 316) thereon.

LIMITATIONS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 8298) to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to limitations in criminal cases.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, as it is a matter of great urgency. With the permission of the Senate, I will briefly state its purpose.

It is a bill the passage of which is recommended by the Department of Justice. The present statute of limitations in criminal cases is three years. This bill proposes to amend it so that in the case of offenses involving the defrauding or attempting to defraud the United States, or any agency thereof, the time shall be six years. It is extended to six years, but it does not apply to cases where the statute of limitations has already run. There is nothing ex post facto about it. It is a case of great urgency, and I trust that the bill may receive immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the bill may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1044. No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, except as provided in section 1046, unless the indictment is found, or the information is instituted, within three years next after such offense shall have been committed: Provided, however, That in offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, and now indictable under any existing statutes, the period of limitation shall be six years. This act shall apply to acts, offenses, or transactions where the existing statute of limitations has not yet fully run, but this proviso shall not apply to acts, offenses, or transactions which are already barred by the provisions of existing laws."

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force and effect from and after the date of its passage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that this bill will pass. I think it is unfortunate that it was not reported from the Committee on the Judiciary earlier. The House transmitted it to the Senate on November 1, some two weeks ago, and upon that day it was referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. I recognize the fact that the Senate has been holding sessions day and night upon the revenue bill. The consideration of that important measure required the attendance of Senators upon the sessions of the Senate. This made it exceedingly difficult to secure the attendance of Senators at committee meetings. This is very unfortunate, for I have seen it stated in the press that a large number of offenses against the criminal statute, which this bill amends, will escape punishment for criminal offenses against the Government, because the statute of limitations expired only a few days ago.

I have been informed—I do not know whether correctly informed or not, but I have been informed—that there are more than 2,000 cases connected with the Shipping Board where prosecutions would have been brought if the statute of limitations had not run against those offenses on last Saturday. I understand that its expiration on Saturday has relieved some 2,000 gentlemen whose cases have been investigated and who on the face of the record are prima facie guilty, at least as far as the investigation has proceeded. I repeat that I am informed that there are some 2,000 cases within the Shipping Board's organization where, upon the record, as shown by investigation, the parties were subject to prosecution under the section which this bill proposes to amend, and that the statute of limitations as to those cases expired on Saturday the 11th day of November.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I hope the information which the Senator from Wisconsin has with respect to that matter is inaccurate. I shall be disposed to believe that it is. The crime charged against these people ordinarily is conspiracy; and although the conspiracy may have had its inception more than three years ago, the statute runs from the last act in carrying out the conspiracy. If it relates to war transactions, I should think it quite likely that the last act easily falls within the period of three years.

I rose particularly, however, to inquire whether attention has been given by those having this matter in charge to the statute so far as the civil liability is concerned. This bill affects only the criminal liability. I think we ought to safeguard the interests of the Government so far as the civil liability of these parties is concerned, as well as the criminal responsibility.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I quite agree with the Senator, if he will permit an interruption. This bill comes from the Committee on the Judiciary, of which the Senator is a member. I do not know whether there is any bill before that committee which would amend the statute with regard to civil cases.

With respect to my statement regarding the information which I have respecting these cases, upon which the statute of limitations ran on last Saturday, I want to say that my information comes from gentlemen who have been connected with the Shipping Board and who have investigated these very cases, so that I think the information is well grounded.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, it may be. I merely express the hope that it is not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I hope that it is not, of course.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Three years would carry us back to November, 1918; and it is reasonable to assume that if the conspiracy did exist, some act in the effort to carry out that conspiracy would have taken place later than November, 1918. In other words, the entire purpose of the conspiracy could hardly have been accomplished as early as that.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I will state that a Senate bill exactly similar to this, introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. New], was reported by the Judiciary Committee on the 26th of September; but as the Senate was engaged in the consideration of the revenue bill, there was no opportunity to bring it up. This is a House bill, exactly like the Senate bill which was reported to the Senate. It has been passed by the House, and it is very important that it should pass the Senate now.

I do not think there are as many cases of this nature as the Senator from Wisconsin has intimated. There may be a few. Most of the frauds will consist of attempts upon the part of men who have contracts pending, and are trying to settle them, to impose upon the Government by fraudulent practices; and I think most of the cases involved are cases that will be within this law if we pass it.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I merely wish to add to what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has said that I did introduce this exact bill in the Senate some time ago, and it has been on the calendar for some time. It is Order of Business No. 288. I introduced it at the direct request of the Attorney General, who told me that he at that time had information which led him to believe that there were certain cases of fraud against the Government, the prosecution of which would be soon barred by the operation of the statute of limitations.

I think it possible that some of the malefactors may have escaped in the interval that has elapsed between that time and this. The bill ought to be passed forthwith in order to prevent the possibility of anything further of the kind. While what the Senator from Montana says is true, that we ought also to provide for the recovery of damages in civil suits, I think it is best to provide for that in a separate bill and not to delay the passage of this one through any attempt to amend it in any way.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rose a moment ago to secure an opportunity to express what the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who is also a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, has so well expressed. There have been suggestions that the Judiciary Committee, of which I am also a member, did not proceed with celerity; but let me remind the Senate that the Committee on the Judiciary reported the eligible bill on September 26. It was reported by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] on the order of the chairman, and it has been on the calendar as Order of Business No. 288 ever since that date. If any blame does attach, therefore, it can not justly fall upon the Judiciary Committee, because that committee proceeded with celerity and dispatch in reporting the bill to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2410, Order of Business 288, to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes, United States, relating to limitations in criminal cases, will be taken from the calendar and indefinitely postponed.

SALARIES OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS AND MARSHALS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the bill (S. 425) fixing the salaries of certain United States attorneys and United States marshals be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 2703) amending an act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 2704) granting a pension to John Spiker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 2705) granting a pension to Max A. Pietsch; and

A bill (S. 2706) granting a pension to Albert H. Irvine; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2707) for the relief of the widow of John L. Vennard; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 2708) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer without charge certain surplus material of the War Department to the American Relief Administration in Russia; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2709) for the relief of the estate of Edward P. Frank; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 2710) granting the consent of Congress to the Pamunkey Ferry Co. to construct a bridge across the Pamunkey River in Virginia; to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 2711) authorizing Dominic I. Murphy, consul general of the United States of America, to accept a silver fruit bowl presented to him by the British Government; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill (S. 2712) authorizing the delivery of an American flag to the surviving next of kin of deceased American soldiers of the World War whose bodies are not brought back to the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENDRICK:

A bill (S. 2713) to authorize the issuance of unqualified patents to public lands in certain cases; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 2714) for the improvement of a wagon road on the Colville Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WATSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 2715) to amend an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 2716) to give effect to certain provisions of conventions with foreign Governments for facilitating the work of traveling salesmen; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. FRANCE:

A bill (S. 2717) to promote the employment of labor, to stimulate industry and business, and to relieve the sufferers in the countries where there is acute distress or famine, particularly in Russia, China, and the Near East; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELKINS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 134) for the bestowal of the congressional medal of honor upon the unknown unidentified Italian soldier buried under the Victor Emmanuel Monument, Rome, Italy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS OF RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION BILL.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8331, to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD FOR AMERICAN LEGION POSTS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 131) to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to American Legion posts, which were referred to the Committee on Printing and ordered to be printed.

DUTY ON POTASH.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the tariff bill now pending before the Finance Committee. It is to strike out the duty on potash as imposed in the bill as it passed the House. I ask that the amendment be referred to the committee in order to challenge their attention to this particular duty. I know of no more important matter to the agricultural interests of this country, and no duty which is sought to be imposed that is more unfortunate, if not criminal, in the present condition of the agricultural interests of this country.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in order that it may go into the Record, let me ask the Senator if he has any information as to the proposed duty on potash?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; it is reported fully in my amendment, and I will ask that the amendment be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Tennessee moves to amend the bill by striking out that part of paragraph 1635, lines 13 to 21, inclusive, being a proviso in these words:

Provided, That for a period of five years beginning on the day following the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid, on the actual potash (potassium oxide) content of all the foregoing, a duty of 2½ cents per pound for the first two years, 2 cents per pound for the third year, 1½ cents per pound for the fourth year, and 1 cent per pound for the fifth year: Provided further, That thereafter the said potash content shall be free of duty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

WALES ISLAND PACKING CO.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 171), which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 83) entitled "A bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of State to examine and settle the claim of the Wales Island Packing Co." now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the Judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

ADJUSTMENT OF WAR CONTRACTS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, several days ago I offered a resolution, which is now lying upon the table, Senate resolution 159, to which I called the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and he indicated some objections to it. I redrafted the resolution so as to conform to the wishes of the chairman of the committee, as I recognized the propriety of the objections which he suggested, and the resolution which is now upon the table I think meets with his approval; at least, he has not offered any objection to it, as I understand. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution. I ask that now particularly, in view of the fact that the Judiciary Committee has just reported a bill, which we have passed, dealing with frauds against the Government in connection with war contracts.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the resolution be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 159) submitted by Mr. KING on October 25, 1921:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919, the Secretary of War was authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge outstanding agreements with the United States upon a fair and equitable basis relating to the production, manufacture, sale, acquisition, or control of equipment, materials, supplies, services, or the use of lands or property connected with the prosecution of the war; and Whereas it is reported that many claims against the Government which were adjusted, settled, and satisfied under the authority of said act, have been and are being reopened and reconsidered by the War Department at the instance of private claimants: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the number of claims which have been filed for adjustment under said act and the number of said claims undetermined; also the number adjusted and settled and the aggregate payments made thereon; also a list of the claimants who have filed applications to reopen claims heretofore adjusted or adjusted and settled, together with a full and complete statement of the claims which have been reopened after settlement, at the request of the claimant, including the names of such claimants, the amounts severally claimed by each and the amount, if any, allowed to each claimant in each reopened case and the number of applications to reopen cases still pending.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the importance of this resolution, as I called to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, arises out of the fact that some time ago, as I have been advised by a former officer who had to do with the settlement of the claims, word was passed around that, with a new administration coming in, many of the cases which were settled, and settled to the advantage of the Government, might be reopened. I have been told that a number of persons who had given receipts in full have attempted to have their cases reopened, and in some instances have succeeded, with a view to obtaining larger payments from the Government.

I am not asking to have reported the details of any of the cases where claims have been reopened at the instance of the Government, because I believe that some frauds have been perpetrated, and the Government is justified in reopening cases; but I am asking that there be reported the names of persons, the numbers of the claims, the amounts, and so forth, where reopening is sought at the hands of the claimants. The information which I have received I believe warrants the action which I ask be taken.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have no objection to the resolution, as I understand it. I regret in one sense that the Senator did not include a request for information concerning the cases reopened by the Government, although that is a matter of official record in the hearings before the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. KING. It is not necessary.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I think it is not necessary. Just at this point I may say that the Government has had a considerable number of these claims reopened, it having been done through the efforts of the office of the Chief of Finance of the War Department. The last testimony which that officer gave to the Committee on Military Affairs was to the effect that something like $27,000,000 had been recovered to the Government due to his activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the preamble will be approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7394) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Ironwood Bluff, in the county of Itawamba, Miss., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this is Calendar Monday, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with Order of Business No. 287, Senate bill 167, where the Senate left off at the last call of the calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before that is done there were a few observations I wanted to submit on another matter, to be entirely candid with the Senator, on the subject of disarmament. Does the Senator think the time has arrived when it is necessary to take up the calendar? We went over the calendar one day last week.

Mr. CURTIS. The bills beginning with Senate bill 167 have not been called, and they have been on the calendar for many weeks.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall not take exceeding 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection, of course, to the Senator occupying the time now.

SUSPENSION OF NAVAL PROGRAM.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has presented, and been granted permission to print in the RECORD, the splendid speech made by the President of the United States on the convening of the conference called to limit armaments, as well as the very virile address made by the Secretary of State to the convened delegates of the several powers which were invited to appear, and I want to indorse, wholeheartedly, in this public fashion what the President said on the subject of disarmament, as well as the proposal made by the Secretary of State on behalf of himself and his associate American delegates.

I think the proposals made represent the greatest step that has been taken toward disarmament for a long time, and I was delighted on yesterday to observe the spirit in which the addresses of the President and the Secretary of State were received by the American press. If there has been one discordant note I have not heard of it.

I am reminded, Mr. President, that when the naval appropriation bill was pending before the Senate I offered an amendment authorizing the President to suspend all new naval construction work in his discretion, pending the deliberations of a conference between the United States, Great Britain, and Japan. I felt then, as I feel now, that it would have helped along the movement in favor of the limitation of armaments.

That amendment came before the Senate on my motion to suspend the rules. The motion to suspend the rules was defeated by the Senate on May 27, 1921. On July 7, 1921, I offered a joint resolution having for its purpose the conferring of the same authority upon the President. That joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it has been sleeping there ever since. I am not questioning motives at all, but I am questioning the judgment of certain members of the committee who seem to be obsessed with the idea that the way to bring peace is to build a great Navy that will overawe all the nations of the world.

Mr. President, my proposal was modest compared with the action of our American delegates. It was not made for the purpose of interfering with the President. It was to strengthen his hand. I felt that if the President were able to say to that conference when it was convened that by the authority vested in him by joint resolution he had directed the suspension of the new construction work pending their deliberations, the psychological effect of that announcement would have been very powerful in the interest of the world's peace.

Now, we are building under the naval program adopted in 1916, at a time when we feared we would get into war; but at this time there are no clouds on the horizon that are worth mentioning, and yet we are continuing to build under that pretentious program of 1916. In other words, in a time of profound peace, when there is no danger threatening, we are doing that which we contemplated doing under the program of 1916, which provided for the building of 154 vessels of different types, 66 of them, I believe, being immediately appropriated for in the act itself.

The Secretary of State has said to Great Britain and Japan that we would be willing to scrap 9 battleships and 6 battle cruisers in various stages of completion, on which $330,000,000 have already been expended. In addition to that, he has proposed to scrap certain of the older battleships. The new tonnage thus to be scrapped is 618,000 tons; the old battleships proposed to be scrapped aggregates 227,740 tons, or a total of 845,740 tons. He has proposed that we would do this if Great Britain would scrap 172,000 tons of new construction and 411,375 tons of old construction, or a total of 583,375 tons, and if Japan should scrap new construction aggregating 289,100 tons and 10 older ships of a total tonnage of 159,828 tons, or a total tonnage of 448,928 tons.

Mr. President, has anyone heard any objection to this proposition emanating from anyone, unless it be from those who insist that we shall have the greatest Navy on the face of the globe. I trust that Great Britain and Japan will accept the proposal, but if they should signify their intention of accepting it, is the President clothed with power to order this to be done without an act of Congress? I doubt it. I do not think there is such authority. Now, if after the American delegates have presented this proposition, it was known that they would be sustained by the action of the Congress of the United States authorizing the President legally to suspend the new construction, it seems to me it would indicate to the world that the public opinion of the United States is back of our delegates in their attempt to solve this problem.

But, again, while this plan may not be accepted in toto, I have no doubt that it will be accepted in its larger part. While we provided last year for an expenditure during the current fiscal year of nearly $400,000,000, and our shipyards are now busily engaged in this construction, we are either going to scrap these ships or we are not. If we are not going to scrap them, nothing will be lost to the cause of peace by suspending this building for the period of two or three or four or five or six months. If we are going to scrap them, what justification can be offered for going on with the expenditures now?

Mr. President, that is the way this subject presents itself to my mind. I hope that the Committee on Naval Affairs will see fit to report on the joint resolution. I am not going to ask for a favorable report; but, unless I very greatly change my mind, I shall ask for a report, and unless something is done along this line at a very early date I shall move to discharge that committee from the further consideration of the joint resolution. It may be that under present conditions it is not in the form that it should assume. It may be that it should be made more comprehensive, but to the extent that it meets the approval of the Congress of the United States, I desire action in order to back up the President and the American delegates in their plan for the limitation of armaments.

Mr. CURTIS. I renew my request that we proceed with the calendar.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator withhold the request for a moment? I merely desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. It will not take a moment.

Mr. CURTIS. I will withhold my request for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that following the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] the amendment to which he alluded and on which he spoke and the vote on that amendment be incorporated in the RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not understand the request of the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. My request is that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio on May 27 and the vote which was taken upon that amendment be incorporated in the Record following the remarks of the Senator from Ohio to-day.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator if that is not already in the Record?

Mr. HARRISON. It is in the Record.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is the necessity for reprinting it?

Mr. HARRISON. It is in the Record of May 27. It is right in line with the remarks the Senator from Ohio just made, and when one reads his speech of to-day he will be saved some time in not having to refer back to the Record of May 27 to look it over to see what the amendment was and the vote upon it. It is not very long. It will not occupy much space.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the Record as follows:

[From CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, proceedings of Senate, May 27, 1921.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of section 17 it is proposed to insert the following:

"That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to delay for a period of six months, in whole or in part, the building program provided for in this act, in order to enable him to arrange for a conference with the Governments of Great Britain and Japan, with the view of reducing substantially the naval building programs of the several Governments so participating in said conference, and if they agree upon such plan of reduction, the President is hereby further authorized to suspend, in whole or in part, the said building program in order to enable him to carry out any agreement thus made."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent. On this vote I feel at liberty to vote; I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. By agreement with that Senator, I am permitted to vote on this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Owing to his unavoidable absence, I am not at liberty to vote. If I were free to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have been requested to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HEFLIN] from the city on public business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] and let my vote stand.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. I am informed he is detained on official business.

Mr. MCCORMICK (after having voted in the negative). I have a standing pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. Has he answered the roll call?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MCCORMICK. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. STANLEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERST]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT];

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 36, as follows:

Yeas—29: Ashurst, Borah, Broussard, Capper, Caraway, Dial, Fletcher, Glass, Harris, Harrison, Johnson, Jones of Washington, Kenyon, King, Ladd, La Follette, Lenroot, McKellar, Overman, Owen, Pomerene, Sheppard, Simmons, Stanley, Swanson, Trammell, Underwood, Walsh of Massachusetts, Watson of Georgia.

Nays—36: Ball, Brandegee, Bursum, Calder, Cummins, Curtis, Dillingham, Edge, Gerry, Gooding, Hale, Harrell, Kellogg, Keyes, Lodge, McCormick, McNary, Moses, Myers, Nelson, Newberry, Norbeck, Oddie, Phipps, Poindexter, Shortridge, Smoot, Spencer, Stanfield, Sterling, Sutherland, Townsend, Wadsworth, Walsh of Montana, Warren, Willis.

Not voting—31: Cameron, Colt, Culberson, Elkins, Ernst, Fernald, France, Frelinghuysen, Hefflin, Hitchcock, Jones of New Mexico, Kendrick, Knox, McCumber, McKinley, McLean, New, Nicholson, Norris, Page, Penrose, Pittman, Ransdell, Reed, Robinson, Shields, Smith, Watson of Indiana, Weller, Williams, Wolcott.

So the Senate rejected Mr. POMERENE's motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I only heard the concluding words of the Senator from Ohio. Unfortunately I was absent from the Chamber at the time he addressed himself to this subject. I understand, however, that what he said related to the joint resolution which the Senator from Ohio introduced some months ago, authorizing the President and suggesting to the President to stop immediately the construction of naval vessels under the 1916 program.

I only rose to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the proposition that if the joint resolution had been adopted, and if the President had acted upon it and had stopped work upon our battleships, it would have been utterly impracticable for the United States to have offered any consideration either to Great Britain or to Japan for the suggestion which has recently been made to them that they abandon a certain part of their naval program. The only consideration which the United States has to offer those countries for the curtailment of their naval program and reduction of their naval strength is that upon that consideration we will do the very thing which the Senator from Ohio some time ago wanted us to do.

Mr. POMERENE. No; I am afraid the Senator has not even read the joint resolution which is before his committee. That joint resolution authorizes the President at any time in his discretion to suspend for a period of six months this construction, in whole or in part. That is all. Now, think of the situation which confronts the President. The President through his delegates has made a proposition, but suppose some delegate had risen the other day or should rise at some meeting in the future with the statement: "You have been talking in favor of international peace and international disarmament, but when we land on the hospitable shores of the United States we find that every shipyard is working as it never worked before in the building of a great Navy."

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. Just a moment. "Now, shall we take counsel of your words or shall we take counsel of your actions?" That is the problem.

I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In the first place, if the delegates to whom the Senator refers had made any such statement as that, the statements would have been entirely erroneous because the shipyards of the United States are not working "as they never worked before," by which I infer that the Senator means that they are working at full speed in the construction of naval vessels. On the contrary, they are working at a greatly reduced speed, and the fact in the case is that the work is almost suspended on a large part of the program due to a lack of appropriations. The appropriations which were made by Congress in the last appropriation bill having been very largely absorbed in meeting obligations which had already been incurred for material for the construction of these ships there is left practically nothing, or, at least, a very small amount, for the employment of labor to carry on the work upon them.

Furthermore, if the Senator will permit another word, there is nothing in what the Senator has said that answers the objection which I made that if, before inviting a conference upon this subject, we alone, without regard to the action taken by our conferees, had abandoned our naval program we should have had no consideration whatever to offer them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator understands English. No one has suggested the abandonment of the program. My proposition is that the President be authorized to suspend for a period of six months this extravagant expenditure of the people's money at the very time when we are seeking a limitation of armaments. What is wrong about that? It is one thing to suspend building for a time with the hope of reaching an agreement for disarmament. It is quite another to abandon it altogether.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the matter is disposed of I feel impelled to say a word, particularly in view of the fact that in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Ohio there will appear in the Record the vote taken in the month of May upon his amendment to the then pending naval appropriation bill.

Mr. President, among those who sincerely look for world disarmament or for a reduction of armaments until they are no longer useful for purposes of international war there are two views as to how best to achieve that result. Some Senators believe that the way to do it is to cut down our naval appropriation bill and keep our Navy down to the lowest possible limit in the hope that our example will be emulated by other nations. There are some of us who are sincerely desirous of securing a very substantial reduction of naval as well as of land armaments who believe that that is not the way to accomplish the result.

I do not share the view at all that the $300,000,000 which has been expended in the construction of these great ships under the program of 1916 has been wasted. I believe that by the expenditure of that money the nations of the world who are among the naval powers have come to realize that a reduction is essential in order to preserve the peace of the world and in order to relieve the world from the burden which it bears. I have no doubt in the world that if it were not for the program just inaugurated it would be useless for the United States to open up with other nations at all the all-important subject now receiving the consideration of this conference. So in the matter of the consideration of appropriations which we were asked to make for great naval bases and other works of similar character, the persuasive effect of that policy ought to be recognized by everybody. So a great many of us, who were at one and the same time asking for the convocation of a conference for disarmament, felt that it was unwise to give our approval to the amendment tendered by the Senator from Ohio. We may be wrong about the matter and he may be right about it, but we are just as profoundly interested in attaining the result as he can be. It is simply a question as how best to secure that result.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the calendar beginning with Order of Business 287, where its consideration was left off on Wednesday last.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that probably a number of Senators who are absent are interested in measures on the calendar; so I feel that I ought to suggest the absence of a quorum before the calendar is taken up, and I do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	Nelson	Smith
Ball	Hale	New	Smoot
Borah	Harrison	Nicholson	Stanley
Bursum	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sutherland
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Swanson
Capper	Kenyon	Overman	Townsend
Caraway	Keyes	Page	Trammell
Culberson	King	Philips	Wadsworth
Cummins	Ladd	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Lodge	Polindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	McCumber	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Edge	McKellar	Ransdell	Willis
Elkins	McKinley	Robinson
Fletcher	McNary	Sheppard
Frelinghuysen	Myers	Simmons

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is absent because of the illness of his brother, Gen. Harris, who is undergoing an operation to-day at Walter Reed Hospital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar, beginning with Order of Business 287, as agreed to on request of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

JOHN H. RHEINLANDER.

The bill (S. 167) for the relief of John H. Rheinlander was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the sum of $1,200 be paid to John H. Rheinlander, of St. Louis, Mo., to compensate him in full for all claims he may have against the United States arising out of injuries received by him while in the Government employ in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, at St. Louis, Mo., in February, 1883.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF CLOTHING TO SOLDIERS.

The bill (S. 2492) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1921, was announced as next in order.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, perhaps it would expedite matters if, instead of having the entire bill read—

Mr. SMOOT. I had rather have the bill read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is only a difference of four words between the language of the bill and existing law, and I thought I could explain the bill in one sentence, whereas the Secretary will have to read two pages.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1921, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

That the first paragraph under the heading "Clothing, camp, and garrison equipage," on page 15 of the law, be amended to read as follows:

"For cloth, woollens, materials, and for the purchase and manufacture of clothing for the Army, including enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty; for issue and for sale at a price to be determined and fixed by the Secretary of War; for payment of commutation of clothing due to warrant officers of the Mine Planters Service and to enlisted men; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleaning when necessary; for operation of laundries; for equipment and repair of equipment of dry-cleaning plants, salvage, and sorting storehouses, hat repairing shops, shoe repair shops, clothing repair shops, and garbage reduction works; for equipage, including authorized issues of toilet articles, barbers' and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances and applicants for enlistment while held under observation; issue of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment, and issue of housewives to the Army; for expenses of packing and handling and similar necessities; for a suit of citizen's outer clothing, to cost not exceeding $30, to be issued when necessary to each soldier discharged otherwise than honorably; to each enlisted man convicted by civil court for an offense resulting in confinement in a penitentiary or other civil prison; and to each enlisted man ordered interned by reason of the fact that he is an alien enemy, or, for the same reason, discharged without internment; for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, etc., destroyed since April 22, 1898, by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $12,000,000: Provided, That hereafter the settlement of clothing accounts of enlisted men, including charges for clothing drawn in excess of clothing allowance and payments of amounts due them when they draw less than their allowance, shall be made at such periods and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this bill is merely in its text a repetition of a certain section of the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922. There is but one change in the language which is proposed in this bill, and that occurs on page 2 of the bill, on lines 2 and 3. Senators will note the language "for issue and for sale at a price to be determined and fixed by the Secretary of War." The words "at a price to be determined and fixed by the Secretary of War" constitute the sole change made by the bill in the existing law.

Here is the situation: The existing appropriation act provides that clothing in the hands of the War Department may be sold to soldiers through the commissary sales store at cost prices; that is, at the prices which the Government paid for it when it got it. Much of the clothing that is in the hands of the War Department was purchased during the war and can only be sold by the War Department to soldiers at the price then paid. In the meantime prices have gone down. Woolen underclothes which cost $2 during the war can now be purchased for 92 cents; the soldiers naturally will not pay $2, and the Secretary of War can not sell them for less than $2. A like condition exists with respect to shoes and raincoats. This bill merely permits the Secretary of War to sell those goods to the soldiers at prices fixed by himself.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the bill is a proper one, Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will enable the department to get rid of clothing which should be disposed of.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator that it seems to me the situation could easily have been met by the Secretary of War declaring such clothing to be surplus.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not surplus.

Mr. KING. It is surplus if he can not dispose of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He has to get a certain amount if it is sold to the soldiers.

Mr. KING. If he can not dispose of it, it is surplus. Then he could sell it in the manner which is authorized by the special statute which we have enacted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WARRANT OFFICERS' RESERVE CORPS.

The bill (S. 2515) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Utah that this bill, if enacted into law, will not cost the Government of the United States a penny. It merely supplies an omission in the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to let the bill go over, as I should like to examine it further.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We now have warrant officers in the Regular Army and in the National Guard, but not in the Reserves, although the Reserve Corps is now a part of the Army. I repeat that the bill can not cost the Government a penny unless Congress hereafter shall make appropriations for warrant officers of the Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, and without such warrant officers in the Reserve Corps the organization is incomplete.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

TRANSPORTATION OF SOLDIERS FROM EUROPE AND SIBERIA.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 120) providing funds for carrying into effect the provisions of Public, No. 28, Sixty-seventh Congress, approved June 30, 1921, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation, "Pay, etc., of the Army, 1922," under such regulations as he may prescribe, all of the expenses incident to carrying into effect the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1921, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish free transportation and subsistence from Europe and Siberia to the United States for certain destitute discharged soldiers and their wives and children."

Mr. KING. I thought that we had made an appropriation for that purpose some time ago. I recall the Senator from New York made a full explanation as to the apparent necessity for such legislation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We did not make the appropriation, nor authorize the use of existing appropriations for that purpose. This joint resolution merely authorizes the use of the appropriation "Pay, and so forth, of the Army, 1922," for that purpose.

Mr. KING. How much will it cost?

Mr. WADSWORTH. About $140,000 is the estimate; otherwise the men can not be brought home.

Mr. SMOOT. Was not public act No. 28, Sixty-seventh Congress, an act authorizing the Secretary of War to pay for transporting to the United States soldiers and their families in Europe and Siberia?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The resolution to which the Senator refers authorized the Secretary of War to bring these people back on Army transports, but it did not provide as to how the expenses should be met; it did not specify the appropriation under which the work should be carried out.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether in the estimates submitted by the War Department, and for which estimates appropriations were made, there was not an item that would cover this particular matter?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not that I know of; no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator whether he regards it as wise legislation to fix no limit whatever, but simply to say that the Secretary may expend whatever he pleases for this purpose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I say, in reply to the Senator, that he can not spend very much. The Senator undoubtedly recollects the very narrow limits placed upon the Secretary of War in the matter of pay of enlisted men of the Army in the last Army appropriation bill. The Senator recollects that the Congress cut down that appropriation to the extent that it would only be sufficient to pay 150,000 men for one year, which forced the discharge of something like 75,000 men from the Army at that time. The margin is so narrow that it would be utterly impossible for the Secretary of War to indulge in any abuse or extravagance in the matter of bringing these destitute soldiers home from France.

Mr. KING. I appreciate that, but it does seem to me that Congress ought to know when they pass a law which calls for an expenditure by some department of the Government approximately what it will be, and they ought to know what they are appropriating. I should prefer to add a certain amount, and say that $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, or $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be appropriated for this purpose, rather than to leave this undetermined authority.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Secretary of War, in his communication to the Military Affairs Committee, states that the estimate for carrying on this work is $140,000; and I can assure the Senator that he will not be able to find any more money anywhere, because the Senator will recollect how we tied up the provisions of the Army appropriation act in such a way that the Secretary of War is forbidden to incur a deficit. He is forbidden to incur a deficit under that act, and if he can save $140,000 out of the appropriation "Pay of the Army" it will be because there are less than 150,000 men in the Army to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

The joint resolution was passed.

UNEXPENDED BALANCES, QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 118) authorizing the Secretary of War to obligate funds appropriated for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, to the amount of $236,095 from unexpended balances now in the Treasury was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to use the unexpended balances of funds appropriated for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, namely, those funds appropriated for the support and operation of the Quartermaster Corps, to the extent of $236,095 for reconditioning of the United States Army transport Madawaska.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM O. MALLAHAN.

The bill (S. 268) for the relief of William O. Mallahan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will not object to the consideration of this bill. I invite his attention to the report of the committee on this matter, the concluding paragraph thereof only:

Your committee believe that, from the undisputed record of the facts in this case, no more meritorious case has ever been presented to this committee calling for legislation by Congress in order that the record of a faithful young soldier of the Civil War may be corrected, not only for the benefit of the soldier himself but also that his "children can have a record of their father's service in the Civil War."

If the Senator will take the pains to read the report, I can not believe that he will interpose any objection to this long-delayed measure of justice to a man who served his country faithfully, and against whom the charge of desertion was entered by a drunken superior officer.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the bill may go over for this occasion. I will examine the files, and on the next calendar day I shall be glad to take up the matter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I trust the Senator will do so.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2363) to abolish the limitation on military service without the continental limits of the United States, imposed by the act of Congress approved March 4, 1915, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. At the request of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], I ask that this bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2035) for the relief of William M. Carroll was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is a bill of the same class as the one that went over a few moments ago. I know that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] wants it to go over, and I therefore ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 150) directing the Secretary of the Senate to employ a special officer for the office of the Secretary of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

LUCY PARADIS.

The bill (S. 2210) for the relief of Lucy Paradis was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment upon the claim of Lucy Paradis for horses belonging to her and killed and destroyed upon the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, or elsewhere, in the State of South Dakota, by the Indian agent in charge of said Cheyenne River Indian Reservation and other persons under his authority, with right of appeal as in other cases.

That a petition may be filed by the attorneys of the said Lucy Paradis in said court within six months from the approval of this act, and service of said petition shall be had by filing copies thereof with the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Interior, and answer thereto shall be filed in said court within 60 days after the service of the petition.

The court may receive and consider all papers, depositions, records, correspondence, and documents heretofore filed in the executive departments of the Government, together with any other evidence offered, and shall render a judgment or decree thereon for such amount, if any, without interest, if any, as the court shall find legally or equitably due the said Lucy Paradis.

Said cause shall be advanced on the calendar of said court, and the amount for which judgment may be rendered, when paid to the party named in said judgment or her duly authorized and accredited attorney, shall be received in full and final settlement of the claim for said unlawful destruction of said horses.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUANCE OF PATENTS TO MISSIONARY OR RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS.

The bill (S. 2211) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in certain cases to missionary or religious organizations was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee simple to the duly authorized missionary board, or other proper authority, of any religious organization engaged in mission or school work on any Indian reservation for such lands therein as have been heretofore set apart to and are now being used and occupied by such organization for mission or school purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, if this bill should not be limited in amount?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, heretofore the patents have been limited to the number of acres occupied, not usually over 160 acres, and in many cases as low as 10 acres. Most of the patents have been issued. There are just a few left. If the Senator desires, we might let the bill be passed over, and I will take up the subject with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This would seem to give unlimited authority.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill go over for the present, and I will take up the matter with the commissioner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FORT PECK AND BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATIONS, MONT.

The bill (S. 2312) to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands on the Fort Peck and Blackfeet Indian Reservations in the State of Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the word "purposes," to strike out "by the Indians residing on said reservations, through their tribal councils, with the approval of and," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That lands reserved for school and agency purposes and all other unallotted lands on the Fort Peck and Blackfeet Indian Reservations, in the State of Montana, reserved from allotment or other disposition, may be leased for mining purposes under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Montana if it would not be wise to have general legislation with respect to these reservations?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will say to the Senator that we have general legislation, and under that general legislation all lands allotted are allotted with the reservation to the Indians of all mineral rights. That has been taken care of generally, but in the acts for the allotment of these two reservations certain lands were reserved for school purposes and for agency purposes, and so forth, and there is no authority to authorize the extraction of oil, for instance, that might be under lands of that character. Any oil that there might be under the other lands, or other minerals, may be extracted for the benefit of the tribe; but though these lands would be especially valuable for that purpose, there is no authority to authorize the extraction of the oil under these particular lands, so that the general law must be supplemented by an act of this character.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 2439) for the relief of the West Okanogan irrigation district, in the State of Washington, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation from the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] with regard to this measure, and particularly whether it involves an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States, or a subtraction from the funds of the Indians which may be in the Treasury.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It involves an appropriation from the Treasury in the first instance; but the money paid is to become a lien upon the irrigated lands and to be paid back on the same terms and conditions required under the reclamation act as amended. It is simply a case where a reclamation district includes, among the lands in the district, Indian lands. There was an appropriation of $95,000 to purchase the water rights for these lands on due and proportionate share of the expenses in accordance with the acreage, but there have been accruing from year to year annual charges, and these have not been paid. Of course this, like all newly settled districts, is a struggling community, endeavoring to get a foothold under this irrigation project, and it is impossible for the settlers to do that unless all the lands bear their due share of the charges.

In order that payments for the Indian lands which have water rights may be made in accordance with acreage, this appropriation is made, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, with a provision attached that the money shall be paid back in installments in accordance with the provisions of the reclamation act, the same as in the case of other people.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether this is one of the regular reclamation projects inaugurated by the Government?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it is a local district project.

Mr. KING. Inaugurated by private individuals?

Mr. POINDEXTER. By the local community. It is a district, and it is public in that sense; but it was organized by the community, and the funds were raised by the district, an irrigation district organized under the laws of the State of Washington.

Mr. KING. Let me see if I understand the situation. If it is purely a private enterprise, as it seems to be—

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a local enterprise, I should say, rather than a private enterprise.

Mr. KING. A local enterprise in contradistinction to a national one?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. KING. Then this provides that the Government, under the reclamation act, would have nothing to do with it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Nothing at all.

Mr. KING. As I understand it, there are Indians who desire to avail themselves of the water rights which may be secured through this corporation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. KING. And it is desired that the Government shall advance sufficient funds to pay to the Indians, in order that they may acquire water rights, and the Government is to be reimbursed from any Indian funds?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not exactly that, although the proposition is somewhat similar to that. The Government has already advanced the money for the acquirement of the water rights; that has been paid.

Mr. KING. That is, for the Indians?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For the Indians; but nothing has been paid on account of the annual dues. The Senator is familiar with the fact that on these irrigation projects charges are made annually for the use of the water and for keeping the ditches in repair. This is to provide for that, to pay the delinquent dues for these Indian lands, and the money is not, as the Senator suggested, to be repaid from the general Indian funds, but it is to be repaid by the individual owners of these Indian lands, and it will become a lien upon their particular tracts.

Mr. KING. I was interested in ascertaining whether the Government was embarking upon private enterprise, in the sense that it was furnishing water to private individuals for their own land.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all. The only interest the Government has in it is the fact that these Indians are the wards of the Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator if there is no fund out of which this money could come, instead of being taken directly from the Treasury of the United States? Is there no fund under the control of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or of some other branch of the Government, out of which this could be taken?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; there is no other fund out of which it can be paid.

Mr. FLETCHER. As I understand, the Government holds the title to the land in trust for certain Indians?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. And this relates to an improvement of the land by irrigation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. And then the title to the land will be patented, if it has not already been patented, to individuals?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Must the land be held by Indians, or can the Indians transfer their rights to other people?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Under certain regulations the Indians can transfer title; but this bill provides that the lien shall attach to the land and that the dues shall be paid by whoever may own the land, whether the Indians or their grantees.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can the Senator give us any idea as to whether the lands are really being reclaimed, and whether they will be sufficient security for the money advanced by the Government?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is not any question about the security. The lands are being reclaimed to some extent. Of course, what the promoters of the project desire is to have them fully cultivated, and that is being gradually done. Whether they are cultivated or not, the settlers have the water rights, and the land is very fertile. There is no question whatever about the security of the lien upon these lands.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, two years ago they raised enough in one year on one of these projects to pay for the entire project. That probably could be done on this one as soon as they get it all developed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was the case this year in the great Yakima Valley irrigation project in the State of Washington, which is no better, as far as its natural resources are concerned, than the one covered by this bill. They estimate that they will get $50,000,000 this year from the agricultural products of that irrigated district, of which the cost to the Government was probably about $15,000,000 altogether.

The amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000, which shall be available for use by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in paying any just claims which may be due to any person, company, or district, including the West Okanogan irrigation district, in the State of Washington, for irrigation, water rent, or improvements or other just claims incident to irrigation of such lands, within the said West Okanogan Valley irrigation district, as are held by the United States in trust for Indians: Provided, That the amounts expended under this appropriation shall be reimbursed to the United States by the owners of the land on behalf of which such expenditure is made, upon such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, which shall be not less favorable to the Indians than the reimbursement required of settlers upon lands irrigated under the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L., p. 388), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto; and if any Indian shall sell his allotment or part thereof, or receive a patent in fee for the same, any amount of the charge made to secure reimbursement remaining unpaid at the time of such sale or issuance of patent shall be a lien on the land, and patents issued therefor shall recite the amount of such item.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLOTMENTS ON THE CROW RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 2532) extending the time within which allotments may be made in the Crow Reservation, Mont., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for making the allotments on the Crow Reservation, Mont., as provided by the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. L., p. 751), be, and it is hereby, extended for a period of two years from December 4, 1921.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN MOUNT PLEASANT, MICH.

The bill (H. R. 7051) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to execute deeds of reconveyance for certain lands in the city of Mount Pleasant, Isabella County, Mich., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to execute deeds on behalf of the United States of America to Walter F. Newberry, John C. Hicks, Barbara Granger Vowles (formerly Barbara Granger), Jean Gretchen Stickle,

Bruce Granger Stickle, and Bruce Stickle, or their heirs, reconveying to said persons or their heirs certain lands in the city of Mount Pleasant, Mich., heretofore conveyed by them to the United States of America, the appropriation for the purchase price of said lands having lapsed by operation of law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT TO CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA.

The bill (H. R. 7108) authorizing a per capita payment to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota from their tribal funds held in trust by the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 6, after the word "parties," to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That before any payment is made hereunder the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota shall, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, ratify the provisions of this act and accept the same.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States so much as may be necessary of the principal fund on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889 (25th Stats. L., p. 642), entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to make therefrom a per capita payment, or distribution, of $100 to each enrolled member of the tribe, under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe: Provided, That the money paid to the Indians as authorized herein, shall not be subject to any lien or claim of attorneys or other parties: Provided, That before any payment is made hereunder the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota shall, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, ratify the provisions of this act and accept the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EMBARGO ON SHIPMENT OF ARMS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) to amend Senate joint resolution 89, approved March 14, 1912, amending the joint resolution to prohibit the exports of coal and other material used in war from any seaport of the United States, approved April 22, 1898, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution approved March 14, 1912, amending the joint resolution to prohibit the exports of coal and other material used in war from any seaport of the United States, approved April 22, 1898, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"That whenever the President shall find that in any American country, or in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, conditions of domestic violence exists, which are promoted by the use of arms and munitions of war procured from the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, any arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

"SEC. 2. That any shipment of material hereby declared unlawful after such proclamation shall be punishable by fine not exceeding $10,000, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both."

Mr. KING. I would like to have some explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I shall make an explanation, very gladly. The joint resolution which it is proposed to amend was passed when the Mexican troubles began, during the Taft administration. It amended the existing law simply to give the President discretion to stop the export of arms to any American country where there was an insurrection, so that it might be done more quickly and prevent the escape of the cargoes. I think that was a very wise provision, and the law has remained unchanged since that time. This joint resolution proposes to add, after the word "American," the words "or in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction."

Mr. KING. I am satisfied with the explanation.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to amend Senate joint resolution 89, approved March 14, 1912, amending the joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal and other material used in war from any seaport of the United States, approved April 22, 1898."

PYRAMID LAKE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (S. 225) for the relief of settlers and town-site occupants of certain lands in the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, Nev., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell to settlers or their transferees, under such terms, conditions, and price per acre as the said Secretary may prescribe, any lands in the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Nevada, that have been settled upon, occupied, and improved by said settlers and their transferees in good faith for a period of 21 years or more immediately preceding the passage of this act: Provided, That no more than 640 acres shall be sold to any one person or corporation: Provided further, That said sales shall be by private cash entry after it has been shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the lands applied for have been settled upon, occupied, and improved as required by this act, and in addition to such price per acre as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior all entrymen hereunder shall pay the same fees and commissions as provided by law where public lands are disposed of at $1.25 per acre. The proceeds of said sales shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the Piute Indians of the said Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is also authorized to have a survey and plat made of the town of Wadsworth, in said Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, and thereafter sell the unpatented lands embraced in the said town as provided for by section 2384 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and on compliance with said statute the purchasers of the lots shall acquire title as provided for by the said statute: Provided, That any lands within the limits of said town used for Indian school purposes or for other public use for Indians shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved from said town site, and the Secretary of the Interior, upon payment to him of the sum of $100, is hereby authorized to convey by patent to the board of county commissioners of Washoe County, Nev., or other proper school officials of the town of Wadsworth, Nev., the lands now known as lots 38 to 47, inclusive, of block 2 in said town of Wadsworth, as surveyed in 1898 by T. K. Stewart: Provided further, That if there are any Indians residing in said town and in possession of and claiming any lots therein they shall have the same rights of purchase under the said statute as white citizens. The proceeds of the sale of lands in said town shall also be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the Piute Indians of the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, and the proceeds derived from the sale of lands under section 1 of this act are hereby made available for use by the Secretary of the Interior in making such surveys or resurveys within the said town site of Wadsworth as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That titles to lands in said Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation acquired by patents heretofore issued by the United States to any railroad company, individual, or the State of Nevada, or by certification to the State of Nevada, are hereby confirmed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Asbust	Gooding	Myers	Simmons
Borah	Hale	Nelson	Smith
Broussard	Harrison	New	Smoot
Bursum	Heflin	Norbeck	Spencer
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Swanson
Caraway	Kendrick	Overman	Townsend
Culberson	Kenyon	Page	Trammell
Cummins	Keyes	Phipps	Underwood
Curtis	King	Pittman	Wadsworth
Dial	Ladd	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	La Follette	Ransdell	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	McCormick	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
Fernald	McCumber	Sheppard	Weller
Fletcher	McKellar	Shields	Willis
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Shortridge

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is absent because of the illness of his brother, Gen. Harris, who is undergoing an operation to-day at Walter Reed Hospital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Sixty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CUMMINS obtained the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me just for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

TAX REVISION INCOME FROM COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to speak of a matter and call it to the attention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] and any other of the conferees on the part of the Senate on the tax bill that is now in conference—that is the matter of income-tax returns upon community property in the States that have a community property law as to the property of husband and wife.

A report has come to some of the representatives here of community-property States of a lack of interest on the part of Senate conferees in that matter as it was passed by the Senate, and some rumor to the effect that the conferees were of the opinion that most of the Senators from those States had no special interest in the matter.

I wish to take advantage of this opportunity, begging the indulgence of the Senator from Iowa, to disabuse the minds of the conferees upon that bill if they have any such idea, and to state that there is an interest, a very deep interest, on the part of the Members of the Senate from the community-property States in the action that was taken by the Senate and in maintaining that action in conference. We are advised that that probably can be done if the representatives of the Senate upon the conference committee stand firm upon the action taken by the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Whatever might be the view of any one of the conferees, the Senate itself spoke its conviction upon that subject, and I assume it is the duty of the conferees to uphold the vote of the Senate if they are able to do so without reference to their own peculiar views in the matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad, indeed, to have that expression from the Senator from North Dakota. I call his attention to the fact that there are eight States in the Union, having 16 Senators in this body, who are interested in maintaining the action of the Senate, and will, of course, make their interest known in any proper way. All that the community States are asking is that there be a uniform law as to return of incomes for the purpose of taxation, and that no exception shall be made; that there shall be no discrimination and no special provision in the law relating to incomes upon community property. The law as it stands now makes no exception, makes no reference to common-law States or to community-property States, and in the interpretation and administration of that law it has been held that the partnership known as a community, composed of the husband and wife, may make separate returns of their incomes, just as they are required to pay State taxes upon the inheritance of one from the other upon the death of one spouse.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit me a word in this connection?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a moment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to approve heartily everything the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has stated, and I feel gratified at the statement of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. We are not merely interested in this as a perfunctory matter, but we are satisfied that to sustain the House provision would bring about an absolute discrimination. The mere suggestion of such a provision as the House put upon the bill with reference to community property is a recognition of the fact that there must be a discrimination. In every other State in the Union a married woman has a right to make a separate return of her income. The provision put upon the bill by the House takes away that right and discriminates against married women in the community-property States.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS resumed and concluded the speech begun by him on Wednesday last. The speech entire is as follows:

Wednesday, November 9, 1921.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, my conclusions or one of my conclusions after a somewhat extended experience in the Senate is that Senators are abundantly able to deal with any measure which may come before them if they clearly understand the proposal which the measure presents. Unfortunately, there are comparatively few Senators who can remain in the Chamber long enough and continuously enough to understand fully the legislation which is proposed when it is composed of intricate and complicated statistical details. What I have to say will be purely explanatory. I do not intend to enter into a long discussion with respect to the very many problems which our transportation system presents for solution, because those problems are not material to the inquiry we are about to make.

The history of the proposed legislation upon this subject may be stated with great brevity. On or about the 1st of August the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] introduced a bill which was intended to accomplish substantially the object which the pending measure is intended to accomplish. The bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, was considered by that committee and reported favorably with certain amendments. It is now upon the calendar.

About the same time a Member of Congress from Massachusetts, I believe, introduced into the House of Representatives a bill substantially, not identically, but substantially like the bill introduced by the Senator from Michigan.

That bill was referred to the appropriate committee in the House of Representatives, and was reported favorably with amendments. The House proceeded to consider the bill, and, after consideration, the bill passed that body. It came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. For reasons which are perfectly obvious, the Committee on Interstate Commerce took up the House bill, considered that as carefully as it could, and reported the House bill favorably with the amendments which had been proposed and adopted in the committee. It is the latter bill which is now before the Senate. We are acting upon the House bill and not upon the bill which was originally reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. President, before indicating from my own standpoint what the pending bill is, I want the attention of the Senate for a few moments in order to point out what the bill is not, for I believe I have never observed an instance in which there has been greater misapprehension and misunderstanding in the public press with respect to any measure pending in Congress than I have observed in connection with this particular measure. The bill has been termed a funding bill or refunding bill. No greater mistake could possibly be made with respect to this measure. It is a misnomer so to designate it. It is not a funding or a refunding bill. It neither enlarges nor diminishes the existing powers of the President with respect to funding indebtedness due from the carriers to the Government. It has nothing whatsoever to do with that phase of the settlements which have been made, which are being made, and which are in the future to be made between the director general, representing the President, and the railroads.

In that connection, I think all Senators ought to have in mind just what authority the President now has with regard to funding indebtedness which is due from the railroad companies of the country to the Government. I quote section 207 of the transportation act of 1920 in order that Senators may all clearly understand under what authority the President is proceeding. I repeat that it is not proposed in this bill to disturb that authority in any way whatsoever. The section to which I have referred, quoting that part of it which is material to the present question, reads in this way:

SEC. 207. (a) As soon as practicable after the termination of Federal control the President shall ascertain (1) the amount of the indebtedness of each carrier to the United States, which may exist at the termination of Federal control, incurred for additions and betterments made during Federal control and properly chargeable to capital account; (2) the amount of indebtedness of such carrier to the United States otherwise incurred; and (3) the amount of the indebtedness of the United States to such carrier arising out of Federal control. The amount under clause (3)— may be set off against either or both of the amounts under clauses (1) and (2)—

Now, that is the amount due from the Government to the carrier—

That is to say, the indebtedness due from the carriers to the United States—

so far as deemed wise by the President, but only to the extent permitted under any contract now or hereafter made between such carrier and the United States in respect to the matters of Federal control, or, where no such contract exists, to the extent permitted under paragraph (b) of section 7 of the standard contract—

I will not digress to read section 7 of the standard contract, but will state that, in substance, it provided that the Government should pay to the carrier from time to time, and pay no more, on running account than was necessary to pay the customary dividends which the particular railroad may have been in the habit of declaring. Of course, I am not including interest upon bonds.

To the extent permitted under paragraph (b) of section 7 of the standard contract between the United States and the carriers relative to deductions from compensation: Provided, That such right of set-off shall not be so exercised as to prevent such carrier from having the sums required for interest, taxes, and other corporate charges and expenses referred to in paragraph (b) of section 7 of such standard contract—

That is the section which I have just mentioned—

accruing during Federal control, and also the sums required for dividends declared and paid during Federal control, including, also in addition, a sum equal to that proportion of such last dividend which the period between its payment and the termination of Federal control bears to the last regular dividend period: And provided further, That such right of set-off shall not be exercised unless there shall have first been paid such sums in addition as may be necessary to provide the carrier with working capital in amount not less than one twenty-fourth of its operating expenses for the calendar year 1919.

That was inserted because when the Government took over the railroads on the 1st of January, 1918, it took over all the working capital of the railroads—that is to say, all the cash on hand—and that amounted, we will say, to $250,000,000, or somewhere about that sum. I have read paragraph (a). Paragraph (b) of the same section reads:

Any remaining indebtedness—

Now, this is the authority upon which the President has been acting and is the authority upon which he will act in the future—

(b) Any remaining indebtedness of the carrier to the United States in respect to such additions and betterments shall, at the request of the carrier, be funded for a period of 10 years from the termination of Federal control, or a shorter period at the option of the carrier, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, subject to the right of such carrier to pay, on any interest-payment day, the whole or any part of such indebtedness. Any carrier obtaining the funding of such indebtedness as aforesaid shall give, in the discretion of the President, such security, in such form and upon such terms, as he may prescribe.

This is the statutory authority upon which the President is proceeding to wind up and settle the affairs of the railroads while under Federal control. It has nothing whatsoever to do with the interstate commerce act or with any regulation of commerce in that regard. The bill does not propose or even suggest that this authority be either enlarged or diminished.

I assume, and have assumed all the while, that the President will proceed under this section of the transportation act as he has been proceeding heretofore. Therefore I hope no Senator will hereafter look upon this measure or think of this measure as a funding or refunding proposal.

Second. It will, of course, be true in the future as it has been in the past that whatever part of the indebtedness from carriers is funded by the President under this authority increases by so much the amount immediately due to the carrier, and that will be just as true, no matter what may be the fate of this bill.

Third. The bill has nothing to do with the Interstate Commerce Commission. It does not affect its authority in any respect, nor does it control any result which may follow from the exercise of the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We neither grant additional authority to the commission, nor do we in this measure withdraw any authority which it now possesses.

Fourth. The bill has nothing to do with railway rates, and can have no possible effect upon them. I hope that this statement especially will be borne in mind as we proceed with the consideration of the bill. There is, as we all know, a widespread demand for a reduction in railway charges. I shall not attempt to argue that matter in connection with the bill. It may be that the rates are too high. I know that they are exceedingly burdensome and ought to be reduced, if it is possible to reduce them and continue our system of transportation; but I do not intend to go into that subject in connection with this measure because it has no relation whatsoever to the bill which the committee has reported.

Fifth. The bill takes no money from the Treasury. I have seen it stated repeatedly in the newspapers that this was either a proposal to take a large sum of money from the Treasury or that it would finally lead to a large appropriation to be paid from the sources of taxation. I would like Senators to be fully convinced that it neither takes money from the Treasury nor can it possibly lead to a demand upon the Treasury.

Sixth. It is not an amendment to the interstate commerce act. A great many people have treated it as though we were amending the interstate commerce act. That is not true. It is an amendment of the transportation act of 1920. The transportation act of 1920 is divided, roughly, into two parts: First, that part of the act which treats of the settlement between the Government and the railroad companies growing out of Federal control, growing out of the respective demands of the Government and of the railroads arising in the period of governmental control. The other part is an amendment to the interstate commerce act; but this bill does not relate to any part of the transportation act which amends or modifies in any way what we commonly know as the interstate commerce act.

Mr. President, I think these things will furnish a fair key to the examination of the bill.

In the affirmative—passing from the negative to the affirmative—it is a bill to give the President the authority to sell certain railroad securities which he has taken or may hereafter take in his dealings and settlements with the railroads. So far as the President is concerned, that is all that it does. I will point out presently what securities he has taken; but this simply gives him the authority to sell the securities that he has or that he may hereafter take as he makes settlements with the railroad companies, and use the proceeds of those sales for the payment of whatever sums may be found to be due on final settlement with the various common carriers of the country.

If any part of the proceeds shall remain after paying to the railroads what is found to be due to them, the balance is to be paid into the Treasury of the United States; and not only is the use of the proceeds of these securities limited in that way, but it is provided that the President, in selling them, must sell them without loss to the Government—that is, he must sell them at the price at which he took them from the carriers—and he must sell them without recourse to the Government, so that there is no possibility whatever of loss to the Government in the transaction which it is proposed to carry out.

I may say in this connection that the President had until recently $311,000,000 of railroad securities taken under the provisions of the transportation act and another act which preceded it; I think it was the act of 1919. He has authority to sell those securities. They consist of car-trust equipment certificates. They represent the amount due from the carriers to the Government on account of 100,000 freight cars and 4,000 locomotives which were bought by the director general, and near the close of Federal control were allocated to the various railroad companies.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMITH. It was 2,000 locomotives, was it not, in place of 4,000?

Mr. CUMMINS. It may be so. Did I say 4,000?

Mr. SMITH. Yes. I think the Senator will find that it was 2,000 in place of 4,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it is 2,000 instead of 4,000. At any rate, the total amount of the car-trust certificates was, as I remember, $383,000,000, or something of that kind.

Mr. SMITH. The exact figure was $311,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I think the Senator from South Carolina is mistaken about that.

Mr. SMITH. I have just had a letter from the director general on the subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; that is the amount that the Government took, but $72,000,000 of these certificates, in round numbers, were sold outside for cash, and the railroads paid to the Government in cash that sum of money upon this indebtedness, and the Government took securities for about $311,000,000.

But I proceed. With respect to other securities taken by the Government in the course of Federal control and in the settlements which have been made, the President has no authority to sell, and this bill is simply to give him the authority to sell the certificates that the law does not now provide for, just as he has the authority to sell the $311,000,000 car-trust equipment certificates.

I can not imagine any objection to that authority. Certainly the Government of the United States does not want to hold them indefinitely, and if the President can dispose of them without loss to the Government and without any recourse upon the Government it would seem the part of wise economy and wise administration to dispose of just as many of them as he can put upon the market.

Affirmatively, the bill provides that the War Finance Corporation may buy from the President these securities upon the terms which we have stated for them by the President. I shall comment a little later upon one of the amendments which we have made to the House bill.

The House bill provided in one paragraph that the President could sell and the War Finance Corporation could buy these securities. The War Finance Corporation now has no authority to buy such securities. The committee thought it better that the President should be given the authority to sell to anybody, to any organization, to any market that might be willing to buy them, and not to limit the authority of the President to sell to the War Finance Corporation. I can see no reason whatever for limiting the authority of the President to sell to one purchaser, and therefore one of our amendments is to give the President authority generally to sell, and he can employ any agency that he sees fit for the negotiation of that kind of transaction; and we have eliminated from the provision of the House bill giving the War Finance Corporation the power to buy the words that would also give the President the authority to sell. The right of the War Finance Corporation to buy is limited, I think, to $500,000,000, and there is a further provision in the bill that it shall not use any of its assets or its resources for the purpose of purchasing these securities that would interfere with or impede in any way its activities under what is known as the Agricultural bill, which charges the War Finance Corporation with the duty of helping to finance the agricultural transactions of the country.

This is all there is to this bill. There is nothing else in the bill; and I shall now proceed to give very briefly the situation as it was on the 1st of March, 1920, when the railroads were returned to the owners, and as it was on the 1st day of October, 1921. I mention the 1st day of October, 1921, because the report of the committee was made before the 1st of November; and while I have the figures, and shall use them, bringing the situation down to the 1st of November, 1921, so that our report may be understood, I intend for the present to use the situation as it existed on the 1st day of October, 1921.

I bring your attention now to the 1st of March, 1920, the date upon which these properties were returned.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. It follows from what the Senator has said that the United States is in the position of a debtor who has bills receivable and little ready cash with which to pay its debts; and this bill is simply authorizing this debtor, the United States, to sell or dispose of its bills receivable to get cash where-with to pay the debt that it owes to the railroads.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Ohio has stated it with great succinctness and with absolute accuracy.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, Mr. President, may I put a further question?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. It has been frequently said, through the press and in committee and elsewhere, that this bill was authorizing a mere hand-out to the railroads. I want to ask the Senator whether in any sense it is conferring upon the railroads any favor other than to pay debts, after they are settled, which are owing by the Government to the railroads?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not. There is nothing in the bill that can be construed into any gratuity or loan or advantage, even, to the railroad companies. It is true that the authority which the President may exercise under section 207 of the transportation act he can exercise so as to advantage the railroads. That is, he can postpone the payment of certain of the indebtedness due from the railroads to the Government; but while that affects the amount which the Government must presently pay to the railroads, it has nothing whatever to do with this bill.

If the Congress wants to take away from the President the authority which it has granted him in that respect, that is one thing; but there is no proposal in this bill either to take it away or to enlarge it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course I defer to the superior knowledge of the chairman and to the Senator upon my left, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]; this is a matter as to which they have given very great attention. But may I inquire of the Senator whether it is entirely accurate to put the case in the light suggested by the Senator from Ohio in his first interrogatory? Would it not be more accurate to say that the railroads, as the accounts have been balanced to date, are indebted to the United States in a very large sum, and the United States by the same process of balancing accounts is indebted to the railroads; that instead of attempting to balance those accounts—that is, to have the railroads pay what they owe the Government—we propose to have the Government pay the railroads, and to defer the time when the railroads pay the Government?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not by this bill.

Mr. KING. Would not that be the effect of the passage of this bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all. We gave the President the power to extend the time for the repayment of the indebtedness due from the railroad companies to the Government, created in a certain way, in 1920. If the Congress desires to take that power from the President, that is one thing; but I am speaking now of this bill. This bill does not change his authority with regard to making those extensions. It is true that in just so far as he does extend the time to the railroad companies upon their indebtedness to the Government in just so much the amount that the Government must presently pay to the railroads is increased, and I think that was the thought in the mind of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMITH. Following out the idea suggested by the Senator from Utah, the Senator who has the bill in charge recognizes that there is this difference, for which this bill provides; unamended the law would give the President the right to accept securities from the railroads and there would be no realization of cash. For certain reasons, which we discussed in the committee, no authority was given to the President to sell or otherwise dispose of those securities. This would give him the right to do that in the open market or through the War Finance Corporation, and the proceeds obtained from the sales would then be in the form of ready cash to meet the obligations of the Government to the railroads. There is that distinction between the situation as it would be if this bill should become law and the old condition. In other words, it gives the Government the power of securing in cash the money to meet its obligations to the railroads, which it would not have if this bill did not pass.

Mr. KING. It makes the Government a sort of guarantor of the bonds of the railroads, does it not?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all; in no way whatever.

Mr. KING. By passing the bonds to the Government it is presumed the Government will find a market for them, whereas the railroads, independent of the Government, might be unable to find a market.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Government finds a market for them and can sell them at par without recourse, why in the world should it not do so? Why should we want to keep a security which we can sell, without any recourse upon the Government, at the price at which we took it?

Mr. POMERENE. One of the amendments proposed by the committee and now before the Senate expressly provides that these bonds shall be sold without recourse.

Mr. CUMMINS. In regard to the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina, as he stated it, I quite accept it; but I do not see any difference between that suggestion and the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio; at least, it is not apparent to me now.

I return now to the point at which I was diverted. What was the situation on the 1st of March, 1920? The railroads of the country as a whole were indebted to the Government—though, of course, the debts were individual—for permanent additions and betterments to their property, for expenditures during the 26 months of Federal control, to the amount of $1,144,000,000. That is certain; there is no dispute about that. Neither the railroads nor the Government question it; so that we have one certain starting point.

I repeat, on the 1st of March, 1920, the railroads owed the Government $1,144,000,000, in round numbers, for expenditures made by the Government during Federal control for additions and betterments, which should be charged, properly, to capital account.

On the other hand, taking the railroads all together as before, the Government owed them an uncertain amount. No one knew on the 1st of March, 1920, how much the Government owed the railroads. That has been ascertained little by little and month after month, through long, difficult, and intricate settlements, and it now appears that from the standpoint of to-day the railroads claimed that the Government owed them a billion one hundred million dollars after crediting the sums advanced for additions and betterments for the cash taken over by the Government at the time the Government assumed possession of the railroads, for compensation which had not been paid, as well as for what is generally termed undermaintenance. That is from the standpoint of the railroads.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, what are the elements of the railroad claim?

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, very much the larger element was the compensation which the Government had agreed by contract to pay the railroads.

Mr. NELSON. For the use of the railroads?

Mr. CUMMINS. For the use of the railroads.

Mr. NELSON. I thought it involved the cost of the transportation of military supplies and troops.

Mr. CUMMINS. It did involve that to some degree, and I will speak of that hereafter. I will try to make that perfectly clear.

Some of the claims of the railroads have not been filed yet, but judging from the past the railroads claim now that at the close of Federal control the Government owed them somewhere between a billion dollars and a billion two hundred million, and this after the Government expenditures for additions and betterments were taken care of.

The Government, however, under its interpretation of certain clauses of the contract which existed between it and the railroads, claims that it did not owe the railroads more than about $300,000,000—possibly a little less than that—of the balance of about one billion, to which I have referred, and the question of ascertaining what the Government owed the railroads under the Federal control act, and under the contracts which had been made between the Government and the railroads, has been the subject of continual labor and investigation from the 1st of March, 1920, until the present time, and little by little the Government is settling with the railroads, and up to this time, road claims in final settlements made upon the basis I am about to suggest, it has allowed something less than 35 per cent of the amount of the balance after taking credit for amounts due from the railroads claimed by the companies.

Having made that statement concerning the condition as it existed on the 1st of March, 1920, when the railroads were returned to their owners, I now desire to refer to a table which was prepared for the committee by the director general as of October 1, 1921, which will show what he and his predecessors have done since the roads were returned.

On the 1st of October, 1921, the Government had settled claims which had been asserted by the railroads amounting to $387,017,000. Those claims are now out of the way, having been settled by the Government. The amount paid in cash by the Government prior to October 1 in settling claims of the carriers was $117,715,000. So that with respect to those particular railroads the Government has settled with them for 30.4 per cent of the amounts after making the credits I have mentioned claimed by them.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator said the Government had settled with the railroads. Does the Senator mean by that that the Government has paid the railroads that amount?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly; it has paid the railroads that amount in cash, and has deducted the sums due from those carriers to the Government. These claims are all settled.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. As to whether or not they did deduct from the railroads' claims the amount due the Government from the roads, or paid the cash, depended largely on the financial condition of the road.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall presently show how much has been deducted.

Mr. STANLEY. I have been under the impression up to this time that none of the roads had made any payments in cash to the Government under any of the settlements.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Government has in each instance owed the railroads more than the railroads owed the Government, I think.

Mr. STANLEY. That is not what I mean. I know of no instance where the railroad is a debtor to the Government that it has paid its indebtedness in cash, or where the railroad owes the Government and the Government owes the railroad the Government pays cash and the railroad funds its debt.

Mr. CUMMINS. That depends. How much does the Senator think has been funded?

Mr. STANLEY. I do not know that that is the case.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will give that. I have all that information right here.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I would like to make an inquiry of the Senator as he proceeds. How did the Government get possession of these collateral securities?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will come to that in a moment. The Government shortly after the 1st of March, 1920, took originally the car-trust equipment certificates. That reduced the amount which the railroads owed the Government and which could be set off by something like $385,000,000. The mileage of the roads settled with up to October 1 was 90,944 miles. That is a little more than one-third of the entire mileage of the railroads operated by the Government.

To repeat, the advances made by the Government for additions and betterments during the period of Federal control was $1,144,000,000. We will see how that account comes out. Shortly after the 1st of March, 1920, and not only under that act but under an act which had been passed before, the payments for these 100,000 cars and 2,000 locomotives was made by issuing a car trust, not a general one and not applicable to all the railroads, but to the individual roads involved. That amounted on the whole to $381,649,000. Of that issue the Government took from the railroads about $311,000,000, and the railroads sold the remaining certificates and paid the Government cash to the extent of the sum of money thus realized or applied it on their account, which is the same thing. That left due from the carriers to the Government on account of capital expenditures $763,031,625. That is what was due on the 1st of October so far as that transaction is concerned. In the meanwhile there had been funded, exclusive of the car-trust certificates, of the indebtedness due from the carriers to the Government, $60,925,000. Deducting that from the sum I mentioned a moment ago, it left a balance on the 1st day of October, 1921, of $702,106,000 due from the railroads to the Government.

The director general says that if no funding occurs hereafter, if the President sees fit not to fund any part of the indebtedness due in settlements to be made hereafter, there will be due from the Government to the railroads for compensation, for under maintenance admitted by the Government, and for other items, $279,851,000.

That sum has been reduced because recently the Government has sold $100,000,000 of the car-trust certificates and has received the pay for them, and the director general is using that fund, as well as the funds which we have appropriated for his use, for the discharge of the claims due from the Government to the railroads.

Now I return to the question suggested by the Senator from North Carolina. The securities on hand on the 1st of August, 1921—the director general divides the report this way because he gave his testimony before the Interstate Commerce Committee on the 1st of August, shown on page 86, Part I, of the Interstate Commerce Committee reports—amounted to $438,577,000. He has taken, after August 1 and up to October 1, $11,590,000 of equipment trust certificates and $3,550,000 other certificates, making a total in the hands of the President on the 1st of October, not reckoning the sale of the car-trust certificates, of $453,718,038. The car-trust certificates sold up to October 1 amounted to $99,662,000. Deducting that sum from the former account, it leaves on hand on the 1st of October in the hands of the President $354,056,038.08.

Even if there were no funding operation at all contemplated, the President must either sell enough of these securities to pay what is due the railroads, or we must appropriate the money from the Treasury. The director general has said that if all the claims were settled according to the plan which he has adopted—that is, entirely eliminating what is generally known as the inefficiency of labor claims, a policy which has been adopted from the beginning with the Railroad Administration—if there is no funding in the future we will owe the railroads $279,851,000. We have not the money to pay it.

Mr. NELSON. Is that over and above the claims that the railroads owe the Government?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, yes; that is a final settlement. That would be a final settlement. If we were closing up with the railroads as of the 1st of October, 1921—and these figures are made up as of that date—and had not funded a single dollar of indebtedness other than the funding that took place as I have already said, and if every claim made by the Government with regard to the amount due from the Government to the railroads were determined in its favor, we would still owe the railroads on the 1st of October $279,851,000.

Mr. NELSON. But, if the Senator will allow me, I do not quite comprehend it because the Senator a moment ago stated that the aggregate of our claims against the railroads for permanent improvements and betterments was $1,144,000,000. Then a moment later he stated that the claims of the railroads against the Government aggregated $1,100,000,000, or something like that.

Mr. CUMMINS. That was the amount of the claims made by the railroads.

Mr. NELSON. Yes. If that is so, how can the Senator figure out that we still owe the railroads $230,000,000? Ought not one account of $1,144,000,000 to balance an account of $1,100,000,000? How does the Senator make that out? Will he allow me to go a step further—

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator will allow me to answer at that point, the Senator forgets possibly my statement that the Government had funded already of these claims of the Government against the railroads about $450,000,000.

Mr. NELSON. No; but in connection with that the Senator spoke of having made settlements with certain roads. In making those settlements have the claims which the Government had against those railroads been considered and set off against the claims of the railroads?

Mr. CUMMINS. I tried to explain that.

Mr. NELSON. I could not get that clearly from the Senator's statement. In the adjustments which they have made with certain railroads have they given credit for our claims against the railroads? That did not appear clear from the Senator's statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I can make it perfectly clear. The $381,000,000 due to the Government on account of engines and cars has been funded. That reduced the claim of the Government against the railroads that could be set off, in round numbers, to $700,000,000. In making those settlements and in various ways we have also funded $60,925,000 of the amount due from the railroads to the Government. That has already been done. That reduced the claim of the Government against the railroads to that amount.

Mr. NELSON. As I understand the Senator, if he will allow me to interrupt him again, after giving us full credit against the railroad companies for all that we claim against them, to wit, $1,144,000,000, we still owe $200,000,000 or more?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I do not mean that because we have extended part of the indebtedness; we have extended nearly $500,000,000 of that indebtedness.

Mr. NELSON. Extended it how?

Mr. CUMMINS. Extended the time.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, extended the time to the railroads?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, we have not discharged the indebtedness. We have simply extended the time.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator says we have extended the time as to nearly $500,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. Nearly that.

Mr. NELSON. We have given the railroad companies time for paying that. Then if we had had credit for this $230,000,000 and more to which the Senator referred the companies would still be owing us something, would they not?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; not according to the statement of the director general which I have here. One of the last estimates in that statement is this:

Estimated amount to be paid carriers October 1, 1921: Final settlement, exclusive of funding, $279,851,593.55.

I am not much of an expert bookkeeper.

Mr. NELSON. I am not an expert, but what I want to say to the Senator is this: I am asking these questions for information and not to embarrass anyone.

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, I appreciate that.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator maintain that after allowing all our claims against the railroads—the whole claim of $1,144,000,000—and after giving us credit for all that amount we will still owe the railroads $230,000,000 and more?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is what the director general says. In that connection I may read a letter upon that point which I have received from the director general.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me further, he said a moment ago that we had extended the time for the payment by the railroads of $500,000,000 due the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not quite $500,000,000.

Mr. NELSON. That claim against the railroads is still pending, with that extension of time. I do not see how, having extended the time for the payment by the railroads of the $500,000,000 which they owe us, the Senator can say that we still owe the railroad companies $230,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is what the director general says.

Mr. NELSON. I can not help that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The director general ought to know as much about the matter as does any other one person. It seems to me that his statement is entirely consistent with what I have already called attention to.

Mr. NELSON. That may be, but I regret that I can not comprehend it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will read a memorandum that I have from the director general. His letter to me reads as follows:

In accordance with your request of a few days ago, I am inclosing you memorandum showing in brief the progress which the United States Railroad Administration is making in the matter of final settlements, and a brief statement as to the situation of the claims for additions and betterments. If you desire any more detailed information, please advise, and I will be glad to furnish it to you.

The director general has headed his memorandum concerning those subjects:

Memorandum as to progress in the matter of final settlement made by the Railroad Administration and disposition of claims for additions and betterments properly chargeable to capital account, as of October 1, 1921.

The memorandum proceeds:

I.

CLAIMS FILED.

Up to October 1, 1921, an aggregate of $856,033,588.65 in claims had been filed by sundry carriers on final settlement with the United States Railroad Administration. The total mileage recognized as under Federal control was 241,000 miles. Claims filed represent a total mileage of 189,394 miles, or 78.705 per cent of the total mileage under Federal control.

If the remaining percentage of mileage files claims on the same basis as those already filed, the total claims that will be filed against the Railroad Administration will aggregate $1,087,633,476.06.

II.

CLAIMS SETTLED.

The amount of claims on final settlement adjusted up to October 1, 1921, aggregates $387,017,099.12. The mileage for which claims have been settled is 90,944 miles, or 47.907 per cent of the mileage of all roads that have filed claims, and 37.705 per cent of the total mileage of all roads under Federal control. The amount paid in settlement of these claims is $117,715,840.43, or 30.416 per cent of the amount claimed.

This indicates that the Railroad Administration has up to this time settled nearly 50 per cent of the claims which have been filed, and when it is understood that substantially all of these settlements have been made since the 1st of January, 1921, you will appreciate the progress we are making in the matter of final settlement.

III.

ADDITIONS AND BETTERMENTS.

The total expenditures by the Railroad Administration during Federal control for additions and betterments properly chargeable to capital account aggregated $1,144,681,582.39.

Then the director general proceeded to say:

Of this amount, $381,649,957.12 represents allocated equipment (100,000 freight cars and 2,000 locomotives), and this amount has been taken care of by equipment trust certificates issued by the respective carriers or payment of the equipment, in some instances, in cash. This leaves a balance of $763,031,511.27 to be taken care of in final settlement, either by collecting the amount due from each carrier or refraining from setting off on the part of the Government claims for additions and betterments and extending through the operation of funding the debts due from the carriers on this account.

In the final settlements that have been made up to October 1, 1921, as shown in paragraph 2 of this memorandum, there have been included claims for additions and betterments aggregating $170,756,035.16. Of this amount, $137,313,035.16 has been collected in the process of final settlement and $33,443,000 has been funded.

Another memorandum brings that down to date. I will only read the latter part of this memorandum, because it tends to answer the question propounded by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], which is a very proper one:

Based upon the experience of settlements heretofore made it is the judgment of the Railroad Administration that the liabilities of the Railroad Administration, exclusive of a general plan of funding—

That is assuming, of course, that no funding takes place—can be settled for an additional $100,000,000. The sale of equipment trust certificates above described has reduced the estimate made before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate from $200,000,000 to $100,000,000.

The director general is speaking here in round numbers, and I think, of course, the Senate will understand that he has on hand now considerably over $100,000,000 not yet expended in settlements. He here states that if we do not fund any part of the indebtedness in the future it will take more than $100,000,000 in excess of the amount he has on hand in order to discharge the obligations of the Government to the carriers.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator from Iowa proceeds may I ask a question? I can not comprehend how the Government owes the railroads and how at the same time the railroads owe the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. We voted for a law which authorized the President to enter into a contract to pay the railroads annually something over $900,000,000. The Senator from North Carolina voted for that bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Some of us voted against it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I voted against it, but I am one of a very few who did so. Every year during which the Government operated the railroads it became indebted to them for $900,000,000 and more as compensation for the use of their property.

In addition to that, the act to which I refer provided that the railroads should be returned to their owners, whenever they were returned, in as good condition as when they were taken by the Government.

In addition to that, the President, without any authority whatever, in my judgment, took possession not only of all the personal property of the railroads, but all the money which the railroads had on hand, and, of course, it becomes our duty, when we return the railroads, to give them back that money. Those are the three items under which claims on the part of the railroads against the Government arise.

Mr. OVERMAN. We owe the railroads, of course, but how do the railroads owe us?

Mr. CUMMINS. The railroads owe us because we had provided that during Federal control the Government could expend in additions and betterments, in order to keep the properties in safe and sound condition, so that they might be operated to advantage, any amount of money that the Government might see fit; and the Government did expend during the 26 months of Federal control the sum of $1,144,000,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is our indebtedness to the railroads, of course.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; it is the indebtedness of the railroads to the Government, because the railroads agreed to repay that sum of money; they were bound to repay it, because it was expended upon their property, and expended under the provisions of the law which gave the President the right to expend the money which was necessary to keep up the railroads.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, as I see it, exactly the same condition would arise if the Senator from North Carolina had rented a building for a stipulated sum to the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Iowa were under obligations to keep that building in as good condition during his tenancy as he found it to be at the beginning of his tenancy.

Mr. OVERMAN. That would be part of my obligation.

Mr. STANLEY. That would be part of the Senator's obligation; but we will suppose he has not the money to put in a pane of glass or repair a chimney or fix an elevator—

Mr. OVERMAN. And I should borrow money from the tenant to do it?

Mr. STANLEY. No, sir. The tenant goes ahead and puts in these repairs for you. He says, "All right, Senator; if you have not the money to put a new roof on this house or to paint it, I will go ahead and keep it in repair, and at the end of the time this matter can be taken up and adjusted." Now, the Government says to the railroads, "You would not repair these roads; you did not have the money to do it; but we renewed the tracks and rights of way and put in terminals and built you cars." The railroads have thousands and tens of thousands of cars and locomotives and new terminals and all sorts of things that the Government provided for them. Now they are indebted to us for that amount of money, but they propose to take a cash payment for all that we owe them and then to give us securities with an unlimited extension of time for all they owe us.

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, no; not unlimited.

Mr. STANLEY. It will be unlimited, because they will keep on extending them. I mean that will be the result. Of course, these obligations have a certain time limit to start with, but they all end in a revolving fund.

Mr. CUMMINS. That will depend, of course, upon the temper of Congress at that time, but what the Senator from North Carolina had in his mind was really an interesting suggestion. Contrary to the usual relations between owner and tenant, by the law we gave the tenant the right to determine what improvements should be put upon the property. Customarily, the owner reserves the right to determine what improvements shall be made upon the property, but in the exigency of the war the high necessity of keeping the roads in the most efficient condition we gave to the tenant, the Government, the right to determine what improvements should be made.

Mr. President, my discussion of the bill has been much more prolonged than I intended it should be. I am trying only to give the fairest and the fullest understanding of this matter that I can give; and I want all Senators to ask me questions for any information that may be in my possession, but in view of the circumstances, if it is agreeable to the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the bill shall now be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes I should like to ask him a few questions. I was hoping that the Senator would consider, for our information, that provision of the bill which authorizes the War Finance Corporation to make loans to railroad companies—section 3 of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do intend to do it. I have not yet reached that point. I am discussing the general features of the situation. Before I finish I intend to go carefully and analytically into the bill and the amendments that we have proposed; but I should very much prefer to suspend at this moment and resume my discussion of it when we again take up the business of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator, before he discontinues, tell us about this matter: I have no doubt that all Senators have felt some considerable concern about the matter of the settlement of these disputed claims. As I gather from the Senator, adjustments have been made to the amount of $300,000,000, or thereabouts. Can the Senator tell us just how these adjustments are made, and how well equipped the Railroad Administration is to meet those claims? What is the Senator's own opinion concerning the reasonableness of the adjustments that have been made?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Railroad Administration office is as well equipped with accountants, actuaries, and lawyers as any department in Washington. It happens at the present moment that the head of the administration is Mr. James C. Davis, a lawyer of my own State. I am not acquainted with any lawyer more painstaking in his methods or more capable in his general work; and the fact that the Railroad Administration has cut down the claims of the railroads from a billion dollars or more, largely for undermaintenance—I am not now speaking of other items—to something like $400,000,000, or less than $400,000,000, would indicate very great care. I know personally that they examine with the utmost scrutiny all the items that are presented in the claims of the railroads.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. When did Mr. Davis first go with the Railroad Administration, and in what capacity?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. Davis came to Washington at the suggestion of Judge Payne, who was then director general. Judge Payne appointed him general counsel of the Railroad Administration, and when Judge Payne retired on the 4th of March of the present year from the office of Secretary of the Interior he retired also as director general, and Mr. Davis was appointed in his stead.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What salaries do he and his principal assistants get?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have never asked, and I do not know.

Monday, November 14, 1921.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in addressing the Senate upon the bill upon a former occasion, I endeavored to make it perfectly clear that the bill had no relation whatever to the provisions of the interstate commerce act; that it did not relate in any form or manner to railway rates or charges for railway services; that all those considerations which will arise presently, for there are many bills pending at the present time suggesting various modifications of the interstate commerce act, were entirely foreign to the scope and the purposes of the present bill, which is simply to give to the President the authority to dispose of securities which come to him in settling up the affairs of Federal control so that he may be able to pay to the railroad companies whatever sums may be found to be due them upon the accounting which is now in process between the director general and the railroads.

Toward the close of my observations the other day I presented a table, which is attached to the report of the committee, which table had been prepared by the director general and which indicated from the present standpoint, assuming that matters will go in the future as they have in the past and assuming that not one additional penny of expenditures for additions and betterments made during Federal control are funded, that there will be due from the Government to the railroads when the last settlement shall have been made the sum of $279,000,000, and that it will be necessary, as everyone will concede, to provide some method for the payment of an unquestioned, undoubted obligation from the Government to the railroads, entered into not only through the law which we passed in March, 1918, but created by the contracts which were made between the Government and the railroads.

It is obvious that in so far as the President may fund or extend the time for the payment of the indebtedness which still remains from the railroads to the Government, by just that amount the sum of $279,000,000 will be increased.

I may add that the figures that I am giving relate to October 1, 1921. My friend from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who is a member of the committee, will at a later time bring that computation down to November 1, 1921, although the relation between the statistics which he will present and those I am now presenting will be unchanged.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] interrogated me toward the close of my remarks on Wednesday last with regard to the consistency of certain items which appear in the exhibit which I attached to the report and which had been prepared by the director general. I have reviewed the response which I then made to the Senator from Minnesota, and while that response is perfectly clear to me, for I have grown up with the subject, in a way, and am almost as familiar with it as is the director general, I can easily see that the table is not in sufficient detail to be perfectly clear to one who has simply heard it read.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator has alluded to a contract between the Government and the railroads. Of course, the contract should be kept, but I should like to ask him whether the contract provides that we shall pay the railroads cash for what we owe them and give them credit for what they owe us?

Mr. CUMMINS. In part it does and in part it does not.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I should be very glad to hear the Senator from Iowa as to that aspect of the contract.

Mr. CUMMINS. Since my former discussion of the matter I have again conferred with the director general and have suggested to him the difficulty that was experienced by some Senators—and I think that there was a real difficulty—in understanding the situation. He has sent me a letter, which I desire to read, which I think will be found so clear and explicit that it can not be misunderstood. The letter is addressed to me as chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, and reads:

MY DEAR SENATOR: I want to give you a word of explanation as to the statement of account attached to your report on House bill 8331, and especially as to how the balance in cash that will be required to complete the final settlements between the Railroad Administration and the carriers, as of October 1, 1921, $279,851,593.55 is arrived at.

In the accounts which the Railroad Administration has with each carrier, the amount due the administration for additions and betterments appears as a charge against each carrier, so that estimates made by the Railroad Administration as to the funds necessary to complete final settlement have always been based upon collecting from the carriers the amount of the additions and betterments, and the sum stated as necessary to conclude final settlements is in excess of the balance due for additions and betterments.

Explaining somewhat in detail, March 1, 1920, at the close of Federal control, the addition and betterment account of the Railroad Administration against the carriers aggregated $1,144,681,582.39. The expenditure for equipment aggregated $381,649,957.12—

That is, that part of the expenditure for additions and betterments represented by the purchase of equipment as distinguished from fixtures and other things of that character amounted to the sum of $381,649,957.12.

As this expenditure was taken care of in the equipment trust certificates, this amount should be deducted from the aggregate expenditure, and leaves a balance of additions and betterments to be otherwise disposed of aggregating $763,031,625.27.

Prior to any final settlements, and largely in the earlier part of Federal control, there was special assistance given some of the carriers in the way of funding (Baltimore & Ohio, $9,000,000; Boston & Maine, $8,000,000; Erie, $3,500,000; New York, New Haven & Hartford, $17,000,000) aggregating $37,500,000, which, deducted from the $763,031,625.27, leaves a balance of additions and betterments of $725,506,625.27.

Up to October 30, 1921, final settlements were made of claims aggregating $387,017,099.12, and in these settlements $170,756,035.16 of additions and betterments were disposed of, $137,313,035.16 being collected from the carriers—

That is, the railroads paid that sum of money to the Government by having the amounts due from the Government to the railroads deducted.

That is, this amount was charged to them and deducted in the final settlements; otherwise the cash payment to the carriers would have been increased by the amount of additions and betterments so collected, and $33,443,000 was funded as a part of and in connection with the final settlement.

These two items make an aggregate of $170,756,035.16, which, deducted from the $725,506,625.27 above stated, left a balance as of October 1, 1921, of $554,850,590.11 of additions and betterments to be disposed of in final settlement.

That was the amount that was on October 1 of the present year estimated to be due from the railroad companies to the Government for additions and betterments made during Federal control.

It is estimated by the Railroad Administration that, as of October 1, 1921, there is due the carriers from the Government on final accounting, and this includes compensation, money taken over, maintenance of way and structures, maintenance of equipment, depreciation, and all other items, exclusive of additions and betterments, $834,702,183.66.

That is the amount estimated by the Director General as of October 1 that is due from the Government to the railroads; that is the admitted indebtedness due from the Government to the railroads.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. By what method was the depreciation referred to in the letter being read by the Senator ascertained?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. What is the amount of such depreciation?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not inquired into that subject sufficiently to be able to answer the Senator from Georgia. I assume that the Railroad Administration adopted for reckoning depreciation the rules which have long been established by the Interstate Commerce Commission; but I am unable, without reference to those rules, to answer the Senator from Georgia definitely.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Nor to give the amount of that item?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not the amount of that item. The letter from the director general continues:

Deducting the balance of additions and betterments undisposed of as of October 1, 1921, $554,850,590.11, leaves a balance of cash required for the completion of final settlements, based upon collecting from the several carriers the amount charged against them on account of additions and betterments, $279,851,593.55.

That is the sum I named when I formerly addressed the Senate and which is shown in the table of the director general, which is attached to the committee report.

In all estimates of amounts necessary to conclude final settlements, such estimates have always been based upon the assumption that the additions and betterments, which, exclusive of the equipment trust certificates, aggregated $763,031,625.27, would be collected from the carriers in final settlement.

I am always apprehensive that some confusion may exist because of differences in aggregate amounts given at different times. For instance, comparing the statement I made before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, the statement herewith submitted, as of October 1, 1921, and some subsequent statements that I have made as of November 1, it must always be borne in mind that in the process of liquidation these balances are constantly changing from month to month by reason of the fact that final adjustments are being completed almost daily.

In this particular statement I am calling attention to a specific item of $37,500,000, which represents funding completed by the Railroad Administration before my connection with it. In some statements heretofore made we have included this $37,500,000 in the aggregate of funding made.

Senators will remember that this refers to the loans made by the Government to the Baltimore & Ohio, the New York, New Haven & Hartford, the Erie, and the Boston & Maine. Those were operations that occurred long before Federal control ceased.

The director general proceeds:

This does not change the balances in any particular, but, as a matter of fact, the $37,500,000 was funded prior to final settlements, and to be exactly accurate should receive the special consideration which I have given it.

Mr. President, I think that the letter I have just read makes the whole subject so entirely clear that no one will question the conclusion, and the conclusion is that if there is no funding in the future at all—that is, if the Government does not extend to any of the railroads the indebtedness due from them to it—we will still be required to pay from time to time sums which in the aggregate will amount to more than $279,000,000.

At the present moment the Railroad Administration has on hand—I am now bringing it down to November 1—something like $145,000,000; so that in any event if the President does not consider it wise to extend the time for the railroads upon a single additional dollar of indebtedness from them to it, we must make provision for the payment to the railroads of something like $125,000,000 or $130,000,000.

I digress here to say that if the President does in the future as he has in the past exercise his authority in favor of funding a portion of the indebtedness due from the railroads to the Government, this sum will be increased by just the amount of that process of funding.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. In order that I may understand the Senator's explanation better, I should like to ask him a question. When he speaks of funding a portion of the debt that the railroads owe to the Government, I presume he means that the time of payment has been extended, and bonds or other obligations have been taken.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has stated it correctly.

Mr. NORRIS. The reason why this apparent discrepancy exists, as shown by the interrogatories the other day of the Senator from Minnesota, as I understand, is that while at the beginning the railroads owed the Government more than the Government owed the railroads, the change came about, and now the Government owes the railroads more than the railroads owe the Government, because a portion of the debt owed by the railroads to the Government was funded; that is, the time of payment was extended for obligations that were taken in making such funding. Is that right?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; not quite right.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would make that plain.

Mr. CUMMINS. The first part of the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska is correct; but it is not correct to say that when Federal control ceased on the 1st of March, 1920, the railroads owed the Government as much or substantially as much as the Government owed the railroads.

Mr. NORRIS. I was here, and heard all that the Senator from Minnesota said, and was very much interested in it, and I was in accord with the idea that the Senator had, because I did not think that explanation appeared to be plain from the table that the Senator put in the Record. The Senator from Minnesota said, as I remember, that there was due to the Government from the railroads, at the time Federal control ceased, $1,144,000,000, I think—I am speaking from memory—

Mr. CUMMINS. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. And that there was due from the Government to the railroads one billion and about one hundred million dollars. Those were the figures as I remember them, and they were what led the Senator from Minnesota astray and led me astray, unless the explanation of the funding operations makes it clear.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand. The table is accurate but susceptible of being misunderstood. That is to say there is in the statement the possibility of reaching just that conclusion; and that is the reason why I have had the director general write this additional letter and present another statement which, agreeing with the former one perfectly, sets out the matter in detail. The fact is that at the close of Federal control the Government owed the railroads, from its present point of view and its present interpretation of the contract, a sum approximating $1,400,000,000; and from the railroads' point of view, with their interpretation of the contract, and after giving credit to the Government for all the amounts due from them to the Government, the Government still owed them more than a billion dollars. The uncertain part of it all has been in the claims of the railroads for undermaintenance; for the failure, as they allege, on the part of the Government to maintain the properties in as good condition as they were in when they were taken.

There has been no controversy with regard to the amount of compensation. Under the bill that was passed in March, 1918, we agreed to pay the railroads as a whole more than $900,000,000 a year, and that and the money taken over at the time the railroads were surrendered to the Government and the admitted undermaintenance make up chiefly the sums of money due from the Government to the railroads; but you can take it as absolutely true that on October 1, as nearly as could be estimated, if the Government shall in the future require the payment of all the money now due from the railroads on account of additions and betterments, we would still owe the railroads more than $279,000,000. We have not the money with which to pay it, and we shall either have to dispose of a part of the securities which the President now holds or we must make an appropriation with which to pay it; and, as I remarked the other day, in that alternative I think there can be no difference of opinion as to the wisdom of disposing of the securities, assuming that the President can and does, as the bill provides, dispose of them without loss; that is, at the par at which the Government took them and without recourse upon the Government.

With that statement, Mr. President, I ask that the letter which I have just read, and the accompanying statement, which simply puts in tabular form the contents of the letter, shall be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,

Washington, November 12, 1921.

Hon. A. B. CUMMINS,

Chairman Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I want to give you a word of explanation as to the statement of account attached to your report on H. R. 8331, and especially as to how the balance in cash that will be required to complete the final settlements between the Railroad Administration and the carriers, as of October 1, 1921, $279,851,593.55, is arrived at.

In the accounts which the Railroad Administration has with each carrier, the amount due the administration for additions and betterments appears as a charge against such carrier, so that estimates made by the Railroad Administration as to the funds necessary to complete final settlements have always been based upon collecting from the carriers the amount of the additions and betterments, and the sum stated as necessary to conclude final settlements is in excess of the balance due for additions and betterments.

Explaining somewhat in detail, March 1, 1920, at the close of Federal control, the addition and betterment account of the Railroad Administration against the carriers aggregated $1,144,681,582.39. The expenditure for equipment aggregated $381,649,957.12. As this expenditure was taken care of in the equipment trust certificates, this amount should be deducted from the aggregate expenditure, and leaves a balance of additions and betterments to be otherwise disposed of aggregating $763,031,625.27.

Prior to any final settlements, and largely in the earlier part of Federal control, there was special assistance given some of the carriers in the way of funding (Baltimore & Ohio, $9,000,000; Boston & Maine, $8,000,000; Erie, $3,500,000; New York, New Haven & Hartford, $17,000,000) aggregating $37,500,000, which deducted from the $763,031,625.27, leaves a balance of additions and betterments of $725,506,625.27.

Up to October 1, 1921, final settlements were made of claims aggregating $387,017,099.12, and in these settlements $170,756,035.16 of additions and betterments were disposed of, $137,313,035.16 being collected from the carriers—that is, this amount was charged to them and deducted in the final settlements—otherwise the cash payment to the carriers would have been increased by the amount of additions and betterments so collected, and $33,443,000 was funded as a part of and in connection with the final settlements.

These two items make an aggregate of $170,756,035.16, which, deducted from the $725,506,625.27, above stated, left a balance, as of October 1, 1921, of $554,850,590.11 of additions and betterments to be disposed of in final settlement.

It is estimated by the Railroad Administration that, as of October 1, 1921, there is due the carriers from the Government on final accounting, and this includes compensation, money taken over, maintenance of way and structures, maintenance of equipment, depreciation, and all other items, exclusive of additions and betterments, $834,702,183.66. Deducting the balance of additions and betterments undisposed of, as of October 1, 1921, $554,850,590.11, leaves a balance of cash required for the completion of final settlements, based upon collecting from the several carriers the amount charged against them on account of additions and betterments, $279,851,593.55.

In all estimates of amounts necessary to conclude final settlements, such estimates have always been based upon the assumption that the additions and betterments, which, exclusive of the equipment trust certificates, aggregated $763,031,625.27, would be collected from the carriers in final settlement.

I am always apprehensive that some confusion may exist because of differences in aggregate amounts given at different times. For instance, comparing the statement I made before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, the statement herewith submitted, as of October 1, 1921, and some subsequent statements that I have made, as of November 1, it must always be borne in mind that in the progress of liquidation these balances are constantly changing from month to month by reason of the fact that final adjustments are being completed almost daily.

In this particular statement I am calling attention to a specific item of $37,500,000 which represents funding completed by the Railroad Administration before my connection with it. In some statements heretofore made we have included this $37,500,000 in the aggregate of funding made. This does not change the balances in any particular, but, as a matter of fact, the $37,500,000 was funded prior to final settlements, and to be exactly accurate should receive the special consideration which I have given it.

Yours, truly,

JAMES C. DAVIS,
Director General.

Total amount necessary to complete final settlements between the Railroad Administration and the carriers, and herein the effect of claims for additions and betterments, properly chargeable to capital account, in such final settlements.

Total amount expended by the Railroad Administration for additions and betterments during 26 months of Federal control..... $1,144,681,582.30

Of this amount there was expended for equipment (100,000 freight cars and 2,000 locomotives), which expenditures are represented by 10-year equipment trust certificates, and are therefore eliminated from the account..... 381,649,957.12

Leaving balance of account for additions and betterments, less equipment trust certificates..... 763,031,625.27

Under special adjustments made by the Railroad Administration prior to final settlements, funding for individual roads (Baltimore & Ohio, $9,000,000; Boston & Maine, $8,000,000; Erie, $3,500,000; New York, New Haven & Hartford, $17,000,000) aggregated a total of..... 37,500,000.00

This left a balance of additions and betterments to be adjusted in final settlement of..... 725,531,625.27

Up to Oct. 1, 1921, final settlements were made of claims presented by the carriers in the aggregate sum of $387,017,099.12. In these settlements $137,313,035.16 of additions and betterments were charged to the carriers, and $33,443,000 of additions and betterments were funded as a part of and in connection with such final settlements. These settlements have, therefore, reduced the addition and betterment claims by the sum of..... 170,756,035.16

Leaving a balance of additions and betterments to be adjusted in future final settlements of..... 554,786,590.11

It is estimated by the Railroad Administration that, as of Oct. 1, 1921, there is due the carriers from the Government, on accounts growing out of Federal control, and this includes compensation, money taken over, maintenance of way and structures, maintenance of equipment, materials, and supplies, depreciation, and all other accounts, exclusive of additions and betterments..... 834,702,183.66

Deducting the balance of additions and betterments undisposed of Oct. 1, 1921..... 554,850,590.11

Leaves the balance of cash required for final settlements, based upon the estimate of the Railroad Administration as above set forth, and further based upon collecting the balance due on additions and betterments as shown above..... 279,851,593.55

EXPLANATION.

In all estimates of the amount necessary to conclude final settlements, same have been based upon the assumption that the additions and betterments would be collected from the carriers on final settlement, as the amount of such additions and betterments was charged in the accounts against the carriers at the time of the completion of same.

In comparing these estimates with estimates heretofore given, it must always be borne in mind that, because of adjustments that are being constantly made, balances are continually changing. The foregoing estimate is as of October 1, 1921.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am now about to consume a moment or two on the question of funding.

We ought to pass this bill even if there is no funding. That, to me, is perfectly evident, but I am standing here for the purpose in part of showing that there ought to be some funding in the future, as there has been in the past, and by so much as the President may fund we must add to the $279,000,000.

I mentioned the other day the fact that in the transportation act passed February 28, 1920, we gave the President the authority, in settling with the railroads, to fund such part of the indebtedness incurred by the railroads to the Government for additions and betterments as in his judgment the public welfare required. I assume that the President will continue to do just as he has done before. This bill does not propose to interfere with that discretion on his part. We neither enlarge nor diminish his authority, and while I do not speak authoritatively for him it would seem to me that his duty is to proceed with the settlements, and if he thinks the public welfare with respect to any particular railroad demands that a portion of the indebtedness due from that railroad to the Government be extended in point of time he will extend it and take the securities which the law requires him to take and which it is believed will safeguard the United States in that respect.

Why did we give the President the authority to extend time to the railroads for that part of the expenditures for additions and betterments which he might think the public interest required? We did it for this reason:

Ordinarily, railroads do not pay for additions and betterments from current income. Ordinarily, the expenditures for this purpose are funded. That is, the railroad company—speaking of any particular instance—borrows the money at 10 years, 50 years, or 100 years, and uses that money for the purpose of making these permanent additions and betterments to its property. That is not always true. Some railroads have been able in the past to make additions and betterments which they have charged to capital account from the surplus which they have earned over and above the cost of operation and the payment of interest and the payment of dividends. I shall not pause to enumerate how many railroads have done that thing, but there are a good many of them. I do not recall with absolute certainty the amount of those accumulations on January 1, 1918, when the Government took over the roads, but, as I remember—and I will correct the statement if I find later on that I am mistaken—the railroads had accumulated at that time a surplus, taking them all together, over and above operation, over and above interest, and over and above dividends upon stock, of something like $2,000,000,000; but this surplus was accumulated upon the part of a very few railroads—few in number but large in importance. I venture to say, although I am now speaking from broad memory, that nine out of ten in number of the railroads in the United States accumulated no surplus whatever, and thought themselves exceedingly fortunate if they were able to pay operating expenses and interest upon their bonded indebtedness, with now and then a dividend upon capital stock.

With regard to all such railroads, they had no surplus to employ. They had no treasury to which they could resort for money to pay for additions and betterments, and when the Government took the railroads over and made those additions and betterments, without any request upon their part and without any participation upon their part—which I am not criticizing, because that was the only way in which it could be done—they had and have no way of paying, out of their current income, for the expenditures which are properly chargeable to capital account; and so we gave to the President in the transportation act of 1920 the authority to fund such of the indebtedness as he thought necessary in order to preserve the transportation system of the United States, simply because we knew that the railroads, taking them individually, could not pay for those expenditures without becoming bankrupt.

We assumed possession of the railroads on the 1st of January, 1918, and that instant the power of any railroad company to borrow money to expend ceased. They had no right to make expenditures for capital account. That all belonged to the Government, and all of the railroads were left without any possibility of borrowing during Federal control the money that was necessary to pay for the expenditures which the director general believed the safety of the public required.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator has doubtless seen the latest reports of the railroads as now managed. Their net earnings are slightly below 3 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think that is accurate for the past year.

Mr. President, I want the Senator from Georgia to understand clearly my position. Up to the 1st of September, 1920, the railroads were abundantly provided for so far as current income was concerned. I think they were paid more money than ought to have been paid them. I said so when the act providing for Federal control, authorizing and validating the taking over of the railroads, if it needed validating, was passed. I voted against that bill largely because, in dealing with individual railroads, the standard which we applied gave to some railroads a great deal more than they ought to have had and gave to some railroads a great deal less than they ought to have had.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, of course, I can not vouch for the accuracy of the reports published yesterday in the papers, standard papers, any more than I can for the price of cotton, or grain, or stock, or Liberty bonds; but we usually take them as correct when we find them in standard papers. It is a well-known fact that the watered stock of these railroads is at least twice as much as the actual investment. I can name a half dozen myself where they have been watered twenty times.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not dealing with stock at all. I quite agree that a large part of the stock originally issued by the railroads was never paid for. I understand that perfectly. I am trying to make it clear that a great proportion of the railroads can not build their railroads and improve their railroads out of current income; that they must borrow money with which to do that.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Would not the Senator's argument apply to the Harrimanized railroads, the New York, New Haven & Hartford, and the J. P. Morganized railroads?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all, because the transportation act from beginning to end does not deal with capital stock and it does not deal with bonds; it deals with the value of the property alone.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. How is that to be measured?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Interstate Commerce Commission ascertains it as best it can. Personally, I think the commission has attached a higher value than ought to have been attached.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Congress passed an act providing that the Interstate Commerce Commission should make a physical valuation of the roads, but my understanding is that that physical valuation has never been made.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is the valuation which the commission seems destined to reach under that act which is making some of the trouble we are now experiencing.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I think the Senator will realize that the country has about lost all confidence in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Wisconsin will admit that the commission is now proceeding under an order from the Supreme Court of the United States to do a thing which it is claimed it must do under the valuation act of 1913—

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Eight years ago.

Mr. CUMMINS. That, in my judgment, will add $4,000,000,000 to the valuation of railroad property which ought not to be added to it at all, and I am doing my best to get a bill passed to eliminate that feature of the bill, and the Senator from Wisconsin is entirely with me in that respect, however much we may differ on other things.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Interstate Commerce Commission is understood now to be nothing more than a subsidiary board of directors for the railroads.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will do my very best to reply to any questions of the Senator from Georgia. I am always glad to be interrupted, if we can shed any light upon the subject through the interruptions; but I am speaking about just one thing—that railroads generally must borrow the money with which to construct the railroads and with which to make additions and betterments, and when the Government took possession of the railroads on the 1st of January, 1918, that was the end of any effort upon the part of the railroads to finance themselves in that regard.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me again, if he eliminates the Harrimanized roads and the Morganized roads, the Louisville & Nashville road, the Pennsylvania Railroad system, and the New York Central, what will be left?

Mr. CUMMINS. Quite a lot; and I am not eliminating anything. I am simply saying that when the President comes to determine whether, in the case of a particular railroad, he will fund any part of the indebtedness due from that railroad to the Government, he will consider the financial condition of that railroad, just as he has in the past; and if he finds that it is not necessary, in order to maintain our transportation system adequately and efficiently, to extend the time on any part of that indebtedness, he will not extend it; but I am assuming that in the future, as in the past, he will find some railroads which do need that indulgence and that he will fund a part of that indebtedness. He may fund anywhere within the range of $500,000,000. I do not think it will be a very large sum, but I can not anticipate the discretion or the judgment of the President in that respect. If he pursues the plan he has hitherto pursued, the amount funded would not be great. At any rate, even upon any reasonable hypothesis, I think it may be assumed that it will be found in the public interest to fund at least from $75,000,000 to $150,000,000. That will not, however, be under this bill, because it has no relation to funding. I have no right to express an opinion about the matter, because I am not familiar with the work which the director general and the President are called upon to do every day. But suppose it were $100,000,000; then we would have to add that to the $279,000,000, making the amount $379,000,000, to pay which the President must either sell these securities or come to Congress for an appropriation—one or the other. I repeat, and I can not too often repeat, that if he does not exercise his judgment in favor of funding at all we will be $125,000,000 or $130,000,000 short of funds necessary to pay the admitted debts of the railroads.

I have given my reason for giving to the President the discretion to fund a part of this indebtedness. I think he ought to possess it. I do not believe there are many Senators who are willing to vote to withdraw it from him or who have ever thought of proposing that course. It is just as necessary as it is to give to the railroads enough to enable them to maintain their property. After all, the broad alternative in the railroad problem is whether we shall give to the railroads rates which will maintain them or do without transportation. That is the real question involved in all legislation.

The weaker railroads, which have no surplus, sometimes are compelled to use much more than their current income in order to maintain themselves, and if the President is not permitted to assist them with fair and reasonable liberality we will not maintain our railroads; many of them can not survive. There are some of them which can. There are some of them which have plenty of money, which were prosperous up to the 1st of September, 1920, when the Government was taking care of them in the generous way which I have suggested; but since that time, for the year ending with the 1st of September, 1921—that is, the year in which the railroads have been compelled to take care of themselves, in which the Government has done nothing for them—as provided in the transportation act, six months after March 1, 1920, taking the railroads as a whole, notwithstanding the great increase of rates, the burdensome increase of rates, which took effect on the 26th of August, 1920, the railroads have not earned within $75,000,000 of enough to pay the interest upon their bonds, to say nothing about any distribution upon their capital stock, and I venture the prediction that when the calendar year closes, if the rates which are in existence now be maintained, the railroads will not have earned during this calendar year more than enough to pay the interest upon their bonds.

Without reckoning their indebtedness to the Government, their bonded indebtedness amounts to nearly $12,000,000,000, and it bears interest at the rate of 4½ per cent, possibly 4½ per cent now, since some of the indebtedness has been renewed within the last year. We will pass out of this year, in my judgment, with a deficit, taking the railroads as a whole, in the payment of the interest upon their bonded obligations.

Again, it is very easy to be misled with respect to this. I am now treating the railroads as a whole. There are some of the railroads that have abundant income, and they will be able to pay the interest upon their bonds and will be able to pay a fair dividend upon their stock.

But I am speaking now of the great mass of the railroads. There are 900 railroads, all told, and while many of them do not render a very extended service, still that service is just as essential to the communities which they do serve as is the service rendered to other communities by the Pennsylvania or the Baltimore & Ohio. It is our duty to care equally for all parts of our country and to give all sections and communities an equal opportunity to grow and develop and to share the prosperity which we hope will presently come. I am therefore firmly of the opinion that we ought to contemplate a reasonable funding of some part of this indebtedness, and that we ought to make now the provision necessary to enable the President to discharge the obligations which are contemplated in the act under which the railroads passed to the Government and in the transportation act of 1920.

With these observations upon the general subject, I intend to devote a few moments to the amendments which the committee has proposed to the House bill. I say in advance that I do not intend to ask a vote upon any of the amendments this afternoon. I understand perfectly well that Senators desire to be heard upon the matter, and I want them to be heard fully, so that when I have finished and in view of the fact that we have agreed substantially that another matter shall be taken up to-morrow morning, I intend to ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside. But I desire that Senators shall know what our amendments are in order that they can be reflecting upon the matter.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I would like to ask my colleague if his remarks of last week have been published?

Mr. CUMMINS. They have not. I asked the printer to reserve them from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in order that my entire speech upon the subject, generally speaking, might appear in the same issue of the Record.

The first amendment which we propose to the House bill is as follows:

The President is hereby authorized to sell any bonds, notes, or other securities acquired by him either before or after this section takes effect, under authority of the Federal control act, the transportation act, 1920, or the act entitled "An act to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation, and for other purposes," approved November 19, 1919.

I may say that this latter act is the one under which the equipment trust certificates were issued by the specific authority of Congress.

And the proceeds of all bonds, notes, or other securities sold by the President shall be a fund to be used by the President for the purposes described in section 202 of the transportation act, 1920.

I have already read that part of section 202 which relates to the settlement of accounts between the railroad companies and the President.

Any balance not so required shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. Any such sale or sales must be made at a price which will save the United States from loss in the transaction and without recourse.

The purpose of this amendment to the House bill is twofold. First, it is to rearrange the bill so that the amendments to the transportation act shall be found in sections 1 and 2 and the amendments which are proposed to the War Finance Corporation act shall be found in section 3. As the House passed the bill there were some amendments which were made to the War Finance Corporation act that should be amendments to the transportation act and some amendments to the transportation act that should be amendments to the War Finance Corporation act. It seemed to me that we ought to keep amendments to these two acts separate and distinct.

The second object of the amendment is to separate the authority of the President to sell securities from the authority of the War Finance Corporation to buy securities. As the bill passed the House the President was not given authority to sell securities to any organization or person except the War Finance Corporation. It seemed to our committee that it was in every way desirable that if he is given authority to sell the securities, the President should have the right to sell them to anybody with whom he can make the most satisfactory arrangements. I can not think there will be any difference of opinion about that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. It is not expected that the President will be able, however, to sell to anybody but the War Finance Corporation, is it? Let me ask another question in that connection. Is not that really selling to ourselves after all, and is it not as though we made direct appropriation for the money?

Mr. CUMMINS. I answer the last question in the affirmative. When the President sells to the War Finance Corporation it is simply transferring the securities from one function of the Government to another, and that is the reason I have insisted upon making the authority of the President to sell distinct from the power of the War Finance Corporation to buy.

Answering the first part of the Senator's inquiry, I say that it may not be necessary to use the War Finance Corporation at all. The President in the last two months has disposed of $100,000,000 of what are known as car-equipment trust certificates. He has sold those certificates without any authority on the part of the War Finance Corporation to buy. In other words, he has not sold them to the War Finance Corporation, although I do not mean by that any disparagement of the War Finance Corporation. I am sure that the persons connected with that body were helpful in the negotiations, but the certificates were not sold to the War Finance Corporation. They were sold to a syndicate entirely outside.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood the Senator to say, and I understood that to be the law, that the President did not have any authority to sell these obligations taken in the funding operations, and that was one of the principal objects of the bill. Has the President authority now to make such a sale?

Mr. CUMMINS. I stated, as I remember it, that with regard to the $311,000,000 of car-equipment trust certificates, he has the authority to sell.

Mr. NORRIS. Does it extend beyond that?

Mr. CUMMINS. He has no authority to sell the other securities which he has taken in his dealing with the railroads.

Mr. FLETCHER. The securities which the President has sold have been sold through the War Finance Corporation, have they not?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not.

Mr. FLETCHER. Did he sell them direct? If we authorize the President to sell without any limit to the public, and then if we authorize the War Finance Corporation to sell to the public, we will have them competing in the same market.

Mr. CUMMINS. They are not likely to compete. The War Finance Corporation has nothing to sell until it buys from the President. I assume there would be no conflict between those two organizations. I repeat that the President has the authority to sell the car-equipment trust certificates, but he has no authority to sell the remainder. So far as I know the War Finance Corporation rendered whatever assistance it could in the recent financial transaction to which I have referred. I do not know what part it played in the matter. I only know that the President and the director general organized or helped to organize the purchasers or a series of purchasers for those securities and were successful in disposing of them at par and without recourse on the Government.

The next amendment which the committee will propose is as follows:

In making settlements with the carriers under the transportation act, 1920, no payment or allowance shall be made to any carrier on account of the so-called inefficiency of labor during the period of Federal control; and no final settlement between the United States and any carrier shall be made which does not forever bar such carrier from setting up any further claim, right, or demand of any kind or character against the United States growing out of or connected with the possession, use, or operation of such carrier's property by the United States during Federal control, except a claim specified in clauses (1), (2), or (3) of paragraph (b) of section 2 hereof.

I shall venture to explain this amendment still further when the amendment is properly before the Senate for action, and I desire now merely to say this, so that when Senators are examining it in the meantime they may understand the general object of the amendment. It takes the place of language used in the House bill as follows:

In using any fund or moneys available under this or any other act, for the purposes described in this subdivision, no payments or allowances shall be made to any carrier on account of the so-called inefficiency of labor during the period of Federal control. Such funds and moneys shall not be used in making any settlement between the United States and any carrier which does not forever bar such carrier from setting up any further claim, rights, or demands of any kind or character against the United States growing out of or connected with the possession, use, or operation of such carrier's property by the United States during the period of Federal control.

The difference between the provision of the House bill which I am now discussing and the substitute which we propose for it is twofold. First, the House bill puts a prohibition upon the moneys which are available under this or any other act for the settlement with the railroads; the Senate amendment puts the prohibition directly upon the President and the director general, namely, that in making settlements they must not make any allowance for the so-called inefficiency of labor. We think the language proposed by the Senate committee is much more efficient and much clearer.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Is it correct to assume that as to all matters except the claims of the railroads on account of the inefficiency of labor there is a complete understanding between the railroads and the United States?

Mr. CUMMINS. No. I shall call attention to that matter in a moment.

Mr. WARREN. I presumed from hearing the amendment read that there must be other points at issue.

Mr. CUMMINS. The so-called inefficiency of labor is absolutely barred if a settlement is made; but if there be no settlement made—

Mr. WARREN. According to its language, the amendment, as I heard it read, would, of course, bar all other claims of every nature.

Mr. CUMMINS. It bars every claim except the three that I shall mention in a moment. If there be a settlement made, that is an end of matters between the railroad and the Government. If there be a settlement, in the making of that settlement the director general and the President are forbidden to make any allowance to the railroads on account of the inefficiency of labor.

Mr. WARREN. My question was aimed to bring out whether there are any differences other than the one regarding the inefficiency of labor, any claim for which I understand the Senate amendment forbids the President and the Attorney General to recognize.

Mr. CUMMINS. There are practically no other differences, except those relating to maintenance, which, of course, are connected with the alleged inefficiency of labor.

The second change that is proposed to be made by the amendment is this: The President and the director general feel that if this particular provision of the act passes Congress as it passed the other House it would prevent partial payments to railroads. Partial payments to railroads are absolutely necessary. Of course, the Government always protects itself against the inefficiency of labor, but sometimes an accounting is so involved that it requires months before a conclusion can be reached. In the meantime the railway company must have a part, at least, of its current income, and this is intended to make that subject clear.

The third respect in which the amendment differs from the House bill is this: The House bill provides that in any settlement that is made there must be a complete discharge on the part of the carrier of all claims or obligations due from the Government to them. That is impossible. The Government has undertaken to hold the railroad companies harmless on account of certain claims for loss or damage which occurred during Federal control. No human being can tell when those losses and claims will be finally adjudicated. The Government has also undertaken to hold the railroads harmless for taxes that are assessed against the railroad property during Federal control. No one can tell when that obligation will be discharged, or, in the event of failure to discharge it on the part of the Government, when such taxes would ripen into a lien upon the railroad property. So the director general up to this time in his final settlements with the railroad companies has excepted those claims. I have before me, and it is attached to the report so that every Senator may see, the exact form of the final settlement which the director general has hitherto used with the railroad companies. There have been a great many of them with which he has settled. This amendment is intended to except just those claims which the director general has excepted in the final settlements which he has made.

Mr. WARREN. That is what prompted my question. I wanted to know how much there was yet to be settled in the way of taxation, and so forth.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa why should not the general law of set-off apply and the person who is found to owe more than the other pay the difference?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is only one answer to that, and it is this: Suppose the President is settling with a railroad and he says to the railroad, "There is due from you to the Government $500,000 on account of improvements which we made to your property during Federal control." The railroad says to the Government, "You made those improvements for the public interest; indeed, the railroad is liable for them; it makes no question about that; but if we had been in possession of the railroad when those expenditures were made we could have borrowed the money for a reasonable length of time with which to make them. Now, if you compel us to take out of our current income and earnings sums which we ordinarily would charge to capital account, we are bankrupt and the territory through which we run must do without our service." It is altogether a matter for the public interest. I do not care whether there is any money loaned to the railroads or not. All I am trying to do and all that I think the President is trying to do is to preserve our system of transportation in those instances where if payment from the railroads is exacted bankruptcy necessarily follows.

With regard to those railroads which have accumulated a surplus and can pay these advances for capital expenditures, the President does not fund the indebtedness due from them. The act is only intended to give that measure of relief which, I think, every reasonable man will approve as necessary to keep our railroads in operation, not the strong—they need no help—but the weak. The fact is the entire transportation act has for its spirit the effort to maintain the railroads as a whole, to keep in operation those which are unable to maintain themselves in the crisis through which we are passing. The distinguishing feature of the transportation act is to compel a fairer and a larger division of through earnings as between the trunk lines and the short lines. There is no one thing in which it is more conspicuous than in its effort to accomplish that result. So I can only repeat that I think the President should not, and I think he will not, set off all of the indebtedness created by additions and betterments, when to do so would cripple the particular railroad and make it impossible that the service which everybody expects the railroad to render shall be rendered.

But I proceed with the amendments, and I intend to be very brief about them. I wish to say, further, as to the exceptions to which I have just referred, which are not included in the receipt or contract of final settlement, that I have attached to the report a copy of the standard contract or so much of the standard contract as relates to the exceptions, and every Senator by referring to the report itself can ascertain just what claims are excepted from the final settlement.

The next amendment can be understood by a comparison between the House text and the proposed Senate amendment. The House text provides that no settlement shall be made between the United States and any carrier "which does not forever bar such carrier from setting up any further claim, rights, or demands of any kind or character against the United States growing out of or connected with the possession, use, or operation of such carrier's property by the United States during the period of Federal control."

The amendment makes an exception in the following words: except a claim specified in clauses (1), (2), or (3) of subdivision (b) of section 202 hereof.

That is the section to which I have just been referring, and I need not enlarge upon it.

The only other amendment that is of any consequence and that is not rather formal in its character is the amendment which is proposed to that part of the House bill which gives to the President the authority to sell securities. We have already given him that authority, if the amendment we propose is adopted, and we strike out of the House bill that provision which confers upon the President the authority to sell and leave it simply with the authority on the part of the War Finance Corporation to buy to the extent of $500,000,000; otherwise that part of the House bill is unchanged. I think all Senators understand why that amendment has been proposed.

In this connection, in view of the question that was asked the other day by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], I desire to read the part of the House bill which remains unchanged, the committee not having amended it in any way. The concluding paragraph of the House bill reads as follows:

No purchase shall be made by the corporation under this section at any time when such purchase interferes with the corporation in granting the fullest aid for financing the handling and exporting of agricultural products by the corporation under this act as now or hereafter amended. It is the intention that this section shall be so construed and administered as to give the preference to such financing and exporting of agricultural products.

Mr. President, I have now finished my review of this bill, and unless Senators desire to ask me some questions I shall presently yield the floor.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, just one question. I ask the Senator whether or not his proposition to have these railroad securities taken over by the Government necessarily implies that the Government is to give a higher price for them than can be obtained anywhere else?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, no. The transportation act specifically provides that these securities shall be taken at 6 per cent, and that the President shall demand and insist upon such securities as are safe and sound, and will save the Government harmless. This act also provides that if the President is unable—of course, I am simply paraphrasing it—to dispose of these securities at 6 per cent, somebody must suffer loss, and that loss must be borne by the railroads. He must dispose of the securities without loss to the Government and without any recourse upon the Government.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator to a statement that he made to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] which perhaps was not exactly satisfactory to him, judging by some things that have transpired since, when the Senator said that the amount that the Government owed the railroads in excess of what the railroads owed the Government amounted to something over $200,000,000. When asked the question if this was independent of any funding on the part of the Government, the impression left was that the two accounts, if balanced one against the other without any negotiation at all or any transaction, would leave that difference.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes, Mr. President; I put it in another way: If the railroads were to come to the Government at this moment and pay the Government every penny that the Government claims is due from them, not including that part already funded, the Government would still owe the railroads $279,000,000 as of the 1st of October.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; that was true at that time; but in order that the Senate may understand fully just the difference that appeared between the two aggregate amounts—the $1,144,000,000 and the $1,100,000,000—I think it would help to clarify the matter to state that up to the time to which the Senator calls attention the car-trust certificates and the actual funding by the Government have reduced the $1,144,000,000 down to $554,000,000. If a settlement should be made, there would be a difference of the $279,000,000; but the amount that is represented by the car-trust certificates and the subsequent funding down to the date to which the Senator calls attention is still in the form of an obligation on the part of the railroads either to the Government if it holds the securities or to the parties to whom the Government has sold the securities. So that we have offset the account of the railroads just as far as we have accepted their obligations in settlement, and the proposition in the bill now pending is that the President may, if he sees fit, accept $500,000,000 of securities from the railroads; and in that event, if he accepts the $500,000,000 in the form of securities from the railroads, it will increase our indebtedness to the railroads to something like $700,000,000 up to the present state of the settlement.

The Senator from Nebraska asked whether the securities given by the railroads to the Government were taken in settlement. They were. The difference between what the Government owed the railroads and what the railroads owed the Government at the beginning was in favor of the Government; but in proportion as the Government accepted the railroad obligations in the form of long-time or short-time paper it reduced that difference until now the amount that is unfunded, unsettled, is five hundred and some odd million dollars, and the difference between that and what the Government owes the railroads for current expenses is the $279,000,000. If there were no further funding and we should subtract what the railroads owe us, yet unfunded and unpaid in cash, there would be a difference of $279,000,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Iowa if he will not modify the notice he gave a few minutes ago. That is, if the Newberry case is not reached to-morrow, he will go on with the railroad bill, will he not?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, I have assumed that that would be the case. I have yielded precedence only because of the insistence that the Newberry case should be heard, and my sense of the right of the matter.

Mr. CURTIS. I say, in case an agreement is reached to take it up at some other time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is there doubt about it?

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that it has not been settled, and may not be settled until night; so I did not want any erroneous impression to go out with reference to what would be done to-morrow.

Mr. CUMMINS. I intend to go on with the railroad bill as rapidly as is reasonable, and I want every Senator to have a chance to say what he thinks about it. I wish to have it fully discussed. I have never found any great advantage in pressing a bill unduly and unfairly, but so far as this afternoon is concerned I have finished what I have to say. I realize that it is not to be expected that anyone here is ready at this moment, unless it is my friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], to take up this question for discussion. I intend to go on with the bill, at least if the Senate will permit me, until it is finished, with just two exceptions—one to which I have agreed and the other is inevitable. I have agreed that the Newberry case may intervene, because I think it is a case which ought to be disposed of; and I recognize that if anyone wants to speak upon what is known as the antibeer bill, inasmuch as a time has been fixed for voting upon it, any Senator can very properly interrupt the progress of this bill by speaking upon that measure.

With the understanding, therefore, that if the matter to which we have all referred does not arise to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of this bill, I ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I trust the bill will not be laid aside. I desire to make some remarks while it is before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I withdraw my request until the Senator from Minnesota has been heard.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I avail myself of this opportunity to discuss the constitutional objections that were made to the conference report on the so-called beer bill, and I propose to discuss it purely from a legal and technical standpoint.

The chief controversy over the conference report upon H. R. 7294 relates to section 6 as agreed to by the conferees.

This section reads as follows:

That any officer, agent, or employee of the United States engaged in the enforcement of this act, or the national prohibition act, or any other law of the United States, who shall search any private dwelling as defined in the national prohibition act, and occupied as such dwelling, without a warrant directing such search, or who while so engaged shall without a search warrant maliciously and without reasonable cause search any other building or property, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined for a first offense not more than $1,000, and for a subsequent offense not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

It is insisted that this section is unconstitutional and in conflict with the fourth amendment to the Constitution.

This amendment reads as follows:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

And it should be construed in the light of, and in conformity with, the principles of the common law, with which the framers of the Constitution were familiar.

The amendment contains two separate and distinct prohibitions, to wit: First, it prohibits unreasonable searches and seizures; and second, it prohibits the issuance of warrants except upon probable cause shown, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

There is in the amendment no prohibition against search or seizure without a warrant. Such a prohibition would have been subversive of the common law and fatal to the safety of human life and the repression of crime.

The second prohibition in the amendment was aimed against such general warrants as had been in vogue for many years prior to the noted Wilkes case, in 1766, when the validity of such warrants was questioned and brought to issue in the Court of King's Bench. That court held such warrants to be illegal and contrary to the principles of the English constitution. Pomeroy, in his introduction of Constitutional Law, clearly states the case in the following language:

This clause of the Constitution was particularly aimed at what were known in the English law as general warrants. These general warrants were used more especially in the case of political offenses, and were issued by the Government, directing the officers to search all suspected places and seize all suspected persons without describing any place or person. The execution of the warrant was left to the caprice of the individual who had it in charge. Although these warrants were so plainly contrary to the spirit of the English common law and destructive of individual rights and liable to become instruments of tyranny in the hands of an unscrupulous official they continued in use down to a time immediately prior to the American Revolution. The practice was finally declared illegal by the Court of King's Bench during the presidency of Lord Mansfield, in the case of Money v. Leach. The case arose on a warrant issued by one of the secretaries of state requiring the officers "to make diligent search for the authors and publishers" of a certain seditious libel, and them or any of them having found to apprehend and seize, together with their papers. (Pomeroy, Constitutional Law, tenth edition, p. 158, sec. 241.)

I have a sample of the warrant which was issued in this case which I shall attach to my remarks.

The fourth amendment contains no prohibition against arrest, search, or seizure without a warrant. That was left under the rules of the common law. The amendment provides not that no arrest, search, or seizure should be made without a warrant, but prescribes that there shall be no unreasonable searches and seizures; in other words, that the people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures; not against all searches and seizures but simply against unreasonable searches and seizures. And this brings us to the question in what cases arrests, searches, and seizures may be made without a warrant under the principles of the common law and statutory law prevailing in this country.

It was the rule of the common law at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and it has been the rule of the common law of this country, and of most of the statutory law, that a peace officer—an officer charged with the enforcement of law—may arrest a criminal when caught in the act of committing a crime, and when thus arrested he may search him for evidence pertaining to the crime and, as a general rule, retain such evidence for the use of the court in the prosecution or trial of the case, and this applies to all criminal cases, misdemeanors, as well as felons.

In support of this statement I quote, among other cases, the following authorities which are directly in point:

I quote the following from First Hale's Pleas of the Crown, page 587, a work prepared and compiled in the early part of the eighteenth century:

I come in the next place to arrests, ex officio, without any warrant. If any affray be made in the presence of a justice of peace, or if a felon be in his presence, he may arrest him and detain him, ex officio, till he can make an arrest to send him to goal, but then the warrant must be in writing to the gaoler (p. 23, Car. B. R. Sanford's case), and so he may by word command any person present to arrest (Dalt. cap., p. 328).

He further states:

A constable may ex officio arrest a breaker of the peace in his view, and keep him in his house or in the stocks till he can bring him before a justice of peace.

So if A be dangerously hurt and the common voice is that B hurt him, or if C thereupon comes to the constable and tells him that B hurt him, the constable may imprison him till he knows whether A dies or lives (T., 43 Eliz., B. R. Dumbleton's case) or can bring him before a justice.

So if a felony be committed and A acquaint him that B did it, the constable may take him and imprison him, at least until he can bring him before some justice of peace.

Blackstone in his Commentaries, book 4, page 292, states the common-law doctrine as follows:

2. Arrests by officers without warrant may be executed, first, by a justice of the peace, who may himself apprehend or cause to be apprehended, by word only, any person committing a felony or breach of the peace in his presence; second, the sheriff; and, third, the coroner may apprehend any felon within the county without warrant; fourth, the constable, of whose office we formerly spoke, hath great original and inherent authority with regard to arrests. He may, without warrant, arrest anyone for a breach of the peace committed in his view and carry him before a justice of the peace; and in view of felony actually committed, or a dangerous wounding, whereby felony is likely to ensue, he may upon probable suspicion arrest the felon if he can not otherwise be taken; and if he or his assistants be killed in attempting such arrests it is murder in all concerned.

Russell on Crimes, volume 1, page 725, states the doctrine as follows:

A constable may arrest any person who in his presence commits a misdemeanor or breach of the peace if the arrest is effected at the time when, or immediately after, the offense is committed.

In volume 9, Laws of England, by Lord Halsbury, pages 309 and 310, is this statement:

A constable and also, it seems, a private person may upon lawful arrest of a suspected offender take and detain property found in the offender's possession if such property is likely to afford material evidence for the prosecution in respect of the offense for which the offender has been arrested.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case of Commonwealth v. Phelps (209 Mass., 410) asserts:

The further objection made by the defendant that an arrest without a warrant is in conflict with the fourteenth article of the declaration of rights of the constitution of the Commonwealth was disposed of in Rohan v. Sawin (5 Cush., 281). It was there stated that these provisions were in restraint of general warrants to make searches and that they do not conflict with the authority of officers or private persons under proper limitations to arrest without a warrant when authorized by the common law or by statute. To the same effect see Wakely v. Hart (6 Bin., 316). The same is true of the fourth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The court discussed the question directly in reference to the constitution of Massachusetts, and then concluded by saying:

The same is true of the fourth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Chief Justice Redfield, of Vermont, delivered the opinion of the court in the case In re Powers, Twenty-fifth Vermont, 265, a liquor case. Under the law of Vermont the officers of the law were allowed to arrest a man for drunkenness, and if they found any bottles of whisky in his possession they had a right to take them. In that case the court said:

It seems to us that the eleventh article of our State constitution and the corresponding provisions in the United States Constitution have no reference to the subject now before the court. It is in these words: "That the people have a right to hold themselves, 'their houses, papers, and possessions free from search or seizure,' and therefore warrants, without oath or affirmation first made, affording sufficient foundation for them, whereby any officer or messenger may be commanded or required to search suspected places, or seize any person or persons, his, her, or their property, not peculiarly described, are contrary to that right, and ought not to be granted." This seems to be directed against general warrants, and general search warrants in particular, not specifically describing the persons, places, or property to be searched or arrested. This class of warrants, which in troublous and unsettled periods in English history, were issued to a very alarming extent by their secretaries of state and other magistrates, perhaps, was prohibited at the final settlement of the realm upon the Prince of Orange and the Hanover family, I think, if not earlier, and similar provisions have been transferred to the United States and to most of the State constitutions. It is very obvious this proceeding is not of that character. And it has never been supposed to prohibit arrests by private persons or without warrant in that class of cases where delay would be perilous. Necessity is the first law of government as well as of nature, and is not to be abrogated by implication.

In the case of Wakely v. Hart et al. (6 Binney, Pa., 317) the court declares the rule to be as follows:

But the plaintiff insists that by the constitution of this State no arrest is lawful without a warrant issued on probable cause supported by oath. Whether this be the true construction of the constitution is the main point in the cause. It is declared in the ninth article, section 7, "that the people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and possessions from unreasonable arrests, and that no warrant to search any place or seize any person or thing shall issue without describing them as nearly as may be, nor without probable cause supported by oath or affirmation." The provisions of this section, so far as concerns warrants, only guard against their abuse by issuing without good cause or in so general and vague a form as may put it in the power of the officers who execute them to harass innocent persons under pretense of suspicion, for if general warrants are allowed it must be left to the discretion of the officer on what persons or things they are to be executed. But it is nowhere said that there shall be no arrest without warrant. To have said so would have endangered the safety of society. The felon who is seen to commit murder or robbery must be arrested on the spot or suffered to escape. So, although not seen, yet if known to have committed a felony, and pursued with or without warrant, he may be arrested by any person. And even when there is probable cause of suspicion a private person may without warrant at his peril make an arrest. I say at his peril, for nothing short of proving the felony will justify an arrest. These are principles of the common law, essential to the welfare of society, and not intended to be altered or impaired by the constitution. The whole section, indeed, was nothing more than an affirmation of the common law, for general warrants have been decided to be illegal; but as the practice of issuing them had been ancient, the abuses great, and the decisions against them only of modern date the agitation occasioned by the discussion of this important question had scarcely subsided, and it was thought prudent to enter a solemn veto against this powerful engine of despotism. I am therefore of the opinion that the defendants were justified in making the arrest if they could prove the plaintiff guilty of larceny; consequently the record tending to prove the larceny was legal evidence.

In the case of Getchell v. Page (103 Me., 390) the court states the law to be as follows:

It is well settled that an officer making an arrest on a criminal charge may also take into his possession the instruments of the crime and such other articles as may reasonably be of use as evidence upon the trial. The officer not only has the lawful power to do so, but he would be blameworthy if he failed to do so. The maintenance of public order and the protection of society by efficient prosecution of criminals require it. The title to the property remains in the owner, but the lawful possession is temporarily in the officer for evidentiary purposes, subject to the order of the court. (Thatcher v. Weeks, 79 Maine, 547; Spaulding v. Preston, 21 Vt., 10; Bishop Crim. Pro., 211.) The plaintiff does not seek to controvert this principle of the common law.

In the case of Rohan v. Sawin (5 Cush. (Mass.), 284-5) the court lays down the rule in the following terms:

It has been contended that an arrest of this character without a warrant was in violation of the great fundamental principles of our National and State Constitutions, forbidding unreasonable searches and arrests, except by warrant founded upon a complaint made under oath. Those provisions doubtless had another and different purpose, being in restraint of general warrants to make searches, and requiring warrants to issue only upon a complaint made under oath. They do not conflict with the authority of constables or other peace officers or private persons under proper limitations to arrest without warrant those who have committed felonies. The public safety and the due apprehension of criminals charged with heinous offenses imperiously require that such arrests should be made without warrant by officers of the law. As to the right appertaining to private individuals to arrest without a warrant, it is a much more restricted authority and is confined to cases of the actual guilt of the party arrested; and the arrest can only be justified by proving such guilt. But as to constables and other peace officers, acting officially, the law clothes them with greater authority, and they are held to be justified, if they act, in making the arrest, upon probable and reasonable grounds for believing the party guilty of a felony; and this is all that it is necessary for them to show in order to sustain a justification of an arrest for the purpose of detaining the party to await further proceedings under a complaint on oath and a warrant thereon. It is not necessary, therefore, in the present case for the defendant to establish the actual guilt of the plaintiff of the offense imputed to him. It was only necessary to show that upon the representation made to him of the commission of a felony, and the other circumstances coming to his knowledge, he had reasonable ground to suspect the plaintiff of having committed the crime of receiving stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen.

In the case of Holker v. Hennessey (141 Mo., 539) a case of obtaining property by false pretenses, the Supreme Court lays down the rule as follows:

Generally speaking, in the absence of a statute, an officer has no right to take any property from the person of the prisoner except such as may afford evidence of the crime charged or means of identifying the criminal or may be helpful in making an escape. The officer has the undoubted right to make the search, and considering the nature of the accusation he may, when acting in good faith, take into his possession any articles he may suppose will aid in securing the conviction of the prisoner or will prevent escape. "He holds all, whether money or goods, subject to the order of the court, which, in proper circumstances, will direct him to restore the whole or a part to the prisoner." (Bish. Crim. Proc., secs. 211, 212; Wharton, Crim. Pl. and Pr., secs. 60, 61.) We find no statute of this State giving the arresting officer authority to search a prisoner, but no statute is necessary. The power exists from the nature and object of the public duty the officer is required to perform. Such authority is directly given to a committing magistrate by statute (section 4308), but unless the arresting authority has the authority immediately, on making the arrest, all evidence of crime and of identification of the criminal might be destroyed before the prisoner could be taken before the magistrate.

We have no doubt the search of the prisoners in this case was entirely justifiable, considering the nature of the crime charged and other circumstances. In the circumstances also he was justified in taking from their persons and keeping in his possession the money found upon them, though it may have been in no manner connected with the charge or proof against them. Money is the most effective kind of property a prisoner could have in his possession to be used as a means of escape, and the safe-keeping of the prisoner justified the retention of the money at least until he was brought before the magistrate.

In the case of Weeks v. United States (232 U. S., 392), in discussing that case, the court makes the following statement:

What then is the present case? Before answering that inquiry specifically, it may be well by a process of exclusion to state what it is not. It is not an assertion of the right on the part of the Government, always recognized under English and American law, to search the person of the accused when legally arrested to discover and seize the fruits or evidences of crime. This right has been uniformly maintained in many cases. (1 Bishop on Criminal Procedure, 211; Wharton, Crim. Pleas and Practice, 8th ed., 60; Dillon v. O'Brien and Davis, 16 Cox C. C., 245.) Nor is it the case of testimony offered at a trial where the court is asked to stop and consider the illegal means by which proofs, otherwise competent, were obtained—of which we shall have occasion to treat later in this opinion. Nor is it the case of burglar's tools or other proofs of guilt found upon his arrest within the control of the accused.

In the case of Dillon v. O'Brien and Davis, volume 16, Cox Criminal cases, 245, the syllabus lays down the rule, in conformity with the opinion of the court, as follows:

When a person is arrested for committing a felony or misdemeanor, any property in his possession believed to have been used by him for the purpose of committing the offense may be seized and detained as evidence in support of the charge; and, if necessary, such property may be taken from him by force, provided no unnecessary violence is used.

See Wharton's Criminal Procedure (10th ed.), section 35; also section 97 and all the cases cited in note 4 to that section, which go to show that in nearly all the States of the Union the doctrine that I have stated above prevails. See also section 98. I also cite 1 Bishop Crim. Pro. (2d ed.), sections 178, 179, 183, and 211.

In the case of Boyd v. United States (116 U. S., 623), a leading case, the court held, because certain papers were intended to be used as evidence, that under the fifth amendment it was compelling a man to give evidence against himself, and therefore the search was unreasonable in that case as to those papers.

In that case Justice Bradley, among other matters, states:

The search for and seizure of stolen or forfeited goods, or goods liable to duties and concealed to avoid the payment thereof, are totally different things from a search for and seizure of a man's private books and papers for the purpose of obtaining information therein contained or of using them as evidence against him. The two things differ toto caelo. In the one case the Government is entitled to the possession of the property; in the other it is not. The seizure of stolen goods is authorized by the common law; and the seizure of goods forfeited for a breach of the revenue laws, or concealed to avoid the duties payable on them, has been authorized by English statutes for at least two centuries past; and the like seizures have been authorized by our own revenue acts from the commencement of the Government. The first statute passed by Congress to regulate the collection of duties, the act of July 31, 1789 (1 Stat., 29, 43), contains provisions to this effect. As this act was passed by the same Congress which proposed for adoption the original amendments to the Constitution, it is clear that the Members of that body did not regard searches and seizures of this kind as unreasonable, and they are not embraced within the prohibition of the amendment. So, also, the supervision authorized to be exercised by officers of the revenue over the manufacture or custody of excisable articles, and the entries thereof in books required by law to be kept for their inspection, are necessarily excepted out of the category of unreasonable searches and seizures. So, also, the laws which provide for the search and seizure of articles and things which it is unlawful for a person to have in his possession for the purpose of issue or disposition, such as counterfeit coin, lottery tickets, implements of gambling, etc., are not within this category. (Commonwealth v. Dana, 2 Met. (Mass.), 329.) Many other things of this character might be enumerated.

In the case of stolen goods the owner from whom they were stolen is entitled to their possession; and in the case of excisable or dutiable articles, the Government has an interest in them for the payment of the duties thereon and until such duties are paid has a right to keep them under observation or to pursue and drag them from concealment.

I find on looking up the matter that there are 32 States in the Union which allow by statute an arrest to be made without a warrant. In 32 States they can arrest a person if he commits the offense in the presence of a peace officer. I will read the names of those States for the benefit of doubting Senators:

Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and Wisconsin.

Thirty-two States have adopted laws of this kind, so that it can be said to be the common law of the States or the common law of the great majority of the States in the Union that a peace officer, a prohibition officer, has the right to arrest a criminal offender caught in the act of committing the crime; and when he arrests him, if he captures him with counterfeit coin, if he catches him with smuggled goods, if he catches him with goods that are stolen, if he catches him with liquor under the prohibition law, he has the right not only to arrest him without a warrant but to search him and to retain the wet goods as evidence against him.

In the case of John Bad Elk v. United States (177 U. S., 535), the court, in discussing under what circumstances an arrest can be made without a warrant, quotes the Compiled Laws of South Dakota and makes the following statement:

The law upon the subject of arrest in that State is contained in the Compiled Laws of South Dakota, 1887, section 7139, and the following sections, and it will be seen that the common law is therein substantially enacted. The sections referred to are set out in the margin.

Section 7148 reads as follows:

A peace officer may, without a warrant, arrest a person—
1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence.
2. When the person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his presence.

3. When a felony has in fact been committed and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it.

4. On a charge made upon reasonable cause of the commission of a felony by the party arrested.

Judge Deady, of the United States district court, one of the ablest of our district judges, in the case of Ex parte Morrill (35 Fed., 267), in discussing the question as to when a person could be arrested without a warrant, after quoting the fourth amendment, states:

It has never been understood that this provision was intended to or does prevent an arrest by a peace officer—a sheriff or constable—for a crime committed in his presence. (Whart. Crim. Pl., sec. 8; 1 Bish. Crim. Proc., sec. 181.) The knowledge derived by the officer from his observation, acting under the sanction of his official oath, is considered equivalent to information supported by the oath or affirmation of another.

Now, a warrant of arrest may issue on "probable cause" supported by oath, and by analogy a peace officer may arrest on probable cause derived from his own observation. At common law a peace officer might arrest without warrant "on reasonable grounds of suspicion"; and the facts and circumstances which furnish such grounds of suspicion amount to "probable cause" under the Constitution, which is such cause as will constitute a defense to an action for false imprisonment or malicious prosecution. (Whart. Crim. Pl., sec. 9; 1 Bish. Crim. Proc., 182; Rap. & L. Law Dict., "False Imprisonment," "Malicious Prosecution.") Probable cause is a probability that the crime has been committed by the person charged. The facts stated upon oath "must induce a reasonable probability that all the acts have been done which constitute the offense charged." (Cranch, C. J., in United States v. Bollman, 1 Cranch, C. C., 379; Wheeler v. Nesbitt, 24 How., 551.)

United States District Judge Paul, in the case of Carico v. Wilmore (51 Fed., 198), states:

Officers who by virtue of their offices are conservators of the peace, have at common law the right to arrest without warrant all persons who are guilty of a breach of the peace, or other violation of criminal law, in their presence. (1 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 734.) The Revised Statutes of the United States provide as follows:

"Sec. 3452. Every person who shall have in his custody or possession any goods, wares, merchandise, articles, or objects on which taxes are imposed by law, for the purpose of selling the same in fraud of the internal revenue laws, or with design to avoid the payment of the taxes imposed thereon, shall be liable to a penalty of $500, or not less than double the amount of taxes fraudulently attempted to be evaded."

A violation of this statute would be a misdemeanor. (Code Va., sec. 3879.) If committed in the presence of a sheriff, the offender could be arrested without a warrant. (Muscoe v. Com., 86 Va., 443; 10 S. E. Rep., 534; and Davis Crim. Law, 402.)

I do not think that anyone familiar with the decisions of our State and Federal courts can well question the authority of an officer to arrest without a warrant a person in the act of committing a crime. When such an arrest has been made, a search by the arresting officer may be made for the token and evidence of the crime.

See also the cases of Brooks v. Commonwealth (61 Penn. State R. (11 Smith), 352); Davis v. Russell (5 Bingham's Reports (Eng.), 354); Beckworth v. Philby (6 Barn. and Cress. (Eng.), 635); United States v. Hart (1 Peters C. C., 390).

The fourth amendment does not prohibit searches or seizures without a warrant. It only prohibits unreasonable searches or seizures, and an unreasonable search or seizure is one for which there is in law a want of probable cause. In other words, it recognizes the rule of the common law then prevailing, as described in the decisions I have already quoted.

To hold that no criminal can in any case be arrested and searched for the evidences and tokens of his crimes without a warrant would be to leave society to a large extent at the mercy of the shrewdest, the most expert, and the most depraved of criminals, facilitating their escape in many instances.

In the case of Davis v. Russell (5 Bingham's Reports, pp. 363-364) Chief Justice Best says:

It has been further contended that, without a warrant from a magistrate, a constable has no right to apprehend upon suspicion, unless there is danger of escape if he forbear to apprehend. The law, however, is not so, for though a private individual can not arrest upon bare suspicion, a constable may. This has been decided in so many cases that it is unnecessary to refer to them; and unless the law were so, there would be no security for person or property.

A prohibition officer in the performance of his duty is in the situation of a constable, technically and legally.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator except to ask a question.

Mr. NELSON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. STANLEY. Is it the contention of the Senator that prohibition officers can search the property of citizens upon bare suspicion?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly. In respect to that subject matter they have the powers of constables.

In the case of Adams v. New York (192 U. S., 598), the court says:

But the contention is that, if in the search for the instruments of crime other papers are taken, the same may not be given in evidence. As an illustration, if a search warrant is issued for stolen property, and burglars' tools be discovered and seized, they are to be excluded from testimony by force of these amendments. We think they were never intended to have that effect, but are rather designed to protect against himself in a criminal trial, and to punish wrongful invasion of the home of the citizen or the unwarranted seizure of his papers and property, and to render invalid legislation or judicial procedure having such effect.

The framers of the Constitution were familiar with the common law on the subject, and hence they were content to adopt the common-law rule that no unreasonable searches or seizures should be made in any case, and that if an attempt to search or seize should be made under a warrant such warrant could only issue on the showing under oath of probable cause therefor. In either case, whether with or without warrant, the existence of probable cause is essential, and if a warrant is resorted to it can not be of the general character of that in the Wilkes case, but must "particularly describe the place to be searched and the person or thing to be seized."

An arrest, search, or seizure is unreasonable when in law there is no probable cause for it. In the case of Wheeler v. Neshitt (24 Howard (U. S.), 544), the court defines what is probable cause. It says:

Probable cause is the existence of such facts and circumstances as would excite the belief in a reasonable mind acting on the facts within the knowledge of the prosecutor that the person charged was guilty of a crime for which he was prosecuted.

In other words, there must be the same degree of probable cause as would justify the issuance of a warrant.

The only limitation I can find on this general rule is that found in Boyd v. United States (116 U. S., 616), where the court holds that the seizure of a person's papers to be used against him in a criminal case is compelling him to be a witness against himself contrary to the fifth amendment, and hence that it is an unreasonable seizure. A portion of the syllabus states the case as follows:

Search and seizure of a man's private papers to be used in evidence for the purpose of convicting him of crime, recovering a penalty, or of forfeiting his property, is totally different from the search and seizure of stolen goods, dutiable articles on which duties have not been paid, and the like, which rightfully belong to the custody of the law.

But in this connection I call attention to Judge Freeman's note to the case of State v. Turner, in 136 American State Reports, pages 135 to 162. See also Commonwealth v. Dana (2 Metcalf (Mass.), 337).

In the case of Carl v. Ayers (53 N. Y., 14), a case in which an arrest was made without warrant, the court defines "probable cause" in the following language:

Probable cause which will justify a criminal accusation is defined to be a reasonable ground of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in his belief that the person accused is guilty of the offense with which he is charged. (Munns v. Dupont, 3 Wash. C. C. 37; Foshay v. Ferguson, 2 Denio, 617; Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush., 218.)

In the case of Munns v. Dupont (3 Wash. C. C. Repts.), Justice Washington, who, I think, was a member of the Supreme Court, lays down the rule as follows:

What, then, is the meaning of the term "probable cause"? We answer, a reasonable ground of suspicion supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in the belief that the person accused is guilty of the offense with which he is charged.

Section 6, as agreed to in the conference report, is clearly within the pale of the fourth amendment to the Constitution. Indeed, in one respect it is more restrictive, in that it requires a warrant to search a dwelling, a requirement not found in the fourth amendment. As regards all other searches and seizures, it leaves them where the fourth amendment leaves them. They must be reasonable; in other words, based upon probable cause as defined by the courts. And while a remedy by civil action for false imprisonment exists and has long existed, section 6 for the first time gives a remedy by criminal prosecution, so that he who makes a search or seizure maliciously and without probable cause is not only liable for damages in a civil action as heretofore, but is also liable criminally to a fine of $1,000 for a first offense, and for any subsequent offense to such a fine and to imprisonment of not more than one year. We have thus given individuals whose property or person is searched or seized a double shield of protection.

I desire to cite at this point a copy of a specimen warrant, the one issued in the famous Wilkes case. That warrant reads:

George Montague Dunk, Earl of Halifax, Viscount Sunbury, and Baron Halifax, one of the lords of His Majesty's most honorable privy council, lieutenant general of His Majesty's forces, and principal secretary of state; these are in His Majesty's name to authorize and require you (taking a constable to your assistance) to make strict and diligent search for the authors, printers, and publishers of a seditious and treasonable paper entitled "The North Briton, No. 45," Saturday, April 3, 1763, and printed for G. Kearsley, in Ludgate Street, London; and them, or any of them, having found, to apprehend and seize, together with their papers, and to bring in safe custody before me to be examined concerning the premises, and further dealt with according to law; and in due execution thereof, all mayors, sheriffs, justices of the peace, constables, and all other His Majesty's officers, civil and military, and loving subjects whom it may concern, are to be aiding and assisting to you, as there shall be occasion; and for so doing this shall be your warrant.

Given at St. James's the 26th day of April, in the third year of His Majesty's reign.

DUNK HALIFAX.

To NATHAN CARRINGTON, JOHN MONEY, JAMES WATSON, and ROBERT BLACKMORE, four of His Majesty's messengers in ordinary.

Mr. President, I will only say in conclusion that I have discussed this matter purely from its legal and constitutional standpoint, and my argument may be considered more of a brief than otherwise.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920.

Mr. NEW obtained the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I renew my request for unanimous consent that the unfinished business, House bill 8331, be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Iowa is for unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RAILROAD BETWEEN SEWARD AND FAIRBANKS, ALASKA.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I rise to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 8442, being order of business 317.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. Let the bill first be stated by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill for which consideration is asked by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8442) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved March 12, 1914, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the bill may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The reading clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved March 12, 1914, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end of section 2 a proviso to read as follows:

"Provided further, That in order to complete the construction and equipment of the railroad between Seward and Fairbanks, together with necessary sidings, spurs, and lateral branches, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, in addition to all sums heretofore appropriated therefor, the sum of $4,000,000, to be immediately and continuously available until expended."

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the bill provide an immediate appropriation of $4,000,000?

Mr. NEW. The bill contemplates an appropriation of $4,000,000. The reason for the immediate consideration of the bill is in order that the proposed appropriation may be estimated for in the budget which is to be submitted to Congress early in its forthcoming session. Unless the bill is passed the item can not be estimated for.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Indiana misunderstood the question of the Senator from North Carolina. As I understand, this bill does not carry an appropriation at all; it simply increases the limit of cost of the railroad, so that, as the Senator from Indiana has said, an estimate may be sent to Congress and an appropriation be made hereafter.

Mr. NEW. That is correct; I misunderstood the question of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not understand the scope of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, November 15, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, November 14, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Spera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord God of Hosts, we hope we are grateful for the condescending mercy of Thy goodness and for the growing revelation of Thy truth. At Thy altar we give Thee praise and thanksgiving for the birth of the world's new morning. O God, long has it been waiting and hoping for the dawn of this day, when the dayspring from on high would indeed begin to break through the darkness and usher in the light of harmony, peace, and good will. O Lord of the ages, help, help, we beseech Thee, that none of Thy servants may fail or falter and that human welfare may no longer reek on the battle fronts of the world. Here and now may we renew our vows of obligation and quicken our sense of responsibility and look straight into the face of our tasks with resolute courage, and with Thee as our guide. And Thine shall be the glory forever. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8643. An act to extend the tariff act approved May 27, 1921.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS AT ARLINGTON.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the President's address delivered at Arlington on Friday may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the address of the President delivered at Arlington on Friday may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS AT THE BURIAL OF AN UNKNOWN AMERICAN SOLDIER, ARLINGTON CEMETERY, NOVEMBER 11, 1921.

Mr. Secretary of War and ladies and gentlemen, we are met today to pay the impersonal tribute. The name of him whose body lies before us took flight with his imperishable soul. We know not whence he came, but only that his death marks him with the everlasting glory of an American dying for his country.

He might have come from any one of millions of American homes. Some mother gave him in her love and tenderness, and with him her most cherished hopes. Hundreds of mothers are wondering today, finding a touch of solace in the possibility that the Nation bows in grief over the body of one she bore to live and die, if need be, for the Republic. If we give rein to fancy, a score of sympathetic chords are touched, for in this body there once glowed the soul of an American, with the aspirations and ambitions of a citizen who cherished life and its opportunities. He may have been a native or an adopted son; that matters little, because they glorified the same loyalty, they sacrificed alike.

We do not know his station in life, because from every station came the patriotic response of the five millions. I recall the days of creating armies, and the departing of caravels which braved the murderous seas to reach the battle lines for maintained nationality and preserved civilization. The service flag marked mansion and cottage alike, and riches were common to all homes in the consciousness of service to country.

We do not know the eminence of his birth, but we do know the glory of his death. He died for his country, and greater devotion hath no man than this. He died unquestioning, uncomplaining, with faith in his heart and hope on his lips, that his country should triumph and its civilization survive. As a typical soldier of this representative democracy, he fought and died, believing in the indisputable justice of his country's cause. Conscious of the world's upheaval, appraising the magnitude of a war the like of which had never horrified humanity before, perhaps he believed his to be a service destined to change the tide of human affairs.

In the death gloom of gas, the bursting of shells and rain of bullets, men face more intimately the great God over all, their souls are aflame, and consciousness expands and hearts are searched. With the din of battle, the glow of conflict, and the supreme trial of courage, come involuntarily the hurried appraisal of life and the contemplation of death's great mystery. On the threshold of eternity many a soldier, I can well believe, wondered how his ebbing blood would color the stream of human life, flowing on after his sacrifice. His patriotism was none less if he craved more than triumph of country; rather, it was greater if he hoped for a victory for all mankind. Indeed, I revere that citizen whose confidence in the righteousness of his country inspired belief that its triumph is the victory of humanity.

This American soldier went forth to battle with no hatred for any people in the world, but hating war and hating the purpose of every war for conquest. He cherished our national rights, and abhorred the threat of armed domination; and in the maelstrom of destruction and suffering and death he fired his shot for liberation of the captive conscience of the world. In advancing toward his objective was somewhere a thought of a world awakened; and we are here to testify undying gratitude and reverence for that thought of a wider freedom.

On such an occasion as this, amid such a scene, our thoughts alternate between defenders living and defenders dead. A grateful Republic will be worthy of them both. Our part is to atone for the losses of heroic dead by making a better Republic for the living.

Sleeping in these hallowed grounds are thousands of Americans who have given their blood for the baptism of freedom and its maintenance, armed exponents of the Nation's conscience.

It is better and nobler for their deeds. Burial here is rather more than a sign of the Government's favor; it is a suggestion of a tomb in the heart of the Nation, sorrowing for its noble dead.

To-day's ceremonies proclaim that the hero unknown is not unhonored. We gather him to the Nation's breast, within the shadow of the Capitol, of the towering shaft that honors Washington, the great father, and of the exquisite monument to Lincoln, the martyred savior. Here the inspirations of yesterday and the conscience of to-day forever unite to make the Republic worthy of his death for flag and country.

Ours are lofty resolutions to-day, as with tribute to the dead we consecrate ourselves to a better order for the living. With all my heart I wish we might say to the defenders who survive, to mothers who sorrow, to widows and children who mourn, that no such sacrifice shall be asked again.

It was my fortune recently to see a demonstration of modern warfare. It is no longer a conflict in chivalry, no more a test of militant manhood. It is only cruel, deliberate, scientific destruction. There was no contending enemy, only the theoretical defense of a hypothetical objective. But the attack was made with all the relentless methods of modern destruction. There was the rain of ruin from the aircraft, the thunder of artillery, followed by the unspeakable devastation wrought by bursting shells; there were mortars belching their bombs of desolation; machine guns concentrating their leaden storms; there was the Infantry, advancing, firing, and falling—like men with souls sacrificing for the decision. The flying missiles were revealed by illuminating tracers, so that we could note their flight and appraise their deadliness. The air was streaked with tiny flames marking the flight of massed destruction; while the effectiveness of the theoretical defense was impressed by the simulation of dead and wounded among those going forward, undaunted and unheeding. As this panorama of unutterable destruction visualized the horrors of modern conflict, there grew on me the sense of the failure of a civilization which can leave its problems to such cruel arbitrament. Surely no one in authority, with human attributes and a full appraisal of the patriotic loyalty of his countrymen, could ask the manhood of kingdom, empire, or republic to make such a sacrifice until all reason had failed, until appeal to justice through understanding had been denied, until every effort of love and consideration for fellow men had been exhausted, until freedom itself and inviolate honor had been brutally threatened.

I speak not as a pacifist fearing war, but as one who loves justice and hates war. I speak as one who believes the highest function of government is to give its citizens the security of peace, the opportunity to achieve, and the pursuit of happiness.

The loftiest tribute we can bestow to-day—the heroically earned tribute—fashioned in deliberate conviction, out of unclouded thought, neither shadowed by remorse nor made vain by fancies, is the commitment of this Republic to an advancement never made before. If American achievement is a cherished pride at home, if our unselfishness among nations is all we wish it to be, and ours is a helpful example in the world, then let us give of our influence and strength, yea, of our aspirations and convictions, to put mankind on a little higher plane, exulting and exalting, with war's distressing and depressing tragedies barred from the stage of righteous civilization.

There have been a thousand defenses justly and patriotically made; a thousand offenses which reason and righteousness ought to have stayed. Let us beseech all men to join us in seeking the rule under which reason and righteousness shall prevail.

Standing to-day on hallowed ground, conscious that all America has halted to share in the tribute of heart and mind and soul to this fellow American, and knowing that the world is noting this expression of the Republic's mindfulness, it is fitting to say that his sacrifice, and that of the millions dead, shall not be in vain. There must be, there shall be, the commanding voice of a conscious civilization against armed warfare.

As we return this poor clay to its mother soil, garlanded by love and covered with the decorations that only nations can bestow, I can sense the prayers of our people, of all peoples, that this Armistice Day shall mark the beginning of a new and lasting era of peace on earth, good will among men. Let me join in that prayer.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

ADDRESSES BEFORE THE FIRST SESSION OF THE CONFERENCE ON THE LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the President's address and the address of the Secretary of State delivered at the first session of the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments may be printed in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the President's address and the address of the Secretary of State delivered at the first session of the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments be printed in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Wyoming yield? Will the gentleman from Wyoming also include in that the addresses made by the other delegates at the opening of the conference? They have been all printed, and I think they should go in the Record, and I should like the gentleman from Wyoming to include that in his request; either put them in separately or as one. I have no objection to his request.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not certain that it would be possible to secure to-day accurate copies or translations of those addresses. I should certainly like to have them printed.

Mr. RANKIN. I have no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. But I doubt if they could be secured to-day.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MONDELL. Just a moment. I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. RANKIN. I have those speeches. They were published yesterday, I believe, in some of the papers and I cut them out. I shall be very glad to furnish them to the gentleman from Wyoming if he will insert them.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the gentleman accurate copies of those statements that the gentlemen who delivered them would want to vouch for? I have no objection to their being printed; in fact, I would be very glad to have them printed, but up to date I have not been able to secure copies. The copies printed must be authenticated copies and bear the O. K. of the gentlemen who delivered the addresses.

Mr. RANKIN. They all were written in advance, except, possibly, one or two. I heard all those addresses, and so far as I remember they are accurate as printed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I would prefer not to include those in my request, in the hope we may secure authenticated copies from those who spoke. I do not think they should go in to-day.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RANKIN. I have no objection.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming that the President's address and the address of the Secretary of State at the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments be printed in the Record? The Chair hears none.

The addresses are as follows:

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AT THE OPENING OF THE CONFERENCE ON LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS AT WASHINGTON NOVEMBER 12, 1921.

Mr. Secretary and members of the conference, ladies and gentlemen, it is a great and happy privilege to bid the delegates to this conference a cordial welcome to the Capital of the United States of America. It is not only a satisfaction to greet you because we were lately participants in a common cause, in which shared sacrifices and sorrows and triumphs brought our nations more closely together, but it is gratifying to address you as the spokesmen for nations whose convictions and attending actions have so much to do with the weal or woe of all mankind.

It is not possible to overappraise the importance of such a conference. It is no unseemly boast, no disparagement of other nations which, though not represented, are held in highest respect, to declare that the conclusions of this body will have a signal influence on all human progress—on the fortunes of the world.

Here is a meeting, I can well believe, which is an earnest of the awakened conscience of twentieth-century civilization. It is not a convention of remorse, nor a session of sorrow. It is not the conference of victors to define terms of settlement. Nor is it a council of nations seeking to remake humankind. It is rather a coming together, from all parts of the earth, to apply the better attributes of mankind to minimize the faults in our international relationships.

Speaking as official sponsor for the invitation, I think I may say the call is not of the United States of America alone; it is rather the spoken word of a war-wearied world, struggling for restoration, hungering and thirsting for better relationship; of humanity crying for relief and craving assurances of lasting peace.

It is easy to understand this world-wide aspiration. The glory of triumph, the rejoicing in achievement, the love of liberty, the devotion to country, the pangs of sorrow, the burdens of debt, the desolation of ruin—all these are appraised alike in all lands. Here in the United States we are but freshly turned from the burial of an unknown American soldier, when a nation sorrowed while paying him tribute. Whether it was spoken or not, a hundred millions of our people were summing up the inexcusable causes, the incalculable cost, the unspeakable sacrifices, and the unutterable sorrows, and there was the ever-impelling question: How can humanity justify or God forgive? Human hate demands no such toll; ambition and greed must be denied it. If misunderstanding must take the blame, then let us banish it, and let understanding rule and make good will regnant everywhere. All of us demand liberty and justice. There can not be one without the other, and they must be held the unquestioned possession of all peoples. Inherent rights are of God, and the tragedies of the world originate in their attempted denial. The world to-day is infringing their enjoyment by arming to defend or deny, when simple sanity calls for their recognition through common understanding.

Out of the cataclysm of the World War came new fellowships, new convictions, new aspirations. It is ours to make the most of them. A world staggering with debt needs its burden lifted. Humanity which has been shocked by wanton destruction would minimize the agencies of that destruction. Contemplating the measureless cost of war and the continuing burden of armament, all thoughtful peoples wish for real limitation of armament and would like war outlawed. In soberest reflection the world's hundreds of millions who pay in peace and die in war wish their statesmen to turn the expenditures for destruction into means of construction, aimed at a higher state for those who live and follow after.

It is not alone that the world can not readjust itself and cast aside the excess burdens without relief from the leaders of men. War has grown progressively cruel and more destructive from the first recorded conflict to this pregnant day, and the reverse order would more become our boasted civilization.

Gentlemen of the conference, the United States welcomes you with unselfish hands. We have no fears; we have no sordid ends to serve; we suspect no enemy; we contemplate or apprehend no conquest. Content with what we have, we seek nothing which is another's. We only wish to do with you that finer, nobler thing which no nation can do alone.

We wish to sit with you at the table of international understanding and good will. In good conscience we are eager to meet you frankly, and invite and offer cooperation. The world demands a sober contemplation of the existing order and the realization that there can be no cure without sacrifice, not by one of us, but by all of us.

I do not mean surrendered rights, or narrowed freedom, or denied aspirations, or ignored national necessities. Our Republic would no more ask for these than it would give. No pride need be humbled, no nationality submerged, but I would have a mergence of minds committing all of us to less preparation for war and more enjoyment of fortunate peace.

The higher hopes come of the spirit of our coming together. It is but just to recognize varying needs and peculiar positions. Nothing can be accomplished in disregard of national apprehensions. Rather, we should act together to remove the causes of apprehensions. This is not to be done in intrigue. Greater assurance is found in the exchanges of simple honesty and directness, among men resolved to accomplish as becomes leaders among nations, when civilization itself has come to its crucial test.

It is not to be challenged that government fails when the excess of its cost robs the people of the way to happiness and the opportunity to achieve. If the finer sentiments were not urging, the cold, hard facts of excessive cost and the eloquence of economics would urge us to reduce our armaments. If the concept of a better order does not appeal, then let us ponder the burden and the blight of continued competition.

It is not to be denied that the world has swung along throughout the ages without heeding this call from the kindlier hearts of men. But the same world never before was so tragically brought to realization of the utter futility of passion's sway when reason and conscience and fellowship point a nobler way.

I can speak officially only for our United States. Our hundred millions frankly want less of armament and none of war.

Wholly free from guile, sure in our own minds that we harbor no unworthy designs, we accredit the world with the same good intent. So I welcome you, not alone in good will and high purpose, but with high faith.

We are met for a service to mankind. In all simplicity, in all honesty and all honor, there may be written here the avowals of a world conscience refined by the consuming fires of war, and made more sensitive by the anxious aftermath. I hope for that understanding which will emphasize the guaranties of peace, and for commitments to less burdens and a better order which will tranquilize the world. In such an accomplishment there will be added glory to your flags and ours, and the rejoicing of mankind will make the transcending music of all succeeding time.

ADDRESS OF CHARLES E. HUGHES, SECRETARY OF STATE OF THE UNITED STATES AND AMERICAN COMMISSIONER TO THE CONFERENCE ON LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS, ON ASSUMING THE DUTIES OF PRESIDING OFFICER AT THE CONFERENCE, WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 12, 1921.

"Gentlemen, it is with a deep sense of privilege and responsibility that I accept the honor you have conferred.

"Permit me to express the most cordial appreciation of the assurances of friendly cooperation which have been generously expressed by the representatives of all the invited Governments. The earnest desire and purpose, manifested in every step in the approach to this meeting, that we should meet the reasonable expectation of a watching world by effective action suited to the opportunity is the best augury for the success of the conference.

"The President invited the Governments of the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan to participate in a conference on the subject of limitation of armament, in connection with which Pacific and Far Eastern questions would also be discussed. It would have been most agreeable to the President to have invited all the powers to take part in this conference, but it was thought to be a time when other considerations should yield to the practical requirements of the existing exigency, and in this view the invitation was extended to the group known as the principal allied and associated powers, which, by reason of the conditions produced by the war, control in the main the armament of the world. The opportunity to limit armament lies within their grasp.

"It was recognized, however, that the interests of other powers in the Far East made it appropriate that they should be invited to participate in the discussion of Pacific and Far Eastern problems, and, with the approval of the five powers, an invitation to take part in the discussion of those questions has been extended to Belgium, China, the Netherlands, and Portugal.

"The inclusion of the proposal for the discussion of Pacific and Far Eastern questions was not for the purpose of embarrassing or delaying an agreement for limitation of armament, but rather to support that undertaking by availing ourselves of this meeting to endeavor to reach a common understanding as to the principles and policies to be followed in the Far East and thus greatly to diminish, and if possible wholly to remove, discernible sources of controversy. It is believed that by interchanges of views at this opportune time the Governments represented here may find a basis of accord and thus give expression to their desire to assure enduring friendship.

"In the public discussions which have preceded the conference there have been apparently two competing views; one, that the consideration of armament should await the result of the discussion of Far Eastern questions, and another, that the latter discussion should be postponed until an agreement for limitation of armament has been reached. I am unable to find sufficient reason for adopting either of these extreme views. I think that it would be most unfortunate if we should disappoint the hopes which have attached to this meeting by a postponement of the consideration of the first subject. The world looks to this conference to relieve humanity of the crushing burden created by competition in armament, and it is the view of the American Government that we should meet that expectation without any unnecessary delay. It is therefore proposed that the conference should proceed at once to consider the question of the limitation of armament.

"This, however, does not mean that we must postpone the examination of Far Eastern questions. These questions of vast importance press for solution. It is hoped that immediate provision may be made to deal with them adequately, and it is suggested that it may be found to be entirely practicable through the distribution of the work among designated committees to make progress to the ends sought to be achieved without either subject being treated as a hindrance to the proper consideration and disposition of the other.

"The proposal to limit armament by an agreement of the powers is not a new one, and we are admonished by the futility of earlier efforts. It may be well to recall the noble aspirations which were voiced 23 years ago in the imperial rescript of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia. It was then pointed out with clarity and emphasis that 'The intellectual and physical strength of the nations, labor, and capital are for the major part diverted from their natural application and unproductively consumed. Hundreds of millions are devoted to acquiring terrible engines of destruction, which, though to-day regarded as the last word of science, are destined to-morrow to lose all value in consequence of some fresh discovery in the same field. National culture, economic progress, and the production of wealth are either paralyzed or checked in their development. Moreover, in proportion as the armaments of each power increase, so do they less and less fulfill the object which the Governments have set before themselves. The economic crises, due in great part to the system of armaments a l'outrance and the continual danger which lies in this massing of war materials, are transforming the armed peace of our days into a crushing burden, which the peoples have more and more difficulty in bearing. It appears evident, then, that if this state of things were prolonged it would inevitably lead to the calamity which it is desired to avert, and the horrors of which make every thinking man shudder in advance. To put an end to these incessant armaments and to seek the means of warding off the calamities which are threatening the whole world—such is the supreme duty which is to-day imposed on all States.'

"It was with this sense of obligation that His Majesty the Emperor of Russia proposed the conference, which was 'to occupy itself with this grave problem' and which met at The Hague in the year 1899. Important as were the deliberations and conclusions of that conference, especially with respect to the pacific settlement of international disputes, its result in the specific matter of limitation of armament went no further than the adoption of a final resolution setting forth the opinion 'that the restriction of military charges, which are at present a heavy burden on the world, is extremely desirable for the increase of the material and moral welfare of mankind,' and the utterance of the wish that the Governments 'may examine the possibility of an agreement as to the limitation of armed forces by land and sea, and of war budgets.'

"It was seven years later that the Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. Elihu Root, in answering a note of the Russian ambassador suggesting in outline a program of the second peace conference, said: 'The Government of the United States, therefore, feels it to be its duty to reserve for itself the liberty to propose to the second peace conference, as one of the subjects for consideration, the reduction or limitation of armaments, in the hope that, if nothing further can be accomplished, some slight advance may be made toward the realization of the lofty conception which actuated the Emperor of Russia in calling the first conference.' It is significant that the Imperial German Government expressed itself as 'absolutely opposed to the question of disarmament' and that the Emperor of Germany threatened to decline to send delegates if the subject of disarmament was to be discussed. In view, however, of the resolution which had been adopted at the first Hague conference the delegates of the United States were instructed that the subject of limitation of armament 'should be regarded as unfinished business, and that the second conference should ascertain and give full consideration to the results of such examination as the Governments may have given to the possibility of an agreement pursuant to the wish expressed by the first conference.' But by reason of the obstacles which the subject had encountered, the second peace conference at The Hague, although it made notable progress in provision for the peaceful settlement of controversies, was unable to deal with limitation of armament except by a resolution in the following general terms: 'The conference confirms the resolution adopted by the conference of 1899 in regard to the limitation of military expenditure; and inasmuch as military expenditure has considerably increased in almost every country since that time the conference declares that it is eminently desirable that the Governments should resume the serious examination of this question.'

"This was the fruition of the efforts of eight years. Although the effect was clearly perceived, the race in preparation of armament, wholly unaffected by these futile suggestions, went on until it fittingly culminated in the greatest war of history; and we are now suffering from the unparalleled loss of life, the destruction of hopes, the economic dislocations, and the widespread impoverishment which measure the cost of the victory over the brutal pretensions of military force.

"But if we are warned by the inadequacy of earlier endeavors for limitation of armament, we can not fail to recognize the extraordinary opportunity now presented. We not only have the lessons of the past to guide us, not only do we have the reaction from the disillusioning experiences of war, but we must meet the challenge of imperative economic demands. What was convenient or highly desirable before is now a matter of vital necessity. If there is to be economic rehabilitation, if the longings for reasonable progress are not to be denied, if we are to be spared the uprisings of peoples made desperate in the desire to shake off burdens no longer endurable, competition in armament must stop. The present opportunity not only derives its advantage from a general appreciation of this fact, but the power to deal with the exigency now rests with a small group of nations, represented here, who have every reason to desire peace and to promote amity. The astounding ambition which lay athwart the promise of the second Hague conference no longer menaces the world, and the great opportunity of liberty-loving and peace-preserving democracies has come. Is it not plain that the time has passed for mere resolutions that the responsible powers should examine the question of limitation of armament? We can no longer content ourselves with investigations, with statistics, with reports, with the circumlocution of inquiry. The essential facts are sufficiently known. The time has come, and this conference has been called, not for general resolutions or mutual advice, but for action. We meet with full understanding that the aspirations of mankind are not to be defeated either by plausible suggestions of postponement or by impracticable counsels of perfection. Power and responsibility are here and the world awaits a practicable program which shall at once be put into execution.

"I am confident that I shall have your approval in suggesting that in this matter, as well as in others before the conference, it is desirable to follow the course of procedure which has the best promise of achievement rather than one which would facilitate division; and thus, constantly aiming to agree so far as possible, we shall, with each point of agreement, make it easier to proceed to others.

"The question, in relation to armament, which may be regarded as of primary importance at this time, and with which we can deal most promptly and effectively, is the limitation of naval armament. There are certain general considerations which may be deemed pertinent to this subject.

"The first is that the core of the difficulty is to be found in the competition in naval programs, and that, in order appropriately to limit naval armament, competition in its production must be abandoned. Competition will not be remedied by resolves with respect to the method of its continuance. One program inevitably leads to another, and if competition continues, its regulation is impracticable. There is only one adequate way out and that is to end it now.

"It is apparent that this can not be accomplished without serious sacrifices. Enormous sums have been expended upon ships under construction and building programs which are now under way can not be given up without heavy loss. Yet if the present construction of capital ships goes forward other ships will inevitably be built to rival them and this will lead to still others. Thus the race will continue so long as ability to continue lasts. The effort to escape sacrifices is futile. We must face them or yield our purpose.

"It is also clear that no one of the naval powers should be expected to make these sacrifices alone. The only hope of limitation of naval armament is by agreement among the nations concerned, and this agreement should be entirely fair and reasonable in the extent of the sacrifices required of each of the powers. In considering the basis of such an agreement, and the commensurate sacrifices to be required, it is necessary to have regard to the existing naval strength of the great naval powers, including the extent of construction already effected in the case of ships in process. This follows from the fact that one nation is as free to compete as another, and each may find grounds for its action. What one may do another may demand the opportunity to rival, and we remain in the thrall of competitive effort. I may add that the American delegates are advised by their naval experts that the tonnage of capital ships may fairly be taken to measure the relative strength of navies, as the provision for auxiliary combatant craft should sustain a reasonable relation to the capital-ship tonnage allowed.

"It would also seem to be a vital part of a plan for the limitation of naval armament that there should be a naval holiday. It is proposed that for a period of not less than 10 years there should be no further construction of capital ships.

"I am happy to say that I am at liberty to go beyond these general propositions and, on behalf of the American delegation acting under the instructions of the President of the United States, to submit to you a concrete proposition for an agreement for the limitation of naval armament.

"It should be added that this proposal immediately concerns the British Empire, Japan, and the United States. In view of the extraordinary conditions due to the World War affecting the existing strength of the navies of France and Italy, it is not thought to be necessary to discuss at this stage of the proceedings the tonnage allowance of these nations, but the United States proposes that this matter be reserved for the later consideration of the conference.

"In making the present proposal the United States is most solicitous to deal with the question upon an entirely reasonable and practicable basis, to the end that the just interests of all shall be adequately guarded and that national security and defense shall be maintained. Four general principles have been applied;

"(1) That all capital-ship building programs, either actual or projected, should be abandoned;

"(2) That further reduction should be made through the scrapping of certain of the older ships;

"(3) That in general regard should be had to the existing naval strength of the powers concerned;

"(4) That the capital-ship tonnage should be used as the measurement of strength for navies and a proportionate allowance of auxiliary combatant craft prescribed.

"The principal features of the proposed agreement are as follows:

"CAPITAL SHIPS.

"UNITED STATES.

"The United States is now completing its program of 1916 calling for 10 new battleships and 6 battle cruisers. One battleship has been completed. The others are in various stages of construction; in some cases from 60 to over 80 per cent of the construction has been done. On these 15 capital ships now being built over $330,000,000 have been spent. Still, the United States is willing in the interest of an immediate limitation of naval armament to scrap all these ships.

"The United States proposes, if this plan is accepted—

"(1) To scrap all capital ships now under construction. This includes 6 battle cruisers and 7 battleships on the ways and in course of building, and 2 battleships launched.

"The total number of new capital ships thus to be scrapped is 15. The total tonnage of the new capital ships when completed would be 618,000 tons.

"(2) To scrap all of the older battleships up to, but not including, the Delaware and North Dakota. The number of these old battleships to be scrapped is 15. Their total tonnage is 227,740 tons.

"Thus the number of capital ships to be scrapped by the United States, if this plan is accepted, is 30, with an aggregate tonnage (including that of ships in construction, if completed) of 845,740 tons.

"GREAT BRITAIN.

"The plan contemplates that Great Britain and Japan shall take action which is fairly commensurate with this action on the part of the United States.

"It is proposed that Great Britain—

"(1) Shall stop further construction of the four new Hoods, the new capital ships not laid down but upon which money has been spent. These four ships, if completed, would have tonnage displacement of 172,000 tons.

"(2) Shall, in addition, scrap her predreadnaughts, second line battleships, and first-line battleships up to, but not including, the King George V class.

"These, with certain predreadnaughts which it is understood have already been scrapped, would amount to 19 capital ships and a tonnage reduction of 411,375 tons.

"The total tonnage of ships thus to be scrapped by Great Britain (including the tonnage of the four Hoods, if completed) would be 583,375 tons.

"JAPAN.

"It is proposed that Japan—

"(1) Shall abandon her program of ships not yet laid down, viz, the Kii, Oicari, No. 7, and No. 8 battleships, and Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8 battle cruisers.

"It should be observed that this does not involve the stopping of construction, as the construction of none of these ships has been begun.

"(2) Shall scrap three capital ships (the Mutsu launched, the Tosa, and Kago in course of building) and four battle cruisers (the Amagi and Akagi in course of building, and the Atoga and Takao not yet laid down, but for which certain material has been assembled).

"The total number of new capital ships to be scrapped under this paragraph is seven. The total tonnage of these new capital ships when completed would be 289,100 tons.

"(3) Shall scrap all predreadnaughts and battleships of the second line. This would include the scrapping of all ships up to but not including the Settsu; that is, the scrapping of 10 older ships, with a total tonnage of 159,828 tons.

"The total reduction of tonnage on vessels existing, laid down, or for which material has been assembled (taking the tonnage of the new ships when completed) would be 448,928 tons.

"Thus, under this plan there would be immediately destroyed, of the navies of the three powers, 66 capital fighting ships, built and building, with a total tonnage of 1,878,043.

"It is proposed that it should be agreed by the United States, Great Britain, and Japan that their navies, with respect to capital ships, within three months after the making of the agreement, shall consist of certain ships designated in the proposal and numbering for the United States, 18; for Great Britain, 22; for Japan, 10.

"The tonnage of these ships would be as follows: Of the United States, 500,650; of Great Britain, 604,450; of Japan, 299,700. In reaching this result, the age factor in the case of the respective navies has received appropriate consideration.

"REPLACEMENT.

"With respect to replacement, the United States proposes:

"(1) That it be agreed that the first replacement tonnage shall not be laid down until 10 years from the date of the agreement;

"(2) That replacement be limited by an agreed maximum of capital ship tonnage as follows:

	Tons.
"For the United States.....	500,000
"For Great Britain.....	500,000
"For Japan.....	300,000

"(3) That subject to the 10-year limitation above fixed and the maximum standard, capital ships may be replaced when they are 20 years old by new capital ship construction;

"(4) That no capital ship shall be built in replacement with a tonnage displacement of more than 35,000 tons.

"I have sketched the proposal only in outline, leaving the technical details to be supplied by the formal proposition which is ready for submission to the delegates.

"The plan includes provision for the limitation of auxiliary combatant craft. This term embraces three classes, that is (1) auxiliary surface combatant craft, such as cruisers (exclusive of battle cruisers), flotilla, leaders, destroyers, and various surface types; (2) submarines; and (3) airplane carriers.

"I shall not attempt to review the proposals for these various classes, as they bear a definite relation to the provisions for capital fighting ships.

"With the acceptance of this plan the burden of meeting the demands of competition in naval armament will be lifted. Enormous sums will be released to aid the progress of civilization. At the same time the proper demands of national defense will be adequately met and the nations will have ample opportunity during the naval holiday of 10 years to consider their future course. Preparation for offensive naval war will stop now.

"I shall not attempt at this time to take up the other topics which have been listed upon the tentative agenda proposed in anticipation of the conference."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the President's address and the address of the Secretary of State delivered at the first session of the conference on the limitations of armaments may be printed as a House document.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the address of the President and the Secretary of State delivered at the first session of the conference on the limitations of armaments be printed as a House document. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Will the gentleman from Wyoming include in that also copies of those other speeches made at the opening as soon as authentic copies are secured?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, I doubt if that ought to be done. I have no objection to their being printed in the RECORD, but the responses which were made by the foreign representatives were in no wise intended to be responsive to the proposition of the head of the American delegation, and while they were all of them very eloquent and in every way worthy of commendation and approval they do not discuss the questions actually presented by Secretary Hughes. They were pleasantly spoken felicitations and statements of a general nature.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to say to the gentleman from Wyoming I shall not object, but I make the unanimous-consent request that they, with the other speeches that are authenticated, be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what will it cost to print these as a public document? Has the gentleman consulted the Printing Committee and would it come within the rule of limitation?

Mr. MONDELL. The cost would be comparatively small, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. GARNER. Will it come within the limitation of the authorization for such publications?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. How many copies does the gentleman propose? The limit, I believe, is 900.

Mr. MONDELL. I think we shall want a considerable number of those documents.

Mr. GARNER. That is not the gentleman's request. The gentleman's request is that it be furnished as a House document. How many copies are printed under that request?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will wait until I have concluded my statement, I wish to say that I have asked to have it printed as a House document. I desire to have that done. I had intended also to get the view of the House as to the total number that ought to be printed. My own belief is that there should be a very considerable number of those documents printed.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman will have to couple them together. We will have to know what he wants before he gets unanimous consent. He had best make his request as he intends it to be finally. We can not take it up by tidbits. The House is entitled to know. If the House intends to print it as a House document and then have a thousand or a million—

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Texas object?

Mr. GARNER. I do until I know what you intend to do.

Mr. DYER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MONDELL. I will make the request—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. GARNER. By whom, may I ask?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. GARNER. Then the gentleman from Missouri forces an objection. I object. Let the gentleman from Missouri take the responsibility. We are trying—

Mr. DYER. I am perfectly willing to assume the responsibility.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Texas object to having these documents printed?

Mr. GARNER. I ask for recognition, Mr. Speaker, to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if I can not have the opportunity to submit a request in regard to the matter, I do not believe I shall yield to some one else to discuss the matter. [Applause.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the order for to-day is business on the calendar from the District of Columbia Committee.

PHYSICAL EXAMINATIONS IN JUVENILE COURT.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and call up the bill H. R. 7883.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7883) to provide for the examination of persons brought before the juvenile court of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill reported by the Clerk.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. McARTHUR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 7883, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7883) to provide for the examination of persons brought before the juvenile court of the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created and established a clinic attached to the juvenile court of the District of Columbia for the mental and physical examination and study of persons who may be brought before the said juvenile court whenever in the discretion of the judge of said court such examination and study shall be deemed necessary before, during, or after trial.

That the judge of the juvenile court shall have power to appoint the following: A physician (male) at a salary of $5,000 per annum, who shall have had special training as a psychiatrist in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defects; a psychiatric case worker at a salary of $1,800 per annum; and a psychologist at a salary of $2,000 per annum, and who shall devote their entire time to such work; and a physician (female) at a salary of $1,000 per annum, who shall devote part time to such work for the purpose of conducting such clinic under the supervision of the judge of said court. Such officers shall perform such duties and be governed by such regulations as may be prescribed by the presiding judge, and such judge is authorized to remove any of them for cause.

SEC. 2. That the appropriation of $9,800 for this purpose, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, authorized, 40 per cent to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and 60 per cent to be paid out of the revenue of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, unless the House desires to have some further explanation of this bill, I think the bill and the report will speak for themselves.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Certainly.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. In line 6 on the first page it says:

Who may be brought before the said juvenile court.

Does that mean brought before the court by judicial process for crime or for this examination?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Brought before the court for some judicial crime.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Does not the gentleman think that the language of the bill ought to be plain that that is what it is?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to accept any suggestion from any legal light or mind in the House. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It just occurred to me that the language did not make it clear that you are only dealing with persons who are brought before the court by judicial process in the ordinary way. It says:

There is hereby created and established a clinic attached to the juvenile court of the District of Columbia for the mental and physical examination and study of persons who may be brought before the said juvenile court.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that there could possibly be any misunderstanding, because only those who have been charged with some crime are brought before this court. No others are. Consequently you could not bring them before the court, although I think it would be a very wise provision if they could be brought before it. The gentleman probably is not aware of the condition that exists in the city of Washington. We have a beautiful city. Everything on the surface is all that heart could desire, but underneath there is a condition existing which is a menace to the whole population. If the gentleman could have been before our committee early in the session and heard the testimony of those whose business it is to make a study of such questions, he would have been alarmed, as members of the committee were. And although we could not meet the situation as we would have desired, although we could not protect the people of the community as we desired, still through this bill we are enabled to reach some of the children, some of whom come in daily contact with the lives of the Members and their families. That was the purpose of the bill, and in order that every interest might be safeguarded we did not go as far as many members of the committee would have liked to go. It is a difficult question to discuss before the Members of Congress and before the galleries. One's language must necessarily be guarded. Suffice to say, that out of over 1,200 children, school children of the city of Washington, examined by the clinic which existed during the war or part of the war, 22 and a fraction per cent of colored girls examined were found to be afflicted with an almost unmentionable disease. And although the disease is not contagious, it is so highly infectious that the two terms are almost analogous. When this disease can be transmitted by contact, either through the touching of a door knob, the handling of books, laundering of clothing, serving meals, and all that sort of thing, you can imagine to what an extent this infection might be spread if means were not taken to control it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I am inclined to think that the subsequent language which says, "shall be deemed necessary before, during, or after trial," would clarify the former language. It would only mean those persons who were brought there by judicial process. It might be desirable—I do not know that I agree with the gentleman—to give the judge complete power to bring anybody there by judicial process. But I took it that it was not the purpose of this bill to do it, and the only suggestion I made was as to clarifying the language.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman provides in this bill that there shall be two physicians appointed—one a man physician at a salary of $5,000, and a woman physician at a salary of $1,000. Will the gentleman tell us why there is so great a discrepancy between the salaries of the two physicians?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The clinic that existed during the war had the services of one male physician. The cases that come before the court frequently are of a class and character that only a strong, able-bodied male physician would be proper to deal with them. In other words, they are overgrown, abnormal boys, mostly colored, and so a male physician has been provided for full time. If the gentleman will read the bill closely, he will find that the woman physician is engaged for part time, and will make the examination of all of the girls who are brought before the clinic or the court, and be abundantly able to take care of them and examine them during the part time.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman's bill does not provide that the woman physician shall examine all the female patients, or female wards, or whatever you may term them. Does the gentleman intend to provide that the woman physician shall examine all the female cases?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I do not think that is essential. I have perfect faith in the judge of the court, Judge Sellers, that she will see to it that a proper assignment is made of these cases and that a proper physician shall make the examinations.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. After you have created this surgical and medical bureau in connection with the juvenile court and you have discovered that a dozen or fifty or a hundred of these offenders who are haled before the court are afflicted with venereal diseases of the various forms, what are you going to do with them after that?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Delaware that that is a problem which this bill can not possibly reach. It is a problem that has got to be met sooner or later, and the sooner the better. It is a good deal better to spend a few thousands of dollars for a preventive measure than later on to spend millions to try to stamp out a disease or a menace which, if it is allowed to spread and grow, will eventually touch every family, every man, woman, and child in the community.

The War and the Navy Departments took up this work for the protection of our defenders during the war. Through lack of appropriation, they have had to discontinue that work in Washington.

Almost every other city and State in the Union has passed laws for the protection of their people. They learned a lesson during the war which they have not forgotten.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman let me ask him some more questions?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Wait until I answer the first one. And they are making provision to take care of and to cure these people who are infected. The city of Washington, which is governed largely by this body, has been very backward. It has made no provision as yet, but if this clinic finds a diseased person they can order that person to the hospital for proper treatment.

Mr. LAYTON. Under what law?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I can not tell the gentleman the law now.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. WINGO. I will state to the gentleman that evidently there is some Federal law, because there have been two cases, one at Fort Smith, Ark., in the Federal court there, and another in a Federal court in Iowa, under which Federal authorities undertook to maintain a quarantine and punish for violations. I think it may be under the authority of the Public Health Service to quarantine people. I think that question was raised, based upon interstate travel of the diseased persons, possibly. But I hope the gentleman will develop the idea. This provides for a compulsory physical examination, does it not?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. What authority now can order a compulsory mental examination in the District?

Mr. UNDERHILL. There is absolutely no authority to-day in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WINGO. Evidently there is some authority authorized to take care of some insane person in the District of Columbia. Ordinarily probate courts have that jurisdiction in the States. That is my information. Now, has the District of Columbia a separate probate court?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I can not answer that question. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. DYER. I will say that the probate work is done by one of the justices of the supreme court. He acts as a judge in such matters as assigned to same from time to time by general term.

Mr. WINGO. With the permission of the gentleman, I wish to inquire, Has that judge now authority to order compulsory mental and physical examinations of persons?

Mr. DYER. He has authority in probate matters to determine whether a person should be committed to an asylum.

Mr. WINGO. I presume he has authority in mental cases, but there is no authority to order a physical examination unless it be under the orders of the Public Health Service that are relied upon, as I think. I am speaking without very definite information about the two cases I referred to.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That applies only, I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas, to contagious diseases. It does not apply to diseases of this nature.

Mr. WINGO. Yes. The two cases I referred to were infectious venereal diseases.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Those are infectious, and there is no court that is authorized to order an examination.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Referring to the bill, on page 1, line 11, a physician is to be appointed and the salary fixed at $5,000, and then, on lines 5 and 6, on page 2, the bill authorizes a physician, a female, at $1,000 per annum. What objection would the gentleman have to striking out the word "male," in line 11, page 1, so that the juvenile judge might determine from her experience whether it would be better for the boys and girls to have a male and a female physician.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will say that this feature of the bill was drawn by Judge Kathryn Sellers. It was drawn after experience both with and without a clinic. The majority of cases coming before this court are of boys of abnormal size and development. It requires a male physician's full time to carry on the work as it was carried on during the war. It was thought wise, however, in addition to the male physician to have a female physician who might be employed part of the time, and who could examine the girls who come before the court in very much reduced numbers.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman's explanation is luminous as to the effect of the bill. Will the gentleman give us the benefit of his experience and information on this subject relative to the proportion of boys and the proportion of girls that come before the juvenile court for examination and treatment?

Mr. UNDERHILL. During the short time the clinic was in existence in the city of Washington there were 348 white males, 460 colored males, 62 white girls, and 118 colored girls brought before the court.

Mr. RAKER. One further question. There are then 180 females that have come before the court in that length of time. Some go to the Reformatory School for Girls. Does not the gentleman believe that we ought to get a female physician and pay her a higher wage than is designated in this bill? Two thousand dollars, $3,000, $4,000, or $5,000 is nothing for the good it will do for the girls who ought to have a physician to give her time and attention to it. Some of us see these things irrespective of whether the doctors agree or not, and there ought to be results, and you ought to have a female physician and pay her enough to give her time to the work. Does not the gentleman think that ought to be done?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I appreciate the spirit of the gentleman from California and am willing to accept some suggestions that he may make. But this bill is drawn along the lines which the United States Government clinic established during the war. At that time they had the whole time and services of a male physician, and in addition to that a physical examination of girls was made by Dr. Ellen Oppenheimer, of the Public Health Service. It was found that they did not require the whole time of the female physician. I think that all the necessities of the situation will be met by the terms of the present bill.

Mr. RAKER. I have Judge Sellers's statement before the committee, and I rely a good deal on her statement and her judgment, knowing her splendid record in the juvenile court, and her statements on this matter would lead me a long ways. But let me ask the gentleman, Does Judge Sellers say that she is satisfied with this provision for a female physician?

Mr. UNDERHILL. It may be embarrassing to Judge Sellers for me to say that she has been criticized very harshly by some women of the country, who seem to think that she has apparently discriminated between the male and the female physicians. In spite of that she has stuck by her guns for the good of the juvenile court and the clinic, and not simply to create an office for a woman.

Mr. RAKER. In justice to Judge Sellers I want to say that there are 800 husky boys and 180 girls, and the question is whether a female physician is paid enough to take care of those girls?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think sufficient is paid her and she will be able to give sufficient time. Not only that, but I pledge you that if it is not enough Judge Sellers will come back here for a higher salary, and she will find backers in the gentleman from California and myself.

Mr. RAKER. She certainly will.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. RAYBURN. There is no clinic connected with the juvenile court now?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not in Washington.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman expects the clinic to deal with more than psychiatric diseases?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does not the bill cut the physicians off from anything except psychiatric cases by the language of this bill? In other words, the second paragraph of the bill reads as follows:

That the judge of the juvenile court shall have power to appoint the following: A physician (male) at a salary of $5,000 per annum, who shall have had special training as a psychiatrist in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defects.

Now, it seems to me that the way that language is framed the physicians would have to devote all their time to psychiatric cases and not to anything else.

Mr. UNDERHILL. No; the cases are tabulated, and under the proceedings of the clinic had during the war they attended to all those cases. If I had the time, I would give the gentleman a classification of all the cases examined.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is not answering my question. I am trying to take the language of the gentleman and suggest something that will make it mean what he wants it to mean. This language says that these physicians shall be appointed, and they are the only board, and then the bill refers specifically to the psychiatric cases and says that that is the only thing they are to devote their time to. Under the language of the bill I doubt whether they can devote their time to anything else.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think the gentleman need have no fear along that line. I do not think anybody would for a moment raise the question of what branch of work these physicians would best occupy themselves.

Mr. RAYBURN. But the gentleman mentioned one branch only and says that they are to devote their entire time to that. I do not see how under that language they can devote themselves to anything else.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I acknowledge a deficiency of knowledge in respect to the word "psychiatric."

Mr. RAYBURN. This psychiatric trouble is a mental trouble.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. And only so. Growing out of the war we had thousands of these cases. They are taken care of at special hospitals where they do not treat people for anything else.

Mr. UNDERHILL. What would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. RAYBURN. I suggest putting in some words that will make it clear or else striking out the words that they shall devote their entire time to this thing.

Mr. ARENTZ and Mr. LAYTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. One at a time.

Mr. LAYTON. I have been trying to get the gentleman's attention for some time.

Mr. GILBERT rose.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

Mr. GILBERT. I will suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] and also to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] that such language must be read in connection with line 5 on page 1—for the mental and physical examination and study of persons who may be brought before the said juvenile court.

A proper construction of line 4 on page 2 does not confine it simply to the mental work but has reference to the entire work as set out by the bill, and they would also have supervision over mental and physical defects of all kinds of children brought before that court as a matter of law.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will first ask the gentleman from Texas if that does not meet his objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not at all. I read all of that before I asked the question. The first paragraph of the bill talks about a clinic. Then you appoint a board of doctors down here to carry that out, and name specifically what they shall devote their time to.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. This bill provides that these doctors can do something before a clinic. Where at any other place in the bill is it told of anything else that they can do, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. UNDERHILL. According to the gentleman from Texas—

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, I am not asking him, I am asking the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman wrote the bill and he ought to know. Is there any passage in the bill that gives these men any right to do anything else than before a clinic?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Let me first correct the gentleman from Kansas. I wish I had the legal knowledge to draw such a bill, but the bill was drawn by Judge Sellers.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. I will say to the gentleman and also to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] that there is now in process of formulation before the committee what we regard as a companion bill to this which makes provision for the care and treatment of these people who are sentenced by the juvenile court. We have been unable to frame the bill or to report it out principally on account of the decision of the Court of Appeals which has some reference to the jurisdiction over these people. Hence we proceed with this and go as far as we can with it.

Mr. LITTLE. So far it is conceded that there is nothing in the bill which gives a man any right to do anything except at a clinic. Does the gentleman want him to have any other power than that?

Mr. FOCHT. For confinement and enforced treatment?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not care. Does the gentleman want him to do anything else?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Why, then, not say so and put it in the bill?

Mr. FOCHT. We have just gone as far as we can with this bill.

Mr. LITTLE. But such a sentence can be placed in the bill. As the bill now stands these men can not do anything except at a clinic. The doctor gets $5,000 a year for that, and if the gentleman wants this bill to pass I should think it would be easy for him to write some sentence and say that in addition to these duties this man can do certain other things.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman from Kansas think that the Congress can legislate to give a physician authority to compel a person to submit to an examination?

Mr. LAYTON. That is the question.

Mr. FOCHT. That is the serious question, and we are working it out, but we can not do that this fall.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. The judge of the juvenile court is under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of the United States; is not that true?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I take the gentleman's word for it.

Mr. ARENTZ. The youths coming under the jurisdiction of the doctor to be appointed by this judge are strictly District of Columbia people?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. Coming under that same jurisdiction would be the Board of Children's Guardians, the House of Detention, the National Training School for Boys, and the National Training School for Girls. All of the children that would come under the jurisdiction of these different associations or departments would be of about the same age as those under the control of the District of Columbia or under the jurisdiction of the juvenile court. Why not include in this bill a broader field so as to cover the Board of Children's Guardians, the House of Detention, the National Training School for Boys, and the National Training School for Girls, and then have the men make the appointment who really know something about these other institutions—in other words, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, we are seeking to cure an evil that exists. We are trying to meet a situation in the best and most direct form.

We do not expect to reform all evils that surround or are underneath the city of Washington. We do not wish to connect or to complicate this by bringing in a whole lot of other institutions or different departments. We want to give Judge Sellers, of the juvenile court of the city of Washington, an opportunity to have a clinic for these children who are diseased and have them examined as she sees fit.

Mr. ARENTZ. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are responsible for conditions within the District. They are responsible for conditions in these different institutions which I have mentioned—the Board of Children's Guardians, the House of Detention, the National Training Schools for Boys and Girls. Why should they not have jurisdiction? Are we going to try to save money by appointing four more physicians to look after each one of these four different institutions? It seems to me if we are going to help the juvenile court in a broad way we would place this proposed clinic under the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia Commissioners, thus relieving the juvenile court of this responsibility, and put it where it belongs, in the District of Columbia health service and not under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. When I reply to the gentleman. As I tried to say in the first place, we are not trying to meet every evil that exists. The District of Columbia Commissioners have got enough to do now apparently, and I am not criticizing them, but I might possibly have a word to say as to the way they are doing it; but there has never been a criticism of the juvenile court since it has been established in the city of Washington, and I want to say that this clinic would be for the benefit of the juvenile court and not for Commissioners of the District.

Mr. RAKER. Is not this the fact: In the institutions named the patients are all under judgment of the court, but in these cases they are pending in the juvenile court and no final order has been made by the juvenile court. We reach out before the final judgment is made sending these boys and girls to the reform school or the national training school and see what can be done for them to take care of them before any final judgment is made.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is the fact. And, Mr. Chairman, I would call the committee's attention to the testimony before the committee where the superintendent of one of these institutions named was free to say that they had to destroy clothing and they had to destroy bedding because of the condition of these children and which without previous examination they had no means of knowing.

Mr. RAKER. A further question. By proper treatment given the boy or girl taken up by juvenile court many of the cases brought before it can be corrected and dismissed without final judgment being entered against them?

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is exactly the fact. Furthermore, practically all of such cases can be and have been treated in their own homes, and in all the existence of the court there never has been but one instance when the parents did not willingly cooperate with the court itself.

Mr. RAKER. Thereby saving the boy or girl from going to the institution?

Mr. VESTAL. If the gentleman will permit, returning to the objection raised by the gentleman from Texas, I take it is well founded. On page 2 I would suggest this sort of an amendment; I do not know whether it will reach the point made. After the word "and," in line 3, insert "who shall devote their entire time to the examination and treatment of all cases coming under the jurisdiction of said juvenile court."

Mr. LITTLE. How many people do they examine in a year in the clinic?

Mr. UNDERHILL. They probably examine over 2,000.

Mr. LITTLE. Then I think it is a good suggestion; that is all right. I think the suggestion is a good one.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. Does the power the gentleman seeks to confer by this bill upon the Juvenile Court or its head begin before or after commitment?

Mr. UNDERHILL. It begins, according to the bill, before, during, and after trial.

Mr. LAYTON. What right under heaven in a free country have you got to undertake to invade the rights of an individual before he has been committed to an institution?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to hurt the gentleman's feelings, but I am sick and tired of hearing the question raised of the right of personal liberty when the life of the Nation is at stake.

Mr. LAYTON. The life of the Nation has been going on for 150 years.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It may have been going on for 150 years, but there is no reason why it should not go on for 150 years more, unless some mean, low-down, contemptible, trifling individual wants to stand upon the question of personal liberty when it affects my child, your child, and the children of the people of this District and of the whole country. I do not care for it at all.

Mr. LAYTON. In my judgment, and I want the House to see it, this is a bill in character with other bills beginning here in Washington, insidious in its character, that means to confer upon the Public Health Service of the United States ultimately the power of invading the domestic life of our people. Now, I am not in favor of it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I am the father of four children, two boys and two girls, and if this Congress will pass a law requiring that every man, woman, and child of the United States shall have a physical examination, I for one will gladly submit my children to that examination. We do not know from time to time whether these children have been exposed to infection or not. A good girl or a good boy who have a good home, who are indisposed, go to the family physician. The family physician has no idea that they have been exposed to such infection, no idea of what the matter is until, perhaps, the disease has worked its insidious way to such an extent that it is incurable.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. KING. I see that this bill provides for the appointment of a psychologist at a salary of $2,000 per annum. Would the gentleman, as a matter of information, answer one or two questions in reference to that? Who determines who the psychologist shall be, and what training does the psychologist have to have?

Mr. UNDERHILL. A psychologist is, in other words, a social worker. Such a worker can go into the home; will advise in any case, whether it be that of disease or mental trouble or even financial trouble.

Mr. KING. Psychology is the study of the soul, is it not?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Let us not get into these technicalities.

Mr. KING. I want some information on this bill. Who says that a certain man is qualified to be appointed at $2,000 a year as an examiner of the soul—a teacher of psychology?

Mr. LAYTON. Or a member of the legal profession, who does not know anything about it.

Mr. KING. I am serious about the matter. Who says one man is more of a psychologist than another? I thought the last election did away with psychology and witchcraft, but it seems not. Will the gentleman answer what he means by "psychologist" in this bill?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman might be willing, but is utterly unable to go into definition and technicalities which the gentleman would like to inject into the discussion. That is not necessary. What we want, as Secretary Hughes said the other day, is action. I, as a layman, am rather confused by the attacks of all these legal lights in the House, but I am fighting a condition that exists, and not a theory, and I am not raising any technical questions. I am standing simply and absolutely upon the statement of Judge Sellers that this bill is what she wants, and I am fighting for her and fighting for the children of the land.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman has been much interrupted by people who ask questions to get their thoughts into the Record. Will the gentleman have time to yield me five minutes?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the gentleman yields to the gentleman from Indiana, will he kindly yield to me in order that I may direct an inquiry to him?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The question was suggested by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ], but I do not know whether the gentleman gave a direct answer or not. In the hearings on this bill the health commissioner suggested that instead of these officials being under the direct charge of the judge of the juvenile court they should be under the jurisdiction of the health department. The health department to-day has under its jurisdiction 12 medical inspectors, 4 dental inspectors, 8 dental operators, and 10 nurses, who look after the welfare of the children of the schools of the District. There is also testimony here by Mr. Charles T. Walker, in charge of juvenile delinquency in Philadelphia, wherein he shows that in the administration of a similar law these officials are under the jurisdiction of the health authorities. This is a matter pertaining to the health of the District. We have a health department here. Why should we create a branch office independent of the health office, which regulates the health of the people, and take it out of the jurisdiction of the health department entirely?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I would reply to the gentleman by reading a communication which I have received only recently, as follows:

I understand the main reason the committee had for placing the clinic under the health office of the District was to make it purely a District institution and a charge upon the financial resources of the District.

That was contemplated by the committee in the first place. Then it says:

As a matter of fact, the juvenile court is not under the supervision of the executive branch of the District government, except that the expenses incident to running the court are appropriated for under the bill making the general appropriation for the expenses of the District and these appropriations are presented through the District Commissioners. All appointments and separations in the court are made by the presiding judge. So that it would seem logical that the provision for the payment of services rendered the court by the members of the clinic should be made along with the other appropriation for other officers and employees of the court instead of under the section providing for the services in the health department of the District. The charge upon the District would be placed just as safely if the appropriation were so placed as if lodged in the section providing for service rendered in the health office of the District.

We do not want to cause a quarrel between the two departments. We do not want to have a conflict of authority between these two departments, and perhaps I would be unwise in stating that the testimony before the committee showed that the health authorities of the city of Washington were not all that they might be, perhaps all that they could be, but they did not have the time to give specific attention to this one specific condition, and which an intelligent, upright judge who knows the situation could render if given authority.

Mr. STAFFORD. The health department of the District has not authority to-day to appoint an official to do this work?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No; they have not.

Mr. STAFFORD. And yet the gentleman will admit that the work is one that exclusively relates to the health of the people of the District?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will not admit that—not exclusively.

Mr. STAFFORD. The justification is that it relates to the health of the people of this District, and we have a health department. And now you are proposing to create a health department, outside of the jurisdiction of the health department, under the jurisdiction of a judge. These cases have to be followed after they are dismissed from the juvenile court. There is one branch of the Government that has jurisdiction of health, and that is the health department, and the gentleman up to this time, with all due respect, has not advanced an argument to meet the contention of the health officer and of the commissioner, and of the probation officer in charge of juvenile delinquency in Philadelphia, where this health work is under the jurisdiction of the health department.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Has the health department got any place where they can take care of this particular class of work?

Mr. STAFFORD. The health department will have a place where they will take charge of these cases. The juvenile judge has no place to-day where she can take charge of them. The purpose is to provide a place where, after they have been examined, they will be able to take charge of the cases, and the health officer and the health department to-day, under the jurisdiction of their own office in the examination of the school children of the District, in the clinics that they carry on with school children, follow out this same identical work, so far as the school children are concerned. Permit me to read, as the hearings disclose, what is the work of the health officer.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman need not read it. I will take his word for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Dr. Fowler says physical examinations are made from time to time. A large number of school children are examined. When mental defects are found a statement is sent to the parents of the children, calling attention to it. If they are able to pay for the medical treatment they are sent to a hospital, and if they are unable to pay for the treatment the school nurses follow up these cases and take them to the hospitals or dispensaries and provide the necessary treatment if the parents are willing. There is an establishment in the District of Columbia to-day for that purpose. Now, you are proposing an independent activity under the supervision of the juvenile court, whereas I contend it is properly under the jurisdiction of the health department.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman answer my question? Is there any place that takes care of these cases in court?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. You want to provide that they shall be appointed by the District Commissioners and be a part of the health department of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LITTLE. It would not save any money, would it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. It is proposed in this bill to pay a man $5,000 a year with only 500 cases—

Mr. LITTLE. Two thousand cases.

Mr. STAFFORD. No. The evidence shows only a thousand cases in more than 14 months. There are no 2,000 cases.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Let me say this: If there is no provision in the law—and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] suggests that there is none—I do not see why he should object to it in some form.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are now taking up the enactment of the bill in harmony with the existing law. We object to its being placed under a judge, when it should be in the charge of the health authorities of the District.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman is for the bill, but he feels it to be his duty to oppose it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia showed no interest in this situation or the conditions. The doctors of the District of Columbia showed no interest in this serious situation.

The only person in the District of Columbia apparently who realized the seriousness of the situation, the only person in the District of Columbia before whom the children of the District come day after day and day after day, the only person in the District of Columbia who had the interest and safety of the people at heart apparently was Judge Sellers, who presides over the juvenile court. Judge Sellers came before our committee on another matter, and presented statistics there that were appalling, not alarming merely, but appalling. They were of such a character that your committee, although it was not looking for additional work, asked the judge if something could not be done in order to relieve the situation and save the children of the city of Washington from infection, and at my personal request Judge Sellers took this question up and drew this bill.

When the clinic was abolished in April Commissioner Rudolph was asked to assign Dr. Hickling to report for half a day a week, only half a day a week, and he replied to the effect that Dr. Hickling was too busy to perform any service for the juvenile court, but that he hoped that he would be able to make satisfactory arrangements. But he did not do it, and nothing was done until Judge Sellers came before our committee and submitted this bill.

There may be some legal defects in the bill; the bill might have been drawn better; but we are asking your aid and assistance in correcting a condition that is not only a scandal to the city of Washington but a real menace to the people of the city. Now, I am willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] to insert the words suggested in order to make the meaning of the bill absolutely clear from the legal standpoint.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. UNDERHILL. In a moment. I do not want to complicate the situation; I do not want to jeopardize the success of the clinic by placing it in any other department than under the jurisdiction of Judge Kathryn Sellers. Unless that can be done, I do not want the bill enacted at all.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts one or two questions. A clinic is a public examination?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not necessarily.

Mr. LAYTON. Yes; necessarily. That is just what a clinic is.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A clinic is public.

Mr. LAYTON. Exactly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not only is the patient there, not only is the physician there, but any other person or persons whom he invites in. A clinic is a public affair to that extent. That is, outside third parties are admitted. There have been clinics conducted at the Rush Medical College in Chicago with a hundred in attendance. They are called "clinics."

Let me ask the gentleman a question: Should there be any female person, any white girl, physically examined in the presence of third persons in the absence of a female physician?

Mr. UNDERHILL. O Mr. Chairman, there is no danger. The gentleman from Wisconsin builds up a bogey man or a man of straw and then tries to tear him to pieces. No one is going to have anything of that sort, for it would be against all ideas of law and decency. I do not know what definition the gentleman may ascribe to a clinic. I have always understood that it might be a consultation of physicians, not necessarily open to the public.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I have not built up any bogey man. I asked what I thought was a sensible question, in a polite manner, and the gentleman from Massachusetts gets infuriated and charges me with building up a bogey man, when he himself acts as near like one as anybody I ever saw. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERHILL. Well, I apologize to the gentleman. I did not intend to wound his feelings. My education leads me to talk from the shoulder instead of using diplomatic language.

Mr. LAYTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAYTON. I want to inquire how debate will proceed, and whether there will be any opportunity for other Members of the House to debate this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts will expire at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes. Then the Chair will recognize some one in opposition.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I hope gentlemen will not object to a motion to close general debate now and proceed to consider the bill under the 5-minute rule for amendment.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is not in order at this time.

Mr. FOCHT. Otherwise we will not get anywhere in considering this little bill.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. There is three minutes more in the control of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will be recognized in opposition, and I want to ask him if he will yield me some time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to this bill. I am opposed to the bill and am a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts having practically expired, the gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this measure it seems to me is a very remarkable one. I hesitate to oppose it because the gentleman from Massachusetts is very earnest in his desire to bring about legislation which will help correct certain evils that he has described. Having carefully read the bill I am satisfied that the measure does not reach the proposition the gentleman has in mind at all. I am also very sure that this measure departs from all precedents in the matter of the organization of the health department. Notice the terms of the bill. I hope Members will acquaint themselves with its provisions. The first thing done is to create a clinic. It is attached to the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia:

For the mental and physical examination and study of persons who will be brought before the said juvenile court whenever in the discretion of the judge of said court such examination and study shall be deemed necessary before, during, or after trial.

Of course, that is a compulsory examination of the child charged with some offense, no matter how innocent the child might be of the offense. That is one thing that is remarkable and unusual in this measure. In the legislation that we have passed heretofore we have been very careful to guard against compulsory physical examination. It is true that in cases of infectious or contagious diseases an examination in that regard is permitted. But this is a general sweeping power for the physical examination of any child that is charged with any misdemeanor, irrespective of whether there is any evidence the child is troubled with any disease or whether it is in any way connected with the proof of crime.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And that is not all; they do not even have to be charged with a crime. Suppose it is a dependent or delinquent child?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I questioned the gentleman from Massachusetts about that, and he said it was only intended to apply to those brought before the court. In line 8 it says "before, during, or after trial."

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The gentleman must know that the judge who presides over the juvenile court stated before the District Committee that no child had ever been examined who has not been found guilty and that no child had ever been examined without the consent of its parents.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Listen; the bill provides "whenever in the discretion of the judge of said court such examination and study shall be deemed necessary before, during, or after trial." If you meant after trial you could have said so. If you meant that the child should not be examined unless the parents consented, it would be written in the bill, and if you amend it I shall make no objection on that point.

But that is not the burden of the objection I am making. I want to bring sharply before the committee, however, that this bill does provide clearly that they can physically examine the child without the consent of its parents, a compulsory physical examination.

Now, aside from that question, notice the second paragraph, that the judge shall have the power to appoint the following:

A physician (male) at a salary of $5,000 per annum, who shall have had special training as a psychiatrist in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defects; a psychiatric case worker at a salary of $1,800 per annum; and a psychologist at a salary of $2,000 per annum, and who shall devote their entire time to such work; and a physician (female) at a salary of $1,000 per annum.

And then it further provides:

Such officers shall perform such duties and be governed by such regulations as may be prescribed by the presiding judge, and such judge is authorized to remove any of them for cause.

Just think of it; think of how that departs from anything we have done before. We create a clinic, put a judge of the court in full power over the clinic, who says just what the physician's functions shall be, who says just how long they shall serve, and they will serve a lifetime unless the judge of the court changes it. Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts says that this measure is justified in order to prevent the spread of venereal diseases.

There is not a single line nor a single word in the entire bill that deals with that question or justifies the inference that that question is dealt with. On the contrary, it is absolutely excluded. This bill, in the first place, permits the examination of all patients, and provides that the doctors and all personnel shall deal only with mental cases. The gentleman can not justify the bill upon the ground that it is to deal with these cases which he has mentioned. The bill is not susceptible of that construction.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will not the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] take care of that?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What is that amendment?

Mr. VESTAL. On page 2, line 4, after the word "to," strike out the words "such work" and insert "to the examination and treatment of all cases coming under the jurisdiction of said juvenile court." That does not exclude any sort of work that may come under it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That will help it; but why should they put these mental and nervous specialists, the psychologists, in charge of treating ptomaine poisoning? That is more than I know.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's position is that, although mental and physical examination is mentioned in the first paragraph of the bill, yet when it comes down to the appointment of these specialists and to defining their duties, they are confined specifically to mental diseases.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes. Not only is their duty by the bill confined to that, but their qualifications are confined to it. What can a mental specialist know of treating such diseases as those the gentleman talks about? But, gentlemen, are we going to create a health department No. 2 here in the District of Columbia? We have a health department now that has charge of health. It may be that that health department has not been giving the attention it ought to to these patients, and if it has not, then the appointing power will take care of that. If that department has not the power to deal with it, then let legislation be brought in to give to the proper department this great health function. Let us not give it to the judicial department, so that it may be entitled to deal with problems that properly belong to the health department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I find myself impelled to oppose this bill on three grounds, any one of which I believe should be sufficient for its defeat. I realize, however, the futility of speaking against a measure reported practically unanimously by the committee, defended practically unanimously by the committee, with but 36 of my colleagues to hear the debate and to really understand the measure. I realize the futility of wasting words in opposition to a measure under such circumstances.

First, let me call your attention to this provision in the bill, and in doing so I am taking up the least important reason first for opposing it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. On page 2, referring to the appropriation authorized to be made in the bill, the measure provides that "40 per cent is to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." That 40 per cent is the money of your constituency and of my constituency in the Public Treasury. It is the money of the whole people of the United States. No one would seriously object to any large city, or any city for that matter, providing necessary civic enterprises for its inhabitants and the health and happiness of its people.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. The city of Washington, embracing the District of Columbia, has a population of 437,000 people. Hundreds of these people, thousands of them, if you will, were born and raised here in Washington and have no connection whatever with the Government of the United States. They are engaged in private commercial business that has no connection with their Government. They have no relation whatever with governmental affairs. Every single proposition of civic enterprise that is brought about in the District is brought about for their pleasure and their benefit and their happiness, just as the civic enterprises in your home city and mine are brought about by our home people and for their benefit. I am one of those who has ever believed that there are certain civic enterprises here in the District of Columbia that are so intimately interwoven and connected with the private happiness and welfare of the people who live here, which have no connection or relation whatever with the Government of the United States, that the whole people should not be called upon year after year to pay 40 per cent of the expense thereof. The city of Washington should have a clinic for its poor people, for its juveniles, for people who can not afford financially to go to the doctors and pay the expense. The city of Washington should have schools, and good schools, for its 65,000 children, but I am here as one Member of this Congress who asks you over and over again the question, What is there about the schools of the city of Washington that calls for the whole people of the United States to come in and pay 40 per cent each year of their expense?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I want to ask the gentleman a question—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to be uncivil to the gentleman. He has had an hour. I am presenting my views. I am sure that they are diametrically different from the views of many of my colleagues, but they are my views just the same. The people in Boston and the people in Chicago provide their own school buildings and their own school books for the education of their children. It is paid for out of their own pockets. They do not call upon the people of the other 46 States to pay 40 per cent of the expense. When the city of Chicago and the great city of Boston provide proper and necessary clinics for their children they do not call on the cities of the other 46 States to come in and pay 40 per cent of the expense.

Mr. SPROUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment. If the distinguished gentleman from Chicago and myself should form a commercial building enterprise and go out here and buy some vacant land situated in the District and begin to build houses upon it in order to make money, we could have all the alleyways paved, and the people of this Government in the 48 States would be called upon to pay 40 per cent of its cost furthering that enterprise, by which we would profit year after year; and men have grown rich and are millionaires here under such a practice, which is continued on here by Congress year after year. When is it going to stop? You can not make it stop with only 35 or 36 Congressmen here on the floor to listen to the debate on such bills, because when the others come in from their offices to vote they can not understand the facts connected with the debate and the proposition that is embraced within such a measure.

Mr. SPROUL. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not just now. I want to give some facts—

Mr. SPROUL. I want to give the gentleman some facts.

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to the gentleman, since he is so insistent.

Mr. SPROUL. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas if he is aware of the fact that at the Eastern High School the low bid has been thrown out, and they insisted upon letting it to the second bidder at an extra expense of almost $18,000, notwithstanding the architect and engineer in charge said the low bidder was doing satisfactory work and was in every way satisfactory?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry the distinguished gentleman led me away from my argument, but his question is very apropos to the issue involved, so I am going to take time to comment upon it. The gentleman is eminently correct. He has been eminently correct in his position on this proposition before the committee for months past. Take the Eastern High School. It is situated here now in a part of Washington where the people's children who will attend that school can get to it without going to the trouble of walking several miles. But the site for the new building has been selected out yonder a number of blocks beyond Lincoln Park, on East Capitol Street, several blocks beyond the end of the car line, if you please, put out there in what the gentleman from Illinois has denominated as a bog and a swamp and where nobody lives. Why? It will build up property out there for private property owners and make them rich, and you are spending right now $1,500,000 for that building, 40 per cent of which is paid by the whole people of the United States—the people of Pennsylvania and the other States of this Union. What interest have they in the Eastern High School here in the District of Columbia. It is only for the education of children here in the District. But when we have a municipal architect here paid to design school buildings in the District, with a dozen different employees in his office under him paid for helping do such work, when it was arranged to build nine more buildings here not long ago the commissioners employed nine outside architects to plan the nine buildings, one architect for each building, and paid nine different fees. Those fees of 3 per cent on the cost, 40 per cent of same, will be paid out of the pockets of your people and of mine. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois is well fixed in his determination to try to stop this matter, but his insistence before the committee has been almost as futile as mine. Let me go to another question.

Mr. SPROUL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present. I think this is a matter important enough to have Members here to listen to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The gentleman from Illinois raises the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-five Members are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WALSH) having resumed the chair, Mr. McARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7883, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule he caused the roll to be called, whereupon 279 Members answered to their names, and he presented the list of absentees for entry in the RECORD and Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee will resume its sitting.

Accordingly the committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, at the instance of the gentleman from Illinois—how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 38 minutes remaining.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am willing, not to be taken out of my time, for the chairman to make a unanimous consent request.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he will consent that the committee rise for a few moments. I move that the committee do now rise. I made the statement so it might be understood it is only for a moment. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WALSH) having resumed the chair, Mr. McARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7883, had come to no resolution thereon.

FUTURE ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on to-morrow to take up for consideration the Lehlbach reclassification bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that it may be in order to-morrow to take up for consideration the so-called Lehlbach reclassification bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order on Thursday next to take up for consideration the so-called maternity bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that it may be in order on Thursday next to take up for consideration the so-called maternity bill. Is there objection?

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADDRESSES OF PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY OF STATE AT FIRST SESSION, DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming presents the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows

Resolved, That the address of the President of the United States and of the Secretary of State delivered before the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments on November 12, 1921, be printed as a House document, and that 53,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the House of Representatives, 160 copies to each Member.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the resolution provides for so many for the use of each Member, but it does not provide for the distribution through the folding room.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I raise the point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the resolution is going to take any length of time, that I yielded the floor only for the purpose of a unanimous-consent request being made.

Mr. MONDELL. I withdraw the resolution, if there is objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not object to the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KNUTSON. If there is going to be any objection, the RECORD should show who objected.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming to the fact that the resolution does not provide that this quota shall be distributed through the folding room.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to answer the gentleman. It has been the custom to do that, but I have ascertained just now that it is not necessary at all. When the printing of a document is ordered in this way, in the form of this resolution, it has to be distributed through the folding room. So words to that effect would be surplusage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROGERS. Would the gentleman think it proper to incorporate in this resolution a proposition to add the address of the President at Arlington the day before? I think that most of us feel that that address paved the way for the exercises on the following day.

Mr. CAREW. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Did the gentleman object to the resolution or the last proposal?

Mr. CAREW. I object to all the proceedings, sir.

EXAMINATION OF PERSONS BROUGHT BEFORE JUVENILE COURT.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7883. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7883, with Mr. McARTHUR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is recognized for 38 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, along the line of the suggestion made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPROUL] I want to further emphasize the point I attempted to make, that the Public Treasury of the United States owes no more duty to the 65,000 school children of Washington, with respect to their health and education, than it does to the school children of every other city in the United States. The 65,000 school children of Washington have no connection whatever with the Government. Their health and education is no part of the governmental functions of this Nation. And yet, as I said, of this $1,500,000 the Eastern High School building that is now being constructed is to cost, the whole people of the United States have been called upon to pay 40 per cent of this large sum. And the cost of building the splendid Western High School was paid 50 per cent out of the Treasury of the whole people. The cost of the splendid Central High School, a plant that is worth over a million and a half dollars to-day, was paid for one half by the whole people of the United States. The cost of the Dunbar High School, and the cost of every other of the many fine schools in this District have been paid at the rate of 50 per cent by the whole people of this Government. The million-dollar Connecticut Avenue Bridge and numerous other expensive civic enterprises here were paid for 50 per cent by the whole people of the United States. Why, when you have an army of garbage gatherers in every city wherein we live when we are at home, the Government does not pay any part of the expenses. I ask you what connection is there with the Government of this country with respect to the gathering of garbage from the private residences of this city? As to the gathering of the ash-can contents, the gathering of the trash boxes from behind the residences of this city, what connection is there between that function and the governmental business of this country?

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment.

The people of the United States some day, when they wake up and find these things have been going on for years, are going to ask us embarrassing questions when we go before them on the hustings that we can not answer.

But I must get to another point of this bill, my second point, as to why this bill should not pass. Have you carefully read the language on the first page of this bill? Have you lawyers decided what that language means? Have you reached the conclusion that I have, that it goes further than any other piece of legislation that has ever been passed on the floor of this House with regard to infringing upon the inherent rights of the people of this country? Let me read it to you:

There is hereby created and established a clinic attached to the juvenile court of the District of Columbia—

Notice—

for the mental and physical examination and study—

Of whom? Of criminals, of juveniles, of somebody else in whom you are interested? No. Listen to the language—of persons.

It does not say "persons charged with crime"; not persons, if you please, who are delinquents; not persons who are juvenile; but, without any explanation at all, the generic word "persons" is used. Examination, mental and physical, and study even of persons in this District. That embraces every person in the District, of the 437,000 people living here. What else?

Who may be brought before the said juvenile court whenever, in the discretion of the judge of said court, such examination and study shall be deemed necessary.

It does not stop there. Oh, no. Does it limit it to the persons who may be brought before that court? Oh, no. Does it limit it to the persons who may have a trial before that juvenile court? Oh, no. Read the language:

Whenever * * * such examination and study shall be deemed necessary—

Now, listen—before, during, or after trial.

Before trial; before they have had a trial; whenever the juvenile judge down there thinks that somebody, some person here, some young girl or boy of the 437,000 people in this District, should be examined physically or that a study should be made of them the judge can order it done by this public clinic. You may be willing to take that right away from the people of the city of Washington, but I am not.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to his colleague?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

Mr. BLACK. I have read the bill, and taking the bill as a whole it occurs to me that it refers only to those persons who are before the juvenile court for some action of the court.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, what is meant by "before trial"?

Mr. BLACK. Well, construing the language as a whole, as I think the court would construe it—and I am not announcing my opinion of the bill—I think it refers to persons before the court.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not limited to persons against whom some complaint is found, some juvenile. It says "persons," and it affects them before trial. But suppose the theory of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is correct, that it is limited to a juvenile; what is a juvenile? Get your Webster's Dictionary and see what it says in defining the word "juvenile." A juvenile is "an immature person," and with regard to the jurisdiction of our courts over juveniles it has been held that where an immature person is not properly cared for by its parents, it is a delinquent, and the court has jurisdiction over the person of such juvenile. That is one definition. In another it has been held that whenever a father or mother is of such notoriously bad habits, their child, ipso facto, becomes delinquent; that child is a juvenile over which the juvenile court has jurisdiction.

There does not have to be alleged any complaint, I will say to the gentleman from Texas. The court sits every day of its existence with jurisdiction absolutely over the person of every juvenile. It is not necessary for a complaint to be brought. They have direct jurisdiction to have them brought before them on their own motion, if you please. Do you want to go that far in this bill?

I have been one of those who, in the exercise of the police power of this Government, believed that the interests of the whole people was paramount over the interests of a few, with respect to intoxicating liquor and narcotics. I have been one of those who thought it was wise to take away from a man what he thought was an inherent right to drink intoxicating liquor at will and have it sold throughout the land. But I am not willing to go as far as this bill indicates. The most sacred thing that we revere is the person of the individual members of our family. Whenever you provide that a juvenile judge down here, on his own motion, in his own discretion, can order a young girl down there before him and have her physically examined, or have her watched under study of physicians, against her will and the will of her parents, whether innocent or guilty of any offense, you are going further than any piece of legislation has gone that has ever been passed on the floor of this House.

But there is another reason, as I said, a third reason, why this bill should not pass. It is a duplication of effort, a duplication of governmental functions. We have a health department already here. We have clinics for the 65,000 school children of this District. Why, we have a separate school for the tubercular scholars.

Whenever a child is afflicted with any contagious disease, that child, under the Public Health Service that is now in existence and operating under the present law, can be ordered to be separated from the other school children in this district. There is not a day passes when some of the school children are not examined by some of the Public Health physicians here. I say it is an unwarranted duplication of enterprise on the part of this Government. You promised faithfully to the people that you were going to stop it; that you were going to coordinate the various branches of this Government and stop some of the unwarranted and wasteful expense.

But I have not the right to take up any further time, because there are other gentlemen who have asked me for time. I would like to go into the merits of this bill in detail before the gentlemen of the Congress if I had the time, but I have not. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON]. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 38 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] and reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for three minutes.

CHARLES LEO O'CONNOR.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, about one week ago the House paused in its deliberations to pay fitting tribute to a brave and heroic member of the United States Army who had performed exceptional and valiant service overseas during the late war. The unidentified soldier whose body lies in Arlington to-day with his 2,000,000 buddies could not have gone overseas had it not been for the service of the brave men of the United States Navy who throughout the war lived up to the highest traditions of our great Navy. In this Navy of ours none performed more valiant service than the men who "put them across"—the men of the transport service.

Among the many transports that so successfully conveyed our troops was the Mount Vernon. It repeatedly carried from 6,000 to 7,000 soldiers. In September of 1918 while homeward bound this ship was torpedoed when 300 miles off from the French coast. A hole was blown into the ship over 30 feet in width and 20 feet in height. Nevertheless the ship was successfully put about and came in under its own power to the harbor at Brest. There under the supervision of its most able and efficient captain, Capt. Dismukes, the ship was speedily repaired and was again a great unit in our transport system. The saving of that ship, the bringing it back into port under its own power and its speedy repair was due to the heroism and efficiency of Capt. Dismukes, his fellow officers, and the brave and efficient crew.

We are fortunate this day that one of the members of this gallant and efficient crew is a visitor in the gallery. On the occasion in question as chief water tender he was down in one of the firerooms. The torpedo struck almost opposite. He was burned from scalding steam and hot gases, but nevertheless had sufficient presence of mind—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman two more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Burned, stunned, and bruised though he was, he had sufficient presence of mind to remember that the air-tight compartment door leading into the next room must by all means be closed. He also knew that by shutting this door that he closed his only avenue of escape. Through the door was the path of safety. To close the door meant almost certain death, but the performance of duty. This man remained at his post to close the door.

A friendly Providence thought that this man should be saved. The rush of the incoming waters forced him into a ventilator shaft, where he was later rescued by his comrades. Frightfully burned, he spent months in the hospital, but was saved to again serve his country.

His captain recommended that he be especially honored and cited for his brave act. On Friday last this man, a chief water tender of the United States Navy, marched alongside the body of the unknown warrior as one of the active pallbearers.

I am, therefore, calling the attention of the Members of the House to this brave and gallant seaman of the United States Navy, Charles Leo O'Connor, chief water tender of the U. S. S. Mount Vernon during the late war.

[Mr. O'Connor stood up in the gallery, amid applause of the Members.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert as a part of my remarks the citation awarded him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The citation and order is as follows:

The President of the United States takes pleasure in presenting the distinguished service medal to Charles Leo O'Connor, chief water tender, United States Navy, for service during the World War as set forth in the following citation:

"For extraordinary heroism while serving on the U. S. S. Mount Vernon, on September 5, 1918, when that vessel was torpedoed. O'Connor was in the fireroom and was thrown to the floor, sustaining a very serious burn, and was then caught in the rushing water. He voluntarily turned and endeavored to shut the water-tight door leading to the large coal bunkers, instead of trying to save his life."

For the President:

JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy.

EXAMINATION OF PERSONS BROUGHT BEFORE THE JUVENILE COURT.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON].

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I feel that I can leave this bill very safely in the hands of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS], who gave such an illuminating analysis of the bill that it seems hardly necessary to take much further time in its discussion. But it is an amazing bill, to my mind. Upon the surface it has for its avowed purpose the study of the mental defects of children connected with the juvenile court in the city of Washington. The white person in the woodpile—I will not call him a nigger, because the white person is very much a white person and I very much like him, for I see his face and it is in a way a good face. The real purpose of this bill is not disclosed at all in the verbiage of the measure. By the confession of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL], who belongs to that modern school that thinks that anything that is good can be legislated for regardless of results or regardless of constitutional principles, the purpose of the bill is to strike a blow in the District of Columbia at venereal disease and all its forms.

Now, gentlemen, as a physician, do you think for a moment that I would be averse to doing anything reasonable to accomplish that purpose? Why, certainly not. I am very much in favor of the purpose hidden here, but this bill does not accomplish it. It conceals it. Let us take the bill, and I will try to analyze it if I can. I notice that some Members are now present who were not here when the bill was first taken up.

This bill creates a clinic—and you all know what a clinic is—for the juvenile court. In the composition of that clinic is a gentleman who is going to have $5,000 a year; a specialist called a psychiatrist. That is pretty good as far as it goes. Possibly you can get an accomplished specialist on mental diseases that would be qualified to diagnose hereditary diseases connected with congenital decadence and mental disorders for $5,000, but just think of the amazing absurdity of trying to get a psychiatrist at a salary of $1,800 or a psychologist for $2,000 a year, all of whom must devote their entire time to this work. You could not get anything except a pretender anywhere in the United States or in the world for any such figure.

Now, one other thing. I object to this bill for another reason. Some of you, like the gentleman from Massachusetts, doubtless are going to laugh at this, but I object to the attitude assumed here by us against the masses of the people, an attitude that you would not assume toward your own station in life. You would not pass this bill if it was to apply to the boy and girl up in the finer residential sections of this city. You would not even think of doing it. I say to you that it is absolutely wrong in conception to assume that a boy and a girl cited before the juvenile court—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Delaware has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. LAYTON. This is confined to boys and girls who come before the juvenile court, and they are presumed not to be guilty until they are tried. I ask after having been tried and committed, as I presume they will be, are they not committed to some institution?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not necessarily.

Mr. LAYTON. Then, what are you going to try them for?

Mr. UNDERHILL. So that they may be treated at home.

Mr. LAYTON. I say, after a child has been cited to the juvenile court, there must be some penalty and they must be confined in some reformatory institution. If that is correct, there is the place to make your examination.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAYTON. No; I will not; the gentleman from California has got enough into the Record to satisfy his people for campaign purposes. [Laughter.] These children will go into the reformatory. I say to you as a physician that I am in favor of every examination after the child is committed to the reformatory institution, but I am opposed to it before they have been tried and committed. [Applause.] That is the point I want to make. Now I want to ask a simple question.

We are going along nowadays giving a great deal of authority along certain lines to people who are absolutely incompetent to decide questions. I am not acquainted with Judge Sellers. She may be a solon, so far as I know, but I do know this, that she does not know one single thing, in my judgment, about choosing a proper person to examine the mental diseases of children.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And she may be out of there in a year and somebody else in her place.

Mr. LAYTON. Yes. There is another point I wish to make. She not only chooses them, but here is the significant feature of this bill—

Such officers shall perform such duties and be governed by such regulations as may be prescribed by the presiding judge, and such judge is authorized to remove any of them for cause.

That is limitless power. She may establish such rules and regulations governing anything under the sun that she may want, and in order that she may do it, she is given the right of dismissal if these people do not obey.

Let us not go too far; let us use a little common sense about these things. Bring in a bill here which shall establish, if you please, a proper supervision over children who have once been committed to the custody of the law, and then I shall vote for it, but you have a proposition here that creates two independent bodies, when, as a matter of fact, we now have, in addition, 2,300 doctors in the Public Health Service completely under its direction. Besides that, I imagine there is a public-health service in the city of Washington peculiar to the municipality. Is that correct?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Then, what is the use of having a third one? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Delaware has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am very loath, indeed, to oppose a bill which I am sure has behind it as its purpose a beneficent service to the unfortunate children of the District of Columbia. For a number of years I have been profoundly interested in this question of the conservation of the public health in this country. A number of measures have been proposed in the Congress of the United States to establish a Cabinet office, to create a department of health in the Government of the United States. One of the principal reasons why such a bill has never been successful is because of the fear that under any of the restrictions that were proposed in the various bills introduced it might require some form of compulsory medical attention by some particular school of medicine for some of the people of the United States. I have not so much objection to the bill for what it says as I have for what it omits to say. The bill proposes to establish a clinic for the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia and to appoint certain specialists, and that they shall be subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the whim and the caprice, possibly the fallible judgment, of a temporary occupant of the position of judge of that court. There it stops. It does not go on and say what authority or power the judge shall be clothed with in order to carry out the recommendations or the suggestions of these specialists who are provided for, but by implication the judge of that court would have authority to carry out any of the suggestions or the recommendations of any one of these three specialists, however oppressive or fallacious or unjust, with reference to some particular unfortunate juvenile who might be haled before that court. If there is one thing that the people of America have always been zealous in protecting it is liberty of action with reference to the management of the people's own private concerns, and while this bill has no doubt behind it the wholesome general purpose of undertaking to do a benefit for this unfortunate class of children, yet under the phraseology in which it is presented to this committee it seems to me it offers a very dangerous precedent to follow. Under its limitations as now prescribed you will have the whole question of what shall be done with 1 or 10 or 100 unfortunate children, or incompetents, who have not been adjudged guilty of any offense, left to the judgment, however wrong it may be, of these specialists, these very cheap specialists provided for, as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Delaware—regardless of the desire of their own parents or their guardians. One of my objections to the bill is its failure to fix the authority and limit that authority under which the judge of the court may act in dealing with these juveniles who may come under its jurisdiction.

Some gentlemen of the committee have said that it is for the purpose of treating children in their home before they are convicted of any offense. Very well. The parents of those children might have their peculiar and reasonable notions about the method of treatment. They may desire to employ their own physician. They may believe that the diagnosis by this psychiatrist or by this $2,000 psychologist might be an error, and they might want to apply their common-sense judgment to the treatment of their own children and have the children under their parental jurisdiction; but for aught appearing in this bill that court or its officials may go into the privacy and sanctity of that home and have absolute and plenary power over the management of the children of that home.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should think that more than 50 per cent of the cases coming before a juvenile court never result in a conviction in the sense that the court would convict somebody of a crime and assess punishment. The juvenile court has wide discretion, and the jurisdiction is more or less informal. Does the gentleman think that because of that fact this bill ought not to pass?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the very thing that I am afraid of. The bill is dangerous in its silence on those very propositions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for one hour.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAYTON. Did the Chair say that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized for one hour?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; under the rule.

Mr. LAYTON. Then this must be a three-sided proposition. They have already had two hours.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not use the time allotted to me. I hope I may not criticize anyone because he may differ with me, nor that I shall make any statement that whatever he says he says for the purpose of sending it into his district. I shall not assume to know all about the subject like some people not in Congress claim to know.

There are a few fundamental matters in regard to this bill and this legislation that ought to be known. It has been assumed by gentlemen in their argument against the bill that we are dealing with the jurisdiction of criminal courts as they are applied to men and women who are charged with crime. I trust that the committee in the first place will disabuse its mind of that assumption, because that is not the purpose, nor the object, nor the intent, nor the result of the juvenile-court laws of the various States and of the District of Columbia.

The purpose has been in the enactment of the juvenile-court law, that of correction, for the purpose of reaching out and taking hold of the young boys and young girls under a certain age to the end that they might be protected; that they might be given opportunity for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and that if their parents do not act the right way, do not act properly, then that the court, the State being fundamentally interested in its citizens, should see that these children are given an opportunity to become fit men and women. Now, those are some of the reasons we have enacted a juvenile-court law. A strict procedure does not apply to the juvenile-court law. Many, many cases, I will say 75 or 80 per cent of the cases, come before the court without any formality. Most of the procedure is informal. You even do away with the court room. You do not have the office surroundings. The judge alone with his probation officers and assistants is visible, and he sits in an ordinary room with an ordinary table, brings the delinquent before him, and the parents and witnesses and questions them.

There is no question of the constitutional right involved where a party can not testify against himself. He finds out what is the matter, what is the trouble with this boy or with this girl. It is not a matter of punishment. Many of the States have enacted laws that a child under certain age can not be prosecuted for certain crimes. They must go to the juvenile court and the court takes charge of them there. That is one of the purposes and the objects of the law. That is the purpose, that is the object of this bill to carry out—what? Let us see. I have never been more surprised in my life than to hear gentlemen talk about questions of the Constitution, of the rights of the citizens being invaded in a case of this kind. Take a concrete example: Here comes a boy 14 or 15 years of age before the juvenile court. He is under arrest on a proper complaint. The judge lays aside the formalities and determines what shall be done with this boy. On examination he determines what is the character and condition of his mind and—

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. For a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Take the case to which the gentleman has referred. Suppose the boy is convicted. Under the law creating the juvenile court if he wishes to appeal his case he must appeal to the court of criminal appeals here in the city—

Mr. RAKER. The District Court of Appeals.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The District Court of Appeals, that is the name. The law requires him to present a bill of exceptions setting forth the facts in full, what was done by the court below. I wish to ask the gentleman if he does not think it will work a hardship to the class of people who will be taken to the juvenile court, and does not the gentleman think that could be modified, for instance, by allowing him to give a bond of $1,000 or $2,000, an appearance bond?

Mr. RAKER. I will get to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. One further question. It will work a great hardship upon him, because no one except a lawyer can draw a bill of exceptions, and it will necessitate this poorer class of people employing a lawyer to prosecute an appeal, and they do not have the money to do it.

Mr. RAKER. Well, in a good many cities and States they have what is known as defendant counsel to look after these matters and it has worked wonders. You know the object of the law is not to inflict corporal punishment on the man for vindication or for spite or anything of the kind. The whole subject of punishment is for the purpose of correction.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I want to talk a little on the question of this bill. The whole purpose of the law is so to adjust things that we can prevent offenses, so to arrange it that the man or woman will not commit them and help to make conditions so that they will not commit them, and if their foot does slip, if you please, that we might better them and lift them up instead of pulling them down.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, we are all in favor of that purpose.

Mr. RAKER. That is what is in this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask about this bill—

Mr. RAKER. I am getting right down to this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. From the standpoint of the one who has been brought before the court but who is not convicted. What can be done with him under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If the gentleman will yield further in that connection, will not he also include in that some one who has not been convicted, who is absolutely innocent, who is charged unjustly, and brought before the court?

Mr. RAKER. It is an old, old story in reference to every criminal court, that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. We know that. He possibly is innocent. That applies in all criminal courts; he might be innocent. Let us see what this bill is.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit, here is the thought that is in my mind: Do you know of any other jurisdiction in the country where a compulsory physical examination is prescribed by law before the person is tried and convicted? Do you know any place else where it is done?

Mr. RAKER. I wish I had those authorities.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is not done in your State, is it?

Mr. RAKER. I want to answer that, in order that there can be no misunderstanding. Under the bill for public health—and practically all the States have it now, although the District of Columbia has not—to my recollection they have compulsory physical examination, and the courts have upheld it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. They do not have, I think, physical examination until they are tried and convicted, and then the court sends them out to be examined.

Mr. RAKER. This is a class of cases where the examination is had. When they find that they have certain communicable, dangerous, infectious diseases, where an examination is had, they are notified, and if at a certain length of time they do not proceed to seek medical aid, then physical examination is had, and is compulsory under the statutes. The courts have held that to be good. The juvenile court jurisdiction is given by virtue of the act of April 19, 1906. It has been amended so as to take in delinquent parents. And it was again amended in 1916, holding that any judgment that the court might render should not be considered such a judgment in a criminal case against the delinquent, so as to affect his rights in any way, civil or otherwise. So it is simply a question of handling the delinquent, dependent, or offending child. The jurisdiction is conferred by section 8 of this act, specifically stating what the court shall dispose of and what the court shall handle in regard to delinquents and in regard to uncontrollable children, in regard to those who violate certain of the laws and rules and regulations of the District of Columbia under the Statutes of the United States as they relate to the District of Columbia.

But, gentlemen, get back to our boy who has been arrested and brought before the juvenile court without the many forms that are ordinarily followed in a criminal trial in a court of criminal jurisdiction, State or Federal. The boy, say, is 14 years of age. The juvenile judge in looking over the matter and inquiring finds out that the boy has committed some offense. It shows upon its face. He inquires of the boy and the boy admits it. No trial has been had yet. You say that can not be done in an ordinary trial in a criminal case. That is true. But we have a juvenile court now, with a judge handling this case. It turns out this boy is somewhat defective mentally. Are you going to make provision to help him out? Now, that is the least of the thing involved. Upon an inquiry it develops, not sufficient to be certain, that the boy has an infectious, communicable, dangerous disease. Now, what are you going to do? Now, you are humanitarian. Are you going to handle him as an ordinary criminal or turn him loose? You know he can be cured. The record here shows that 23 per cent of these boys and girls under 17 years of age, school children, if you please, that were brought before the juvenile court last year were afflicted with communicable, infectious, dangerous disease, dangerous not only to their own health but to the health of every other child that attended the school that they attended, by reason of the toilets, by reason of the wash rooms that were used, and other reasons. But the girls might have been servants in the house, and the best girls on earth stood subject to being infected by this same disease. Then you hold up your hands in holy horror and say that this boy before conviction, although he has committed an offense, should not be examined and should not be treated, nor, as a matter of fact, under this law should the juvenile court be given jurisdiction and the power to direct that he be attended to. Then, what results do you get?

You find that you have the physician who can make a thorough examination and determine exactly what is the matter with this young boy. He can let him go home, and he remains at home, and he does not have to go to a public institution at the charge of the District or the State. He is taken care of and treatment is given him, and he is cured. The court puts him out on parole, and then for a year or two years this boy is reported to the juvenile court. And on the report of the probation officer and the probation committee the boy is turned loose, cured, a good citizen. Therefore good has been accomplished by it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman is describing a situation. Will the gentleman be kind enough to point to a single line in this bill which will authorize the doing of a single thing the gentleman has here enumerated?

Mr. RAKER. That is exactly what it does. It does nothing else.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I challenge the gentleman to point to any language in the bill that will do what he says.

Mr. RAKER. You are overlooking; you are just shutting your eyes to the question of a juvenile court law. That is what you are doing. You are simply looking at the criminal statutes, trying a man for murder, grand larceny, arson, or thousands of other crimes, before a jury, a man of age and discretion. But here in the District of Columbia, and I think in practically every State in the Union, you can not try a boy under a certain age in the courts as you used to do. They have got to go to a juvenile court. The purpose is for rejuvenation and for correction.

Let me get back to the boy again. We are not always talking from theory. We are talking from experience, what we have seen done in other places by the juvenile court and juvenile court officers and probation officers. This boy has made good.

The charges against him are all dismissed. That is the object and the purpose of this juvenile court law in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. ROSE. I think the gentleman has already stated that he knows of no State in the Union that will permit compulsory examination.

Mr. RAKER. I did not state that.

Mr. ROSE. I have understood that there is a case in Pennsylvania where a magistrate, without information being made against the defendant, ordered an examination of a young girl by the probation officer. What would the gentleman say if that young girl were his daughter in a case of this kind?

Mr. RAKER. I will say to the gentleman that I was reading something, and I did not quite catch his question.

Mr. ROSE. I want to state to the gentleman a case of where a girl was brought before a magistrate and examined by the probation officer, who is a female, where there is no law providing for it. How would the gentleman feel if that young lady should be his daughter and should have been examined without a law providing for such examination, before trial or before conviction could be had?

Mr. RAKER. Forget that trial, because we are all discussing something that is not much involved in the juvenile court law.

Mr. ROSE. Let me state this: Since there are juvenile courts in many of the States of the Union, does the gentleman concede that all of the States of the Union have overlooked this very provision which the gentleman is trying to have enacted into law now?

Mr. RAKER. Put your question and I will try to answer it.

Mr. ROSE. Has not this condition that is now brought before this Congress been observed in every State of the Union? And how many of the States have on their statute books such a law as is now presented?

Mr. RAKER. In the first place, I hate to have to admit it, but I do admit with sorrow and regret that I have no daughter. I would not put it as a personal case. I would put it generally. Remember that this law does not overlook it. This law relates to those charged with the violation of the law.

Mr. ROSE rose.

Mr. RAKER. Now keep still until I get this to you: This relates to those who are delinquent. This relates to children that the father and mother have abandoned.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Not now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RAKER. This relates to cases where the court's charges have been preferred upon reasonable grounds. I suppose there is not one case out of a thousand where those persons are shown to be not guilty of the offenses charged against them.

Now I yield.

Mr. CABLE. Will the gentleman point out the line in the bill which provides that a person must first be charged with a crime before he can be brought before the juvenile court and examined?

Mr. RAKER. I must repeat again: This same kind of a law is in force in Philadelphia and Boston and Chicago, and in many other cities and many of the States now. I hope the gentlemen of the House hearing this matter to-day will remember that the juvenile court law is on the statute books and in force, that it is functioning and working all the time. The jurisdiction is conferred by section 8 of the act of 1906. These boys and girls are before this juvenile court now. Here are diseased boys and diseased girls; 23 per cent have an infectious or contagious disease, 23 out of every 100 that have gone through the courts, without any homes to go to, neglected by fathers and mothers, and afflicted with all the other ills that overtake a young man or a young woman under such conditions.

Now, that is the actual physical condition. It is not a theory. What are you trying to do now by this bill? We have had it in operation here by consent, Army officers assisting. We had a clinic. They examined every boy and girl that came before them, and they did them good. We have not a clinic now. But the great people of the United States are legislating for this municipality, the National Capital; not that they are residents, it makes no difference where they come from, they are entitled to be here, 50 per cent of them, from every State. They are entitled to bring their boys and girls here and live, and they are entitled to have a full equipment of school facilities and courts in full operation for their care and protection; and not only for the care and protection of the children, but also of the fathers and mothers and others they associate with.

Now, the only thing is that the judge herself, presiding, a woman of ability, a woman of experience, a woman who has been sitting there for two years and observing the pitiful conditions of these young men and young women as they came before her, simply comes to this legislative body, that has control of this legislation, and says to it, "Will you give me authority to properly care for these unfortunates? Will you enact legislation that will not only protect the remaining citizens of this District and yourselves from contamination and infection from these diseases, or else permit them to continue?"

Why, before the Committee on the District of Columbia some two months ago evidence was given by the leading physicians of the United States, including Brig. Gen. Sawyer, who appeared before the committee, and there is a bill now pending whereby they will take up the question of venereal diseases and their effect on the adults of this District.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. RAKER. No disease is more dangerous and deadly to the community than that disease, and the only place, the only confines in the United States to-day where you have not law on the subject is the District of Columbia. All the States in the Union provide for adult cases and others, and yet you are questioning here the expenditure of a few dollars for the purpose of protecting these young men and women. You are asked to spend a few dollars to reach into the public schools and take these infested spots out of your public schools for the purpose of saving your own boys and girls in these schools, and at the same time be humane enough to take care of and provide for the young man or young girl that is unfortunate enough to have been thus afflicted.

Now, I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman now be kind enough to indicate the part of the bill that gives any jurisdiction or touches the question of venereal disease or communicable disease?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I will do it. It is just as plain as can be. You will find it on lines 1 to 8. I will read that part that refers to it all:

That there is hereby created and established a clinic attached to the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia for the mental and physical examination and study of persons who may be brought before the said juvenile court whenever in the discretion of the judge of said court such examination and study shall be deemed necessary before, during, or after trial.

Now, I will refer to that first provision, for the mental and physical examination.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It is the treatment that I inquire about.

Mr. RAKER. It is all provided for in this bill, and it is well put in. Can you get any further in an examination if you examine the mental and physical condition of a human being? Now, just stop and think; what more is there left that the doctor can go into?

Mr. RAYBURN. The moral condition.

Mr. RAKER. We could not go into the moral condition. So I say, answering the gentleman's question, it covers all the mental condition and the physical condition. The physical condition means from the head to the sole of the foot; every organ, every vein, and every artery that relates to the anatomy of the individual.

Now, going on the other question. The judge of the juvenile court shall have power to appoint the following: A physician, male, at a salary of $5,000 per annum, who shall have had a special training as a psychiatrist in the diagnosis of insanity and mental diseases. All right; I have read and studied that provision. He is to appoint a physician, and one of the qualifications—this is not a one-sided physician—one of the qualifications is that he must have had experience and know something about the mental condition of human beings. He has all the other attributes of making a physical examination.

Mr. RAYBURN. All the qualifications that the bill calls for is that he must be a psychiatrist.

Mr. RAKER. No; the bill does not say that.

Mr. RAYBURN. And devote his entire time to that.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. The bill says that he shall have power to appoint a physician who shall have had special training as a psychiatrist in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defects.

Mr. RAYBURN. And devote his entire time to it.

Mr. RAKER. And shall devote their entire time to such work. What work? Go back in lines 5 and 6 and it says mental and physical examination of these boys and girls. That is what it means, and it can not mean anything else. You can not expect a physician, graduated at one of our best medical colleges, to know only one subject and be an entire ignoramus as to all the rest. But he must know the physical anatomy of a human being.

Mr. RAYBURN. The bill prohibits anything except that he devotes the whole time to the work mentioned in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mental and physical examination. There can be no harm in putting into the bill the suggestion made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS], but that would not be necessary. The question involved here—and I do not want to get involved in discussing the mere meaning of words, but this is for the physician who must have some qualifications outside of the ordinary physician, and that is in the diagnosing of mental troubles. He being a physician, a graduated physician with some experience, he will be able to apply all the knowledge that he has that relates to the physical condition of the boy and girl that he examines, whether it is venereal disease or not, and treat them properly and right, because in the majority of cases it can be determined by the Wasserman test. But the whole objection to this bill seems to be that it gives the court the power to appoint a physician to take care of these children.

Mr. ARENTZ. My objection is that two and a half cases are to be handled each day by a $5,000 physician and two assistants. That seems an unreasonable burden to put upon the Government and taxpayers.

Mr. RAKER. Let me answer that. Here at a high school are a thousand young men and women practically equally divided. Here is a delinquent going to that school having a dangerous contagious and infectious venereal disease. There is a girl going to the same school and right among the 998 boys and girls attending that school and according to the authority of all the physicians and all the scientists they are subject to be infected with this loathsome disease. Is it too expensive if it costs $5,000 for a whole year if this doctor could take out that one boy and this one girl from this school and take the canker from the whole school and keep it from being infected and preserve the health of the children of that school so that they will not be subject to the contamination that is on every side of them. This idea of expense, this question of cost, when you are trying to conserve the health of the community, when you are trying to protect the community from these diseases, ought not to be taken into consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman where he finds authority to authorize the judge to impose a penalty before the party is found guilty. In line 8, page 1, you authorize the judge before the trial to require this boy or girl to submit to a physical examination. Where do you get the authority for that, certainly not from the Constitution?

Mr. RAKER. I know; but one of the Members suggested that it would do no hurt if the bill had an amendment. But here is a different state of facts. In an ordinary criminal case you take a man before the court and ask him, Did you do this thing or did you do that? and you are violating the provisions of the Constitution. In the juvenile court you do it every day, and the courts have held that you have a right to do it; you are the parent; you stand in the relation of parent to that child. The Government is looking after it, and the citizenry is of more importance to this country than any one function of the Government.

The Government is interested in its children. The Government is interested in the divorces that are granted, and it has so been held by the courts. The Government maintains an interest in the relation of these people to the end that each one may pursue his course in a healthier and proper way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. But the gentleman has not answered my question. Where does he get the authority?

Mr. RAKER. Under this act, giving the juvenile court the power.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. And is not that unconstitutional?

Mr. RAKER. No; I do not think it is. My recollection is that many courts all over the United States, some 25 or 30, have held that it is not an infraction of the Constitution for a juvenile court to bring in a young boy or girl and have them sit down and make an examination of their entire lives. You could not do it in an ordinary criminal case. But a boy 14 years of age is brought before the court and you tell him to come in, and say, "Now, young man, tell me all about it." You do not tell him to be careful, that what he says will be used against him, and you are not violating constitutional law.

It is a duty the Government owes to its citizens, and it is the establishment of a court for the purpose of protecting the children, the same as a parent has the right to inquire what his child has done and is doing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The juvenile court is a court of record, is it not?

Mr. RAKER. Most of them are.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I will state as a fact that this is a court of record. An appeal lies from its findings.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. And a man who violates the order of the court may be fined.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. In this case you propose to impose your penalty before you try the man or the boy. It is provided that he must submit to a physical examination before the trial, and that is a penalty, is it not?

Mr. RAKER. I do not think so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That he must submit to a physical examination before, at the time of the trial, or after the trial. You do not give him a chance to prove that he is not guilty of any wrongdoing, but you humiliate him by making him submit to this before you give him a trial.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. And in that connection instead of its being an exposition of what may be wrong with the person before the board, is it not frequently the case, with the consent of those interested, and perhaps, too, with a child old enough to know the facts, that these things are not put on record, and that the court protects rather than anything else against publicity of something that people ought not to know?

Mr. RAKER. That is one of the main purposes of the court, and Heaven knows that it has saved many a young girl and boy and has protected them in after life and made good citizens of them. That is one of the objects of the juvenile court. Let me say a word about this personal examination. There is not so much in that as some of our friends would like to have us believe. I remember being in France. I started home. I wanted to go home. I was asked whether I had a certificate of examination, and I said "No." They then told me to go around and get one. Now, we submitted to an absolutely complete physical examination, even to the taking off of our shoes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In France?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; before you could get home. There was not anything wrong about that, and that is particularly so in these cases where you are attempting to prevent the spread of an infectious, dangerous, contagious disease. Are you going to let a leper go down the street and say that you can not examine him? If a man starts out here and you think he has the small-pox, are you going to examine him, are you going to arrest him, or are you going to let him go simply because somebody says that you shall not infringe upon his personal rights?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman the fact that these physical and mental examinations are held more in many cases to determine whether the alleged delinquent child is guilty of any criminal offense, and may determine in many cases whether any penalty ought to be assessed against him. Certainly the juvenile judge ought to know whether any physical or mental condition had contributed to the alleged delinquency.

Mr. RAKER. I have no doubt that there are at least 25 per cent of the cases that can be and are disposed of by virtue of those conditions.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that instead of the examination being a penalty, it may prevent the imposition of a penalty.

Mr. RAKER. It prevents a penalty and prevents disgrace.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CLOUSE. In referring to the two cases here in one of the high schools in the city, will the gentleman tell us and the members of the committee how the juvenile court in the District of Columbia would acquire jurisdiction of those cases?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. According to the records produced by Brig. Gen. Sawyer and clear on down through the Navy and the War Departments, which are printed by this committee in the hearings had on a bill to protect the public from the spread of venereal diseases, the gentleman will find lots of justification for this. Here is a boy, we will say, who is a delinquent. His father and mother do not take care of him. He goes to the high school. The truant officer files a charge against him and he is taken down to the juvenile court. That court, instead of bringing a jury and a lot of attorneys and others about him, puts the young man down and says, "What is the matter with you?" The boy replies, perhaps, that his father beats him, that his mother does not give him the necessary clothing, that he is not treated well at home, that, of course, he goes to school but he runs away most of the time. The question is then asked him as to what he has been doing. He does not like to tell all of the things, but after inducement he does, and he tells what has happened to him. He is asked how he is feeling, and he says he feels a little sick, but he does not like to tell in what way; but finally he tells the whole story, and they find that the boy is reeking with a contagious, infectious, dangerous disease. In that case what are you going to do? Are you going to send the boy back to school to let him mingle among the thousands of others there?

Mr. CLOUSE. Assuming that this boy you refer to is not an incorrigible, that he is not a delinquent in that he is provided with his books, his clothing, his means of support, would the gentleman then say that he was a delinquent, so as to give the District court jurisdiction of his person?

Mr. RAKER. Of course, if he is not a truant, if he is not a delinquent, if he has not committed any offense, if he has not been charged with committing an offense, then not in one case out of one hundred thousand would the boy be apprehended; but the truant officer knows whether he has been at school, the teacher knows, the neighbors know. His father and mother can do nothing with him. He goes before the juvenile court; and, instead of finding there an adversary, he finds one who is a friend. The juvenile court judge is supposed to be the friend of the boy and of the girl. The boy will say that for the first time in years he has found a friend.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am trying to get some little idea of what the committee has in mind.

Mr. RAKER. And the boy tells his story and he is protected. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman understand that the pending bill enlarges or increases in any way the original jurisdiction of this juvenile court?

Mr. RAKER. To my mind it neither enlarges it nor does it limit it. It gives it another function whereby it can enforce and make effective a law which is now on the statute books. That is my view of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hold in my hand a copy of the law creating the original juvenile court.

Mr. RAKER. I have it before me, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman find in the law any authority conferred upon the courts to compel a compulsory examination on the part of those persons coming before it?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, the gentleman has been in the trial of cases in several—

Mr. BANKHEAD. Answer the question.

Mr. RAKER. I am. Did the gentleman ever see a physical examination given in a court room? Does the gentleman find on the statute books that the court must have specific authority to examine in the trial of a case?

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the gentleman mean to say that the court undertakes, when a party to a case is in court involuntarily, to require him to submit to a physical examination without a statute authorizing it?

Mr. RAKER. I made no such statement.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then, can it do it any more if the party happens to be an infant—

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Than if he were a grown man?

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely, because the court has that function.

Mr. STEVENSON. Has the infant more rights than an adult?

Mr. RAKER. There are entirely different functions in different courts constituted for different purposes. I say to the gentleman and every constitutional lawyer, and I see numbers of them before me now, and I make this statement as a fundamental statement, that you bring a man into a court room or before a grand jury and say, "Tell what you know about this case." You are violating his constitutional right, and if you proceed any further and convict him you will have a reversal. The gentleman knows there is a distinction—

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. BURTNESS. I believe most of the discussion on both sides has proceeded on the theory that this law provides for an absolutely compulsory examination. Is that the real situation?

Mr. RAKER. It does not say so.

Mr. BURTNESS. Or does it simply provide an agency that the juvenile court may use without the court having the absolute authority to compel an examination if it is against the wishes of the person who stands in the position of loco parentis to the child?

Mr. RAKER. I say unhesitatingly under this provision, in answer to the gentleman's question, it is entirely discretionary with the judge as to the number who shall be examined, if any.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Is it discretionary with the patient?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has asked a very pertinent question. This bill is discretionary with the judge. The judge can make an order requiring the examination or he may leave practically all of them unexamined. Now, under the practice heretofore, 1,028, each one of the parents have consented. Now, what is left under this law? Let us assume, let us be frank, let us be fair, let us be just in this kind of legislation and say that the judge is going to use some kind of discretion in the future as he has in the past, because he had the clinic before. Now, he has one and he is going to use it in the future as he has in the past for the benefit of the children and—

Mr. CLOUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield.

Mr. CLOUSE. I would like to know for my own personal information whether or not the ones brought before the juvenile court under the provisions of this bill must be there to answer a criminal or civil charge?

Mr. RAKER. The statute—I have that marked here—the statute says criminal. Now, just a moment.

Mr. CLOUSE. All right.

Mr. RAKER. Under the act of April 27, 1916, has the gentleman got it—

Mr. CLOUSE. I want an answer.

Mr. RAKER. I am going to give an answer; I have it right here. A judgment can not stand as a judgment in a criminal case against a delinquent. Is not that right?

Mr. CLOUSE. I have not the bill before me. If it is a criminal action that is brought in a court, how does the contemplated legislation stand in the light of article 5 of the Constitution, which says that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.

Mr. RAKER. I have answered that once and I will answer again.

Mr. CLOUSE. I would like to know.

Mr. RAKER. Does anybody know of any law that prevents a parent asking a child where he has been and what he has been doing? No; I do not yield further.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Not for a moment.

Mr. STEVENSON. But the gentleman asked a question.

Mr. RAKER. No—

Mr. STEVENSON. Very well, do not ask questions if the gentleman does not want somebody to answer them.

Mr. RAKER. Does anybody question the reasonableness of the parent asking a child those questions? Now, it is provided in the Federal Constitution and in the State constitutions that a man can not be compelled to be a witness against himself in the trial of a criminal case, neither before the grand jury; if so and it is brought before the court, the court will set it aside on that ground upon presentation. Here is a system known as the juvenile court law for the purpose of correction, for the purpose of analyzing the condition of a child like a parent would in the same place, and therefore that provision of the Constitution does not apply, as has been held by the courts.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even if an attempt were made to use that technical argument against this bill, is it not a fact that in practically every case the examination is intended to show whether there ought to be any penalty at all assessed, or whether there is criminal responsibility on the part of a child, and that it is designed to benefit the child rather than to establish against him any criminal prosecution?

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEVENSON. It may be used to show that he is not guilty of a crime, but with equal facility it may be used to show that he is guilty of a crime. And this is absolute power in the hands of a court. It says whenever in the discretion of the judge such examination and study shall be necessary. While it may be a protection, it may be an assault of a very grievous kind. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. It might be a wonderful assault upon a child who is neglected by its parents, who is neglected by the public, who is turned loose, and who has violated the law, to take that child before the juvenile court, and instead of sending him to a reform school or sending him to some other institution, to send him out to some good home, which can be done under this bill, as it is done under all the juvenile court laws. Instead of penalizing the child you become his parent, you look after him, and you provide him with clothing, provide him with the necessary sustenance of life, you provide him with medicine, you cure his mind, you cure his body, and you make a good, healthy boy of him. Now, is not that an awful thing to do? It seems to me every man, woman, and child ought to be ready and willing to go to the very limit to carry out the provisions of this most humane institution established by the American people in regard to juvenile courts and probation officers for the purpose of protecting the young men and women.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to my distinguished friend from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. You are referring now to pure cases of vagrancy, where the children have no father or mother to care for them at all, but would you send one of those cases, afflicted with syphilis, for instance, to a home, and would that home take them, or would a family want them? Except to take them up and hale them before a juvenile court, the whole proceedings stop there. I call this a bill of curiosity, to find out what is the matter with them.

Mr. RAKER. The medical man's disposition is for the medical feature of it. You have seen and I have seen boys taken from the streets and provided with proper sustenance. We have sent them out to homes instead of to institutions, with the consent of the boys, and after four or five years we have seen the proceedings against them dismissed, and we turn the boy out an upright citizen, attached to one of the good ladies of the community. You can find such cases as those by the hundreds and thousands in the United States to-day, and it has been possible by virtue of our juvenile court law. What did we do 20 years ago? Why, there are cases on record where we have tried for murder children of 10 years of age. But the humanity of the American people began to realize that we could institute this kind of a court, and I am going to stay with that proposition, even if it has anything to do with the constitutional right. It is a parent to a child, and this is just another method of giving the juvenile court the right to furnish medicine and care not only for this child but to keep him from intermingling with others.

Mr. LAYTON. In my State for years we had a provision whereby under a proper officer, who is supposed to look after such cases, application could be made to the homes in Philadelphia, and even further afield, to take a boy or girl into such home. But within the last two or three years some Government official, very busy, as they always are, came down there into my State, and you never heard tell of such an apparent disclosure of cruelty, and so forth, that these people who took these children were supposed to have inflicted upon them.

The gentleman is absolutely all right. I agree with him that that is the very practical way of settling this question of the fatherless and motherless. I believe in that. I am not opposed to your bill here in this District if you will only do two or three things to it. Do not you attempt to invade the liberty of those children until they become wards of the State by due process of law, and after you have done that, then take them and give them what they ought to have—food, clothes, and medical treatment.

Mr. RAKER. Just a word, and I am through.

The gentleman from Delaware has spoken about the fatherless. You know, and we all know, that there is more crime committed by the strong-headed boy that does not pay any attention to his parents. He knows more than dad or mother knows when he is 14 years of age, and he runs away from school. The dad says, "I have done all I can and can not help him any longer." The teacher knows that he is gone. I want to give you a practical, concrete case that applies to this. The truant officer knows he is gone. Dad says he is too busy; mother says she has too many social functions to perform; and the boy goes to the bad. Now, what do you do in the juvenile court? Let me tell you—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] is recognized.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent that general debate close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the general debate close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, this seems to be a field day on this matter. I had no idea when we called up this bill that there would be any extended debate. I was trustful of the House with respect to its silence to-day on this measure. I wish to assure you, however, that whenever any further bills are taken up by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia he will not be trustful. He will try to have the time for debate fixed before we begin.

Now, we have heard a good deal with reference to the bill to-day, and a good deal that has not had anything to do with it. But the chairman and members of the committee, after having listened to real experts on the question, men who were brought before the committee during the hot summer days and nights, after having listened to Judge Sellers and to experts who came before us, to the people who had seen this measure in operation and who have been parties to its operation, or to the operation of measures of similar character in all the great cities of the country, working, I believe, successfully, we have brought in this bill for your consideration. I know that this law is a success in Philadelphia, for we had before the committee the probation officer of that city.

But you know, my friends, that after all in matters of this kind it is chiefly a question of administration. You take a case of this character: The judge sits on the bench with almost unlimited power. Even the ordinary common-pleas judge of a country court has wide discretionary power. I have vowed many times that I would never vote for a 10 years' tenure of a judge unless he was a man of compassion and pity and good heart, for the public must necessarily be his children.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOCHT. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have not spoken hitherto to-day; and the gentleman has had a great opportunity. There is no one that I would prefer hearing than the gentleman, and some day we will give him a full hour.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wanted to ask you where you learned those extraordinary doctrines? [Laughter.]

Mr. FOCHT. That is a very pertinent question, and I will try to answer. I thank the gentleman for the opportunity. It is a matter of administration. We find it here in governmental departments. We pass acts of Congress; we think we shall have carried into effect what has been in the mind of Congress; and we try to get something through on that hypothesis; and then we go down and find that they have not interpreted our law. About next summer or the 1st of January they are going to tell you just how your law is to operate—the lawmaking heads of departments.

So that I say if a stony-hearted judge sits upon that bench, to Neroize this kind of legislation, you can soon drift into resentment that might approximate anarchy, whereas on the other hand if you have as a judge only the kind of man or woman for whom I vote for judge, who has some heart for the boy or the man or the woman or the girl that is down and out, and particularly diseased and hopeless up to that time, you will get a proper administration of this bill.

But fundamentally, gentlemen, this bill is based upon a high and benevolent purpose. It is progressive; it is constructive. It leads in the right direction. It is offering the pitying hand, the helping hand, to those who do not know how to help themselves and could not help themselves even if they did know. I do not know any gentleman who can conceive perfect legislation. There is no such thing as perfection in human wisdom. There is only one place where you can find out whether it is perfect or not, and that is the place where you try it.

Now, before you have had even an opportunity to amend this bill we find gentlemen here, of high purpose, to be sure, inveighing against it. What are we here for? As I suggested with reference to a measure that we had up some weeks ago, our legislation must conform to the collective intelligence and judgment of this House, not that of one man or of one committee. I know a member of the District Committee who said, after I had called attention to that fact in relation to the other bill, "That is one thing that I will never admit, and that is that the American Congress is not able to function; that it is not able to perfect a bill; that it is not able by its machinery to get the collective judgment of the House."

The only way to do that now is to proceed to have this bill amended if you so desire; and I hope, my friends, before this day passes we may have amendments offered that suggest themselves to the Members who believe in the bill, who believe in taking care of the children, who believe in taking the pest spots out of the schools and from the public highways. Let us proceed without further debate. Let us debate something else. It seems to me it is tiresome to the membership and to the audience. Let us move on a little, gentlemen, and let us read the bill. [Applause and cries of "Read!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created and established a clinic attached to the juvenile court of the District of Columbia for the mental and physical examination and study of persons who may be brought before the said juvenile court whenever in the discretion of the judge of said court such examination and study shall be deemed necessary before, during, or after trial.

That the judge of the juvenile court shall have power to appoint the following: A physician (male) at a salary of $5,000 per annum, who shall have had special training as a psychiatrist in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defects; a psychiatric case worker at a salary of $1,800 per annum; and a psychologist at a salary of $2,000 per annum, and who shall devote their entire time to such work; and a physician (female) at a salary of $1,000 per annum, who shall devote part time to such work for the purpose of conducting such clinic under the supervision of the judge of said court. Such officers shall perform such duties and be governed by such regulations as may be prescribed by the presiding judge, and such judge is authorized to remove any of them for cause.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. On page 1, line 8, strike out the words "before, during," and on line 9 the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAYTON: Page 1, lines 8 and 9: On line 8, after the word "necessary," strike out the words "before, during," and on line 9 the word "or."

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment that I have offered prevails the language will read as follows:

That there is hereby created and established a clinic attached to the juvenile court of the District of Columbia for the mental and physical examination and study of persons who may be brought before the said juvenile court whenever in the discretion of the judge of said court such examination and study shall be deemed necessary after trial.

Now, in continuation of what I said about the matter of discrimination between persons. Gentlemen, why should we have this discrimination as applied to the juvenile court, to the boys and girls whoever they may be, who come before the criminal court? The gentleman who has charge of this bill stated a truth, and there is no question about it, that we have in the country here a prevalent disease that is found within the palace as within the cottage gate. Every physician knows it, but why discriminate? If you are going to try to eradicate venereal diseases by an attempt to examine a very few boys and girls who will come before the juvenile court and who may, as the gentleman from Massachusetts says, infect those that he comes in contact with, in the name of high heaven why do you not pass a bill providing that everybody that comes before the Supreme Court of the United States shall undergo examination before they enter that holy tribunal? Why do you not have the principle applied to everybody, every gathering, every sort and condition of men? If this were a menace to the life or the health of people that affected only boys and girls, or only those who belong to the common walk of life, the bill would be pertinent.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I assume that it is not the purpose of the gentleman from Delaware to subject to this examination a boy or girl who has been acquitted. Consequently I suggest that it would be well to strike out the word "trial" and insert the word "conviction."

Mr. LAYTON. I will accept that suggestion because the word "conviction" is the word I want, and it was an oversight that I did not put it in. Mr. Chairman, I ask to perfect my amendment by striking out the word "trial" and inserting the word "conviction."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to perfect his amendment by striking out, from line 9, the word "trial" and substituting the word "conviction." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAYTON. No; I only have a little time, and I want to say a few words more. During the war I was so placed that in five months I had to make over 1,500 physical examinations in the express line of venereal trouble. I found as a result an average of 25 per cent afflicted with the disease in some form or other, and I was asked by the corporation that I was serving what was the remedy. Now, my friends, if you want a remedy for this, if you think it a matter of supreme importance that there should be a universal remedy, there is only one, as I wrote to the head of the corporation when he asked me my opinion. That is this: Pass a law that every physician in the United States, just as he is required by a State law to report every case of smallpox that comes to his notice, let him be required by law to report every case of venereal trouble that comes to his notice. Then let the State take care of them by segregating them in hospitals or camps. Gentlemen, that will do it; but you are not going to do it yet, in my judgment.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I oppose this amendment for the protection of the children themselves. In their behalf I protest against it. The idea of the juvenile court is to help the children that come before the court, not to help the criminal after conviction. That is not the idea. Now, if the judge finds by examination through the duly appointed officer that a child has a disease that affects him mentally, and this disease does affect children mentally, then the judge can use his discretion and act accordingly. Now, what do they do in Philadelphia and other cities? Charles T. Walker testified before the committee as follows:

The present judge is sitting in juvenile court this morning, and he has beside him a physician, Dr. Shallow, a very prominent physician in Philadelphia. While the judge is handling the technique of the law, he is also helping him to act upon the diagnosis made by the physician of the court. It is something we could not do without in the city of Philadelphia, and we are very grateful to the public men who have given such wide power under the law to help these children. As to the bill you have before you at this time, I think it is very important to include at least two of the suggestions made by Dr. Hart—to provide that there should be mental and physical examination, and also that you might confer upon the judge of the juvenile court the authority to allow children to be examined before a hearing. First, we do have authority in Pennsylvania, not only for the child who is arrested for an offense but unfortunate, neglected, or dependent children.

That is the whole purpose of this bill, to help the children and to make society better. That is why we put this provision in.

Mr. BURNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. BURNESS. Is it not true that if this amendment carries the bill will practically be killed, as far as accomplishing any good, for the reason that 90 per cent of the cases brought before the juvenile court are disposed of without a formal trial?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes. These cases will be treated at home.

Mr. BURNESS. They want to save the record against the children?

Mr. LAYTON. Why do you not get Congress to hale all of the children in the District of Columbia before the court?

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Is it not proper and customary that frequently the judge has this examination made before in order to determine whether the child is guilty or is capable of committing a crime?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Certainly.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am sure that there is no member of the committee who would more readily act to suppress the disease that has been referred to and that evidently has been contemplated in the drafting of this legislation than I, but I say to you that after a careful analysis of the bill I have no doubt in my mind that it will fall far short of the object sought. In the first place, it is provided that there shall be established a clinic in connection with the juvenile court of the District of Columbia, and the purpose of this clinic is to examine the mental and physical condition of persons who may be brought before the court whenever in the discretion of the judge of said court said examination and study may be deemed necessary.

I have had occasion to examine the original act creating the juvenile court of the District of Columbia. It confers jurisdiction on that court over all crimes less than that of felony, and that court therefore is to-day dealing with crimes, not with civil litigation. If that court's jurisdiction is solely confined to the trying of offenses that are known as crimes, then I say to you that, although to refer to the Constitution of the United States may be laughed at nowadays, it is directly in conflict with the Bill of Rights adopted as a part of that document, which is the Magna Charta of our liberty. I ask you why it is that in the enactment of legislation we are so callous of constitutional provisions as to enact legislation that must necessarily be construed by the courts of the country? History tells us that in many instances the judgment of this House has been overturned by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and why? Because we are unmindful of the organic law of the country.

Under Article V of the Constitution of the United States it is expressly provided that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. What are the provisions of the proposed law? The judge of the juvenile court before he has jurisdiction of the person must issue some sort of a process charging him with some kind of an offense, a crime, and he is then brought into the juvenile court only by reason of that process.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLOUSE. When this person is brought before the judge of the juvenile court, contrary to the express provisions of the Constitution, and before a trial has been had he is subjected to a physical examination, and that may and will be used as evidence in sustaining a verdict of guilty against him. I for one am unwilling to go that far and deprive any man, any boy, or any girl in whose veins flows American blood, who loves freedom and liberty, of the rights which are guaranteed to him under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment. If the copy which I hold in my hand is a correct one of the juvenile law of the District of Columbia, then it is chiefly administered by a juvenile judge appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate. As suggested by the chairman of the committee, a good deal of this discussion revolves around the problem of administration. As a prosecuting attorney, I know a little about the workings of the juvenile court law in my home State. It seems to me that those who have opposed this law or who are fathering this amendment are speaking about criminal law generally, whereas the juvenile law primarily is not a criminal law. I should say that 90 per cent of the cases come under the head of "neglected" and "dependent" children. If the proposed amendment should be agreed to, it will simply nullify and destroy the effect of the proposed law. Often these children are accompanied in court by their parents, some of them parents who have been careless and who then know for the first time the physical condition of their children and what they have been doing. They will consent to finding out the truth. The object of the juvenile court, as has been said here time after time, is the protection of the child and of society. It is absolutely necessary sometimes to protect a great many boys in a community from one girl, and it is also necessary sometimes to protect the girls in a community from a boy. Ordinarily the object of calling the boy into the court is not to have him charged with crime, but in order that he may know his condition and say whether he will yield to his parents in instructing him and in reporting to the probation officer. If he does not upon examination yield to what they require of him in conduct and in making reports, he can then be sent to the reformatory and society will be protected, but if he can be reformed, his name is kept out of the newspapers and frequently he is made a good citizen. I for one would be willing to trust in this District a person appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate whose duty it is to protect the boys and girls of the District and to protect society. I think the amendment ought to be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. We are sitting in the Appropriation Committee room from 9 o'clock in the morning until 6 and 7 o'clock every night trying to see how we can make the revenues meet the outgo. This bill proposes to create a new activity, which will add a new expense. It is a most extraordinary power which it is proposed to confer upon the judge of the juvenile court. It is proposed to authorize the judge of the court to appoint a physician at $5,000 per annum, who shall have special training. Who is to decide what that training shall be? Then, also, the judge of that court is authorized to employ a worker at $1,800 a year and another one at $2,000 a year and another at $1,000 a year. Nobody knows where the expense will end. Everyone in the United States is clamoring for a reduction of expenses, and here we propose to increase them without any beneficial results. The business of the judge of the juvenile court does not contemplate the activities proposed in this bill.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. No. The time has come when we must realize that there is some place where we must stop. [Applause.] It is all very well to be sentimental, but sentiment does not pay bills; it creates expenses. The only way in which you can pay the bills of the Government of the United States is by taxing the people. We have no fund in the Treasury of the United States except that which we collect from the people. I am endeavoring to the best of my ability as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to carry out your mandates for economy.

I am here at the expense of the work which I am charged with doing that I may express my opposition to this unnecessary expenditure. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERHILL rose.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I do not yield. I have never before heard of such extraordinary powers being given to a judge. The judge is there to decide the law, not to appoint positions or workers, and the time has come, and we ought to realize it, that we must pay some attention to those people who are back home paying the bills, and quit this nonsense of creating obligations against the people without any rhyme or reason. [Applause.] [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I asked the distinguished chairman of this committee a while ago a question which he said he was very glad I had asked, but which up to this time he has failed to answer. I asked him when he said he had made up his mind never to vote for another 10-year term if he proposed to limit the term of these offices which he has created. He has not yet answered it. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in addition to what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says, you are creating three or four expensive offices, and you are creating them without any limitation as to term. [Applause.] There is no provision in here about it, and I asked the gentleman if he proposed to limit them, and he said he was mighty glad I asked the question, but I have not heard from him since. I want to know whether it is the proposition in this bill to create four officers for life and put them on the people of the District of Columbia. Now, I would like to know also what a psychiatric case worker at a salary of $1,800 is for anyhow. You have got a doctor who is a psychiatrist and here is a psychiatric case worker, and he is a fellow who works his mind or somebody else's mind, and he is given $1,800 for doing that for life according to this bill. Now, there is another thing about it. They say it is for the protection of children, and they lay great stress upon the physical examination. There is a provision for mental examination also, and it has turned out recently that when a psychiatric gets to work on a man who has committed a crime that in a majority of instances they decide that he has the mental development of a child of 8 years of age. They have found that three times down in my section of the Union in the last few weeks. If you put a psychiatric to examine the minds of boys who are brought before the court, they are going to find that they have the mental capacity of an infant and say they are not guilty of anything. Some boys are guilty and some are not, and the mental examination which they propose to make is such that the judge can send them where he pleases, to some penal or reformatory institution so eloquently described by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. Well, these reformatory institutions have not been the greatest success in the world, and if under the terms of this bill he is to be allowed to send boys to reformatory institutions, we had better go pretty slow, because from the time when Dickens wrote of Dotheboys Hall in Nicholas Nickleby and of Oliver Twist in the almshouse we know that boys who go to these institutions are seldom reformed and frequently ruined, and I do not propose to give such extraordinary powers to anybody. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERHILL) there were—ayes 42, noes 23.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. STAFFORD. That motion can not be made in the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The Chair proceeded to count. [After counting.] Sixty-eight Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Elston	Kless	Pringley

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. McARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 7883, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, and that 264 Members, a quorum, had answered to their names, and that he presented therewith a list of the absentees for printing in the Journal and Record.

The committee resumed its session, with Mr. McARTHUR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7883. Prior to the point of no quorum being made tellers had been ordered on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to strike out the enacting clause. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 126, noes 52.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the pending bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. McARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7883, had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I think on as important a bill as this we should have a roll call, and I therefore demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the committee that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LEE of New York, for 10 days, on account of serious illness in his family.

To Mr. PORTER, during the International Conference on the Limitation of Armaments.

To Mr. BELL, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. PARRISH (at the request of Mr. LANHAM), until further notice, on account of sickness in family.

MILITARY PARK ON PLAINS OF CHALMETTE.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 2232 and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 2232 and agree to the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2232) in reference to a national military park on the plains of Chalmette, below the city of New Orleans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment: Page 1, strike out lines 11 and 12, and lines 1 and 2 on page 2, and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That the expenses of the investigation herein directed to be made shall be paid from the appropriation 'Contingencies of the Army.'"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a copy of an address that I made in Welch, McDowell County, W. Va., at a meeting of the chapter of the American Legion on Armistice Day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an address made by himself in West Virginia on Armistice Day. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COLE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the burial of the unknown soldier.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the burial of the unknown soldier. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by George C. Hazleton, an ex-Representative from Wisconsin, made at Chester, N. H., his native town, upon the occasion of the return of the dead body of Corpl. Forsythe, who was killed in France.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by a former Member of Congress, in New Hampshire, upon the return of the body of a deceased soldier to his native town. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to object to any more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of curtailment of armament.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the curtailment of armament. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, I am not going to object to any Member of the House extending his own remarks or to inserting any speech he has made elsewhere, but I shall object to inserting the speech of somebody else made somewhere else.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, November 15, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

262. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a detailed statement concerning the publications issued by the Department of Commerce during the fiscal year 1921; to the Committee on Printing.

263. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill in connection with the appropriation "Pay of personnel and maintenance of hospitals, Public Health Service," under the Treasury Department; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

264. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting statement of claims adjusted and paid under authority of the appropriation "Pay, miscellaneous" of the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WINSLOW, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1039) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 467), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8618) granting a pension to Rebecca T. Alexander; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, November 15, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee for every ray of sunlight that brightens our earthly pathway. We thank Thee for every encouragement with which Thou dost grant unto us direction and help and cheer when the duties of life press upon us. We humbly beseech of Thee for Thy guidance to-day, so that in the administration of the high responsibilities of this Chamber the light from Thy presence may be had and wisdom all sufficient for guidance may be realized. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Myers	Simmons
Borah	Harris	Nelson	Smith
Bursum	Harrison	New	Smoot
Calder	Heflin	Nicholson	Spencer
Cameron	Johnson	Norbeck	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Townsend
Culberson	Kendrick	Overman	Trammell
Cummins	Kenyon	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	King	Penrose	Warren
Dial	Ladd	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	La Follette	Polindexter	Watson, Ind.
Fernald	McCormick	Pomerene	Weller
Fletcher	McCumber	Ransdell	Wilbs
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Robinson
Glass	McNary	Sheppard

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIS presented resolutions adopted by Cleveland (Ohio) Lodge, No. 47, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, and Station Employees urging that any payments to the railroads under the provisions of the railroad relief bill be made in strict conformity with existing laws covering the control of interstate commerce and rail transportation, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS presented resolutions adopted by a mass meeting of citizens of Monroe; the Council of Jewish Women, of Augusta; the members of Congregation of Beth Israel, of Macon; the Atlanta League of Women Voters; and the Women's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Decatur; all in the State of Georgia, favoring the promotion of world peace by the limitation of armament, and open sessions of the Conference on Limitation of Armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the members of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of Winfield, Kans., favoring the enactment of the so-called Willis-Campbell antibeer bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Judson Kilpatrick Post, No. 36, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the enactment of House bill 7213, granting a pension of $72 per month to Civil War veterans and $50 per month to Civil War widows, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LADD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Carrington, N. Dak., praying that Treasury Department regulations permitting the sale of beer and light wines be abolished, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a telegram from the Knights of Columbus, of Grand Forks, N. Dak., indorsing the program on limitation of armament proposed by Secretary Hughes at the international conference in session in the city of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Brady, Minot, and Douglas, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the limitation of armament and reduction of military and naval expenditures so as to decrease taxation, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Carney, Mich., and Shawano, Wis., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 1948, providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented letters and communications in the nature of petitions of The Saturday Club, of Stanton; Webster Grange, No. 1111; the A B C Club, of Grand Ledge; the Federation of Women's Clubs, of Benton Harbor; the Women's Club House Association, and the Pilgrim Congregational Church, of Lansing, all in the State of Michigan, favoring definite limitation of armament and the cultivation of friendly relations with all nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented 66 petitions of sundry citizens and church organizations of the State of Michigan, praying for the prompt enactment of the so-called Willis-Campbell antibeer bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McLEAN presented a resolution adopted by the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Second Congregational Church, of Coventry, Conn., in favor of the enactment of the so-called Willis-Campbell antibeer bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions of Lady Fowler Council, No. 58, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of Milford; the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Second Congregational Church, of Coventry; the Chamber of Commerce of Glastonbury; Goddess of Liberty Council, No. 3, of New Haven; women of the College Club, of Bridgeport; Perseverance Council, No. 33, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of Fair Haven; Lady Sherman Council, No. 15, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of Shelton; and Quinnipiack Council, No. 61, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of New Haven, all in the State of Connecticut, indorsing the Conference on Limitation of Armaments and favoring the promotion of peace among the nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorials of members of the Star of Light Lodge, No. 3, Shepherds of Bethlehem, of New Haven, and sundry citizens of New Haven, Bridgeport, Meriden, Waterbury, New Britain, Norwich, Redding, Stratford, and Woodbridge, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called Fordney and Penrose bill for refunding foreign loans and favoring the granting of a bonus to all ex-service men, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by members of the New London County Farm and Home Bureau, of Norwich, Conn., remonstrating against the imposition of a tariff duty on fertilizers, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RANSDELL presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 21, by Mr. Dymond.

Whereas there is now pending before Congress H. R. 6048, referring to the agricultural resources of the United States and the establishment of rural homes through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States; and

Whereas this bill provides for governmental aid in the reclamation of arid and swamp or overflow lands throughout the United States; and

Whereas the State of Louisiana has over one-third of its entire area, approximately 10,000,000 acres subject to drainage or reclamation; and

Whereas the extension of this national policy of governmental aid and cooperation in the reclamation and settlement of lands that are now waste and unproductive will bring to Louisiana the same great stimulus to prosperity that was conferred on the West by the passage of the Newlands Reclamation Act in 1902; and

Whereas this bill, known as the Borah-Bankhead bill, has the active support of the same great forces which caused the passage of the Newlands reclamation bill, and Louisiana being one of the States most to be benefited should actively lend support to this bill: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Louisiana does hereby approve of the principles and purposes of the Borah-Bankhead bill and indorse the same; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and the President of the Senate and Senators and Members of the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in the Congress of the United States, with the request that they support the passage of H. R. 6048 or such legislation as shall attempt to accomplish the purposes therein set forth.

I hereby certify that the above is a correct copy of the original resolution adopted by the Legislature of Louisiana.

E. J. TALLIEN,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have received a telegram from the mayor of Schenectady, N. Y., to which I have replied. I ask that the telegram and my reply may be read by the Secretary and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

[Telegram.]

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., November 14, 1921.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Report here that Edwin G. Conde has been recommended for appointment by Postmaster General Hays as postmaster at Schenectady, N. Y. Of the three eligibles for appointment two were ex-service men. Mr. McDonald, postmaster since March, 1920, was a Spanish War veteran. Maj. Jacob Clinton was a Spanish War veteran, also a World War veteran, with distinguished foreign service. People in Schenectady, regardless of party affiliations, are disappointed that Edwin Conde should be appointed over Maj. Clinton and Mr. McDonald. Is the law giving preference in appointment to ex-service men still binding? When I voted for war as a Member of Sixty-fifth Congress I sincerely believed that this country would never deliberately turn down capable and efficient ex-service men when they were eminently qualified for appointment. I believe that if confirmation is withheld until all the facts can be placed before the Senate that your distinguished body would not consent to such a glaring disregard of the rights of ex-service men, protected as we have always thought by a definite law. The ex-service men with whom I have talked appreciate your efforts in their behalf. If you can do anything in this particular case it will be appreciated.

GEORGE R. LUNN, Mayor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegram will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. FLETCHER. I now ask that my reply to the mayor may be read and likewise referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The reading clerk read as follows:

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 15, 1921.

Mayor GEORGE R. LUNN,
Schenectady, N. Y.:

Replying to your telegram, President submitted nomination Conde to Senate yesterday. Democratic administration gave preference to honorably discharged service men if qualified to fill positions, but present Postmaster General holds act of Congress does not apply to postmasters. In Florida an honorably discharged disabled service man, a Democrat and acting postmaster, was only qualified eligible result of recent competitive examination, but Postmaster General has requested commission to hold another examination, obviously so that a Republican, not a service man, may qualify and be appointed. Such unjust treatment of former service men by this administration will be resented by all Americans, irrespective of party affiliation.

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegram will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Florida if he has taken any steps to ascertain whether Mr. Hays purposes pursuing this course? If so, I think a congressional investigation should be had of the Postmaster General to see whether partisanship of the character indicated by his telegram is going to rule. It is a shameful exhibition.

Mr. FLETCHER. Replying to the inquiry of the Senator from Utah, I will say that the Postmaster General holds that the law giving preference to ex-service men does not apply to postmasters, and therefore the only rule made with reference to such preference is that ex-service men shall be entitled to five points added to the grade they make in the examination held to ascertain eligibility and qualifications. No preference other than that is allowed.

I want the matter referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, so that if they find existing law requires amendment to accomplish the preference heretofore supposed to be provided for, they may report such amendment.

Mr. KING. I had particularly in mind the statement in the Senator's telegram that notwithstanding an ex-service man had taken the examination in Florida and was entitled to appointment the Postmaster General had ordered another examination, evidently for the purpose of having a partisan Republican named.

Mr. FLETCHER. Undoubtedly that is the case. I can see no other object or purpose in the course pursued in this and other cases.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

Mr. McNARY. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. HARRISON. Reverting to the colloquy between the Senator—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has asked for the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	McLean	Sheppard
Ball	Glass	McNary	Simmons
Borah	Hale	Myers	Smith
Broussard	Harris	Nelson	Smoot
Bursum	Harrison	New	Spencer
Calder	Heflin	Norbeck	Stanley
Cameron	Hitchcock	Norris	Sutherland
Capper	Johnson	Oddie	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Townsend
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Trammell
Cummins	Kenyon	Penrose	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	King	Phelps	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Ladd	Poinexter	Watson, Ind.
Ernst	La Follette	Pomerene	Weller
Fernald	McKellar	Ransdell	Willis
Fletcher	McKinley	Robinson

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. If there are no reports of committees, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is next in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PAGE:

A bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La.; and

A bill (S. 2719) to reimburse certain persons for loss of private funds while they were patients at the United States Naval Hospital, Naval Operating Base, Hampton Roads, Va.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 2720) to repeal section 315 of Article III of the War Risk Insurance act, as amended (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. PAGE. The bill last introduced was drafted by the Navy Department. It seems to me that it should be referred to the Committee on Finance rather than to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I ask its reference to the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2721) for an investigation by the Secretary of Agriculture of the feasibility of certain methods of irrigation; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. CARAWAY:

A bill (S. 2722) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the White River at or near the town of Des Arc, Ark.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 2723) making an appropriation for the relief of the Seminole Indians in Florida; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 2724) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the White River, in Prairie County, Ark.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 2725) to provide for the payment by the United States of the proportionate cost of the paving of streets upon which property of the United States abuts; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 2726) to defer the time for payment of grazing fees for the use of national forests during the calendar year 1921; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 2727) to amend section 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I am in doubt whether or not the bill, which has to do with copyrights, should be referred to the Committee on Patents or to the Committee on the Library. It should either go to the Committee on Patents or to the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Patents, and it will be so referred.

Mr. SPENCER. Very well.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 2728) to provide for an additional judge of the district court for the eastern district of New York; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following bills:

On November 9, 1921:

S. 1072. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

On November 14, 1921:

S. 2447. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River, between Meeks Ferry and Grigsby Ferry and between Madison County, Miss., and Rankin County, Miss.

MICHIGAN SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I request the Chair to lay before the Senate the Ford-Newberry contest matter and the report of the committee and the views of the minority which have been filed and which are now upon the table with relation thereto. Then, if that is done, I desire to be heard upon the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections relating to the so-called Ford-Newberry contest be laid before the Senate. It is so ordered. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to have the report read?

Mr. SPENCER. I think not. The report is somewhat long.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us have the report read. As I understand, it requires unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report.

Mr. SPENCER. Such is not my understanding. The report is not before the Senate except as an incident to the contest. We do not have now before us the resolution upon which we are to vote. If there is any desire—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is in some doubt with regard to the parliamentary situation. Does the Senator from Missouri submit a resolution that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report to which he has just referred?

Mr. SPENCER. Such was the desire of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. SPENCER. If any Senator desires that the report be read, certainly I have no objection, but the report and the views of the minority have been printed and have been upon the desks of Senators for a number of weeks.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, how can we consider something about which we do not know anything? Until the report of the committee shall have been read we can not consider it. It is like a pig in a poke.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question which the Chair thinks ought to be determined is whether or not the report is before the Senate. If the report is before the Senate, then, upon the request of any Senator, the report must be read.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, is this a matter the consideration of which requires unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is in great doubt about the status of the report, but is inclined to hold that it involves a matter of privilege of such high character that it may be taken up without a motion. If the Senate is of the contrary opinion, it can so express itself. The report being before the Senate, the Secretary, on request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], will read it.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before proceeding further, the matter upon which we are about to act is one of very grave importance. I refer particularly to the parliamentary question involved. It seems to me rather extraordinary that a question of this character may displace any business before the Senate upon the mere suggestion of some Member of the Senate, although a majority of the Senate may be opposed to the consideration of the subject at this time. I know of no rule of parliamentary procedure that sanctions such an idea; in fact, if one reflects upon the matter, it can not possibly be the case, because when the protest against the seating of the Senator from Michigan was first filed, if it has this high character and if it may be called up for consideration and disposition at any time, it was the privilege of the Senator from Michigan or any other Senator to demand the immediate disposition of the matter by the Senate, even before any testimony was taken in the case at all. I mean that if this is the correct view to take of the parliamentary procedure in this matter, any Senator had the right to demand an immediate consideration of the subject and an immediate disposition of it before hearing any testimony at all or before reference to a committee.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Is it not a fact that this matter is now before the Senate by unanimous consent, no objection having been made, and that the reading of the report had been begun?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not so understand.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is my understanding.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Chair, as I understood, held that it was a question of such high privilege that he proceeded to direct the reading of the report, and thereupon I engaged the attention of the Chair. Mr. President, I submit that we ought to hear from some one who is more of an authority upon questions of parliamentary procedure than am I, for I confess I am not prepared to controvert the intimation given by the Chair, but it certainly seems to me that it can not possibly be correct.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand the point of the Senator from Montana is that the mere request of a Senator to bring this matter before the body of itself is not sufficient to displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not ruled that it displaces the unfinished business.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand that the Chair has so ruled, but I was stating what I understood the point of the Senator from Montana to be.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is not quite the point which I make. My understanding is that the unfinished business is not now before the Senate, the morning hour not having expired; but the only way that I know of to bring any matter before the Senate for consideration is either upon an application for unanimous consent, as is ordinarily given, or upon motion. I insist that this matter is not properly before the Senate, and I make the point of order at this time that, no motion having been made and no application for unanimous consent for the consideration of the matter having been presented, it is not now properly before the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood the Senator from Missouri to move that the resolution be laid before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not understand that the Senator from Missouri made such a motion; but, if so, I presume the motion itself is before the Senate at this time. If it is, I shall ask for a yeas and nays vote upon the motion.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. I think exactly what happened was not that the Senator from Missouri made a motion, but the Senator from Missouri made a request that the Newberry contest be laid before the Senate. I am free to say to the Senator from Montana that, so far as my investigation has gone, I have not been able to find a precedent in point; and yet I submit that the rule is that when a question involves the right of a Senator to a seat in this body, it is a question of such high privilege that it can be brought up at any time, without a motion, and when it is before the Senate it continues before the Senate until the Senate displaces it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If, then, the Senator is correct, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], immediately upon the filing of his credentials and immediately upon his being sworn in, could have called the attention of the Senate to the fact that a protest had been filed against his taking his seat, and demand the immediate consideration of that subject.

Mr. SPENCER. Undoubtedly, so far as that goes, that could have been done. That demand could have been made when the Senator from Michigan took his seat. It would have been of the highest privilege; but the right of the Senate still remains to continue it, to act upon it immediately, or to investigate it and then act upon it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then, Mr. President, the position of the Senator is that the Senate has to take action to displace it?

Mr. SPENCER. Undoubtedly that is my position. Otherwise, may I say to the Senator from Montana, what we all agree upon as to the high privilege of a matter relating to the seat of a Senator in this body has no foundation. If it takes a motion to bring it before the Senate, it is nothing more than any matter of routine business which can be brought before the Senate by a motion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, these matters of privilege are pretty thoroughly understood. A large number of matters have privilege to the extent that they may be brought up at any time. They may be presented. A report of a committee of conference is privileged, so that it may be presented at any time. A communication from the President of the United States is privileged, so that it may be presented at any time. A communication from the House of Representatives is privileged, so that it may be presented at any time; but that is all. The Senate does not take action on it then by reason of the fact that it is privileged. The presentation is privileged, and that is all.

So, Mr. President, we are confronted with this situation: The contention of the Senator from Missouri, as I understand, is that the Senate is obliged to take action, unless by some sort of action the Senate refuses to take action. I know of no such rule as that. I never heard of such a rule—that a thing is before the Senate automatically, and the Senate must take some steps in order to get rid of it.

Lest I may be misunderstood, I feel that no objection could be taken if I say in this connection that I am opposed to taking up this matter at this time for one reason, and for one reason only; and that is, I am desirous of discussing this matter before the Senate, and discussing it in a lawyerlike way, upon the record which has been made. I have had no opportunity whatever to prepare to give the Senate the benefit of any investigation that I may have made thus far. My work is not in any shape, and this is not a personal matter at all. I apprehend that every Senator is in exactly the same situation, except possibly the Senator from Missouri, who evidently contemplated bringing up this matter at this time. I dare say he is prepared to go on.

Possibly the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] may be prepared to go on; but as for the rest of the Senators who have concerned themselves about this matter, I know of none who is able to go on this morning. I can not do so, and I am desirous of following the discussion so that I shall find myself capable of giving to it the preparation which I desire. I hope to be of some aid to the Senators here in the consideration that they desire to give to this very important matter; but unless we are accorded a few days, at least, after notice that it is going to be brought up, it is going to be presented in a way that will be of no credit to us and no credit to the Senate, or at least to those of us who have not been afforded an opportunity to prepare.

I submit that it seems only just and right that the Senator should give some notice to those who are interested in the matter and those who expect to discuss it, so that they may prepare themselves for the discussion. I do not care how long it is. If you will give me three days, it will be satisfactory to me. I am not to be considered as in anywise attempting to delay the consideration of this very important matter; but after the long delay that has attended this proceeding I can see no reason why it should now be crowded on, before Senators have an opportunity to prepare themselves for the discussion.

The Senator from Missouri remarked a few moments ago that the majority and minority reports have been on the tables of Senators for some time. No doubt that is true; but the Senator knows that Senators have all been engaged in exceedingly important matters, with no kind of intimation that this matter was going to come up at this particular time; and it would be idle for anyone to inform himself about the matter with a view to its discussion upon the floor of the Senate unless the preparation was made immediately before that presentation was to take place. The Senator is a lawyer, and knows that preparation made two or three months in advance is practically useless.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. The discussion of the Senator is always of the greatest help to me, as it is to the rest of the Senate, and I assure the Senator that I am anxious personally to have it; and yet here are the exact facts:

I am sure the Senator agrees with me that as far as it can be conveniently done, this matter ought to be settled one way or the other. The truth of the matter is that after months of investigation the report of the committee was finally filed in the latter part of September. It has been running along since then until now, on the 15th day of November. The Senator says three days' notice would have been sufficient. Last week I was in conference with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to bring up this matter.

The Senator from Ohio joined with me in the desire to dispose of it speedily, as speedily as might be done in justice to those who wanted to be heard, and we both agreed—tentatively, he says, on his part; I understood it was more positively—that the matter would be brought up on Monday or Tuesday of this week, and the Senator from Ohio was to confer with those on his side of the Chamber, in order that he might meet their convenience. I assumed, of course, that the Senator from Ohio conferred with the Senator from Montana last week about this matter, and that therefore there was the notice, which I quite agree with the Senator from Montana, ought to have been given, and which I intended to give.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I understand likewise that there was an agreement on yesterday afternoon—tentative, at least—that the matter was to go over until the return of the Senator from Ohio, or at least until the regular session.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Oh, no.

Mr. SPENCER. May I interrupt the Senator? The tentative agreement yesterday afternoon was that unanimous consent might be obtained to vote upon this question on December 9 or December 10, and that if that agreement had been made it was to prevail; but, for some reason or other, that has rather fallen through.

Here is the situation: The Senator from Ohio, who wrote the minority report, of course, must be present when this matter is considered. He has long since made his arrangements to take a trip to Haiti on Government business. My understanding is that it will take 30 days to make that trip. My information is that they expect to leave possibly not later than Friday, possibly on Sunday, possibly not later than Wednesday; but in any event they are not to return until the middle or after the middle of December. That means, with the condition of the business of the Senate, that unless we proceed with this matter now with as full discussion as anybody wants, it can not be brought up this year; and I submit to the Senator from Montana that that is not a fair thing to do in a case of this kind.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why is it not a fair thing to do? What is unfair about it? Suppose it did go over until the first Monday in January, for instance, or immediately after the Christmas recess, whatever that recess may be?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator knows better than I that immediately after the Christmas recess, when the first of the year commences, the Senate will be in the very midst of the consideration of the tariff bill, a measure which affects the whole country, and to take out of that time a week or more, or whatever the Senator thinks is needed, would be unwise.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me remind the Senator that we are right now in the very midst of the consideration of the railroad bill, which is displaced for the purpose of taking up this matter.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not want any misunderstanding about this matter so far as I am concerned. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] has correctly stated the disposition of both of us to get the matter disposed of as expeditiously as possible. It was thought at one time that we might get into it earlier; but the revenue measure dragged its weary length along, and since that time we have been trying to make some agreement on this subject. Without going into all of the details, on yesterday I was presented with a unanimous-consent agreement which provided for a final vote at 2 o'clock on the 9th of December. I suggested—

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? It was the Senator's suggestion that the final vote be taken on December 10; was it not?

Mr. POMERENE. That is what I was going to state. I suggested the 10th, and later I suggested a day some time the week following, because I understood that certain Senators would not be here. I was told that I was misinformed as to that, and the Senators from Missouri and Indiana were, as I understood, ready to approve a modification making the hour of voting 4 o'clock; and I then stated that I would not want to consent to that arrangement until I could have a further opportunity to confer with my colleagues, and we would take it up this morning. Later on, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMACK] came into the Chamber, and very much to my surprise he suggested that our work in Haiti would take a longer time than I had anticipated. I may say that my views were based upon former rather indefinite conferences; and then, after leaving the Chamber, it was suggested that we take up the matter and dispose of it at once; that the time of sailing of our ship might be postponed for two or three days, or such a matter.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. May I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that on the 18th we are to vote on the beer bill?

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is right.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Yesterday a large part of the time was taken up by a legal argument by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. There are some of us on this side who want to reply to that argument, and intend to do so if we get a chance; but if this matter comes up now—it has been pending here for two years, as I am informed—there will be no opportunity to reply to the Senator from Minnesota, and there will be no opportunity to put before the country what this beer bill really means to do. I think the country ought to know what it means to do, and therefore there is an additional ground why we should not rush into this matter.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, after conferring with some of my colleagues in regard to this matter, it was my thought that perhaps it would be better to have it go over until some time in December for the final disposition of it. Again, I would like to have the attention of Senators. I was very much disappointed to hear it said that those who were managing the legislative matters on the other side of the Chamber were determined to take this up to-day and "jam" it through. Have I been rightly informed?

Mr. SPENCER. What was the inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. POMERENE. My statement was that I was told, after we had failed to agree last night upon the date, that it was said some of those who manage the procedure on the other side of the Chamber were determined to take it up this morning and, to use the phrase as it was reported to me, "jam" it through. Have I been rightly informed?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I think perhaps the word "jam" was not used. The statement I made was that if we could not agree on a date, we intended to take the matter up this morning, if the Senate agreed, and continue it until we put it through. The word "jam" might mean one thing, and it might mean another. What I meant was that if the Senate agreed, we intended to take it up this morning and to hold a night session and finish the consideration of the proposition.

I will say that I had in mind the thought that my distinguished friend from Ohio, a member of the committee, who has one part of the case in charge, has to go away on Saturday, and of course I always want to accommodate him. I thought we might finish the contest before he departed from the city. Therefore, I was entirely willing to make any sacrifice necessary on my part to stay here to see that he was accommodated, and that the case could be put through by that time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, my distinguished friend from Indiana is always very generous and very gracious so long as he can have his own way about some of these matters. There certainly can not be anything personal between us; but there have been some little footprints during the past few months which have indicated, to my mind at least, that it was determined to force this to a vote without an opportunity to have it fully considered. I regret to say that there has been some such disposition manifested on the part of the majority in the committee in the last few weeks, and I may have some observations to make on that subject before we get through.

Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Arkansas rose first, and I yield to him.

Mr. ROBINSON. With the permission of the Senator from Ohio, I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana whether, in his opinion, it is in order, without motion or resolution, to proceed to the consideration of the Newberry case?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No—

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator agrees with me—

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. In my opinion—

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment. The Senator agrees with me that before the Senate can be held to a consideration of the case the case must be brought before it by some proper motion, and the mere fact that a question of privilege is involved or underlies the committee recommendation does not entitle any Senator, at any time, to bring it before the Senate for action by merely asking that it be laid before the Senate.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Now, will the Senator permit me fully to answer his question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I think it can be brought up by resolution offered the previous day, and lying over one day under the rule; or by a motion made at the time it is to be taken up; or by unanimous consent. It was my understanding, my attention having been diverted a portion of the time during the proceeding, that unanimous consent had been granted, that the matter is now before the Senate by unanimous consent, and that, pursuant to the unanimous consent, the Clerk had begun to read the report at the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment, with the permission of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, if the Senator from Indiana were correct in his assumption of the parliamentary status there could be no difference between him and me as to the effect of the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certainly not.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the difficulty in his position is that he is entirely wrong in his assumption that unanimous consent was either asked or given. The Senator from Missouri has himself expressly stated that he made no request for unanimous consent, and the Chair had no opportunity of submitting a request for unanimous consent to the Senate, and the Senate has had no opportunity of granting unanimous consent. It is perfectly apparent, from the statement made by the Senator from Montana, and from the statement, in part, by the Senator from Ohio, that unanimous consent would not be granted.

It is apparent that the Senate is proceeding out of order to the consideration of this report. The Senator from Indiana agrees with me that it is necessary, under the parliamentary rules, that a motion be made or a resolution be presented in order that the Senate may have the opportunity of determining whether a question of privilege is now presented and whether it will determine the issue raised, or at some future time. It is perfectly competent for the Senate to postpone it a week longer, as it has postponed it for a year or two. I thank the Senator from Ohio for yielding.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. NEW. I think the RECORD will disclose that, whether unanimous consent was asked or not, the proposition to lay the Newberry-Ford case before the Senate was made, that no objection was offered, at least, and that the report was handed down by the Presiding Officer, and was and is before the Senate without objection having been offered. It was taken up, was under consideration, and the reading of the report was ordered and entered upon before anyone interposed the slightest objection to the consideration of the case, and the situation therefore is that it must be displaced by some other motion, if displaced at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. A demand for the regular order made by any Senator would, according to the rules under which this body is supposed to proceed, terminate the discussion at this time. I could not think of making such a demand just now because of the fact that the Senator from Ohio has secured the floor, and has had the courtesy to yield to me; but I am perfectly certain that a Senator is not estopped from demanding the regular order, or from making an objection to the consideration of the report, merely because the Senator from Missouri made a suggestion that something be laid before the Senate. It was not a request for unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of any motion or resolution or question of privilege, and it is perfectly apparent that many Senators are not willing to proceed to the consideration of the report, and that if the question had been stated and the Senate given an opportunity to pass upon the matter an objection would have been made to considering it at this time.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Georgia, as he rose first.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I was here when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] brought this matter up, and while my memory is not infallible, I am quite sure that the facts are substantially as follows: He rose and stated that the question of the right of a Senator to a seat in this body is one of high privilege, and that therefore he would bring it before the Senate; and before anyone had a right to say or do anything he had it before the Senate. There was no consent asked at all. The Senator from Indiana is mistaken. I was here at the roll call and remained, except for the few minutes when I went out to luncheon. I was here when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] rose and made the statement that he had a right to bring the matter here and give it the right of way as a matter of high privilege, and he went ahead and did it without any consent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Ohio will not think it offensive, I would like to make the point of order that there is no business before the Senate. I will not do it if the Senator objects to it. I think the regular order ought to be proceeded with. There is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I beg to say to the Senator from Tennessee that I have made the point of order, and when this discussion is concluded I desire to supplement the point of order I have already suggested with another point.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. There is nothing now before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was in the chair when the question came up. The Senator from Missouri did not ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the report. He asked that the report be laid before the Senate as a matter of right. The Chair then said it was in very grave doubt with regard to the matter, but that, for the purpose of getting it before the Senate, it would rule that it presented a subject of privilege so high that the Senator from Missouri had a right to bring it before the Senate for its consideration. That was the ruling of the Chair. I make this explanation because I do not want anyone to misunderstand what has actually been done.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me to ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Does the Senator from Iowa consider that the statement made by the Senator from Missouri was equivalent to his asking unanimous consent?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Chair did not so understand it. It will be remembered that the Chair suggested to the Senator from Missouri that he might present a motion or a resolution; but he did not do it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, if the Chair had understood that the Senator from Missouri was making a request for unanimous consent, the Chair would have submitted it to the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. It would have been submitted to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. But there was no such request.

Mr. CUMMINS. There was no such request made. If there is error in regard to the matter, it was the error of the then occupant of the chair in holding that this subject is one which the Senator from Missouri had a right to bring before the Senate for its consideration. If that ruling was incorrect, it can easily be corrected by an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Iowa is entirely right. I did not ask for unanimous consent. I did not intend to ask for unanimous consent. I intended to present to the Senate, as a matter of right, the bringing up of this question because of its high privilege. I still think it is a matter of right.

I believe it would be useful as a precedent for the future, if we had a ruling upon the question at this time as to whether, when the question of the right of a Senator to a seat in this body is at stake, that question can not, as a matter of privilege, be brought up before the Senate at any time, and be kept before the Senate until the Senate, in the exercise of its rights, supplants it, or replaces it by some other business.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. Just one moment, Mr. President. I had intended to make some further observations with regard to the matter at this particular time, but in view of the point of order which has been raised I yield the floor, if I may, to the Senator from Arkansas at the present moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there is a distinction running all the way through parliamentary law between privileged questions and questions of privilege. That distinction, however, is not important in the case at the bar of the Senate at this time. There is no doubt in my mind that the Newberry case involves a question of privilege, and that any Senator who desires to do so can bring it up before the Senate at any time he may be able to obtain recognition, but he can not do so by a mere suggestion. He must do so by a parliamentary procedure, in the nature of a motion, or by the offering of a resolution.

Senators may look back through parliamentary history to the beginning, and they will not find a precedent to the contrary. If a Senator without motion or resolution could compel the Senate to consider a question of privilege at any time by merely suggesting that such a question existed and by asking the Chair to lay it before the Senate, the Senate would be unable to control its procedure. A question of privilege does not mean that the matter may be brought before the Senate without motion or resolution. It relates to precedence of consideration when properly brought before the Senate.

If a bill, resolution, or motion is pending and a question of privilege is presented, that question of privilege must be decided before the pending question is decided. The effect of a question of privilege is to give it precedence over other questions. Questions of privilege must be raised by some parliamentary procedure. They can not automatically arise. A question of privilege never has been held to estop the Senate from determining its procedure. Such a ruling would be absolutely subversive of the right and power of the Senate to deliberate. Is there a Senator here who believes that last week I could have risen and said, "I suggest that the Newberry case be laid before the Senate," and that upon that mere suggestion the Senate would have been compelled to suspend the business then before it and proceed to discuss and vote upon the Newberry case?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I take pleasure in yielding to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under the view taken by the Senator from Arkansas of course there could be no privilege of any kind in it. The Senator from Missouri had a perfect right to move to take up this case, as he would have a right to move to take up any bill or other matter, and if the Senate voted in the affirmative that question would be before the Senate. In the view taken by the Senator from Arkansas there is no difference whatever between a contest over the seat of a Senator or his right to a seat in this body and any other matter which may be pending before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let me suggest further that his conclusion that the Senate loses all control over its own action under the ruling which the Chair made is not, I think, sound, because it is within the right of any Senator to rise at any time and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of some other subject, and if that motion prevails the privilege is lost and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of whatever bill or matter may be brought before it by the motion.

Mr. ROBINSON. O Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa in this instance is in my humble opinion entirely wrong. There are many motions that may be made in the Senate, as Senators well know, when a bill, resolution, or other matter is pending, and the effect of privilege is to give a particular motion precedence over all other motions. It seems to me to be elementary, but I am going to read from Hinds' Parliamentary Precedents:

Definition and precedence of questions of privilege.

Questions of privilege have precedence of all motions except the motion to adjourn.

Then there is a discussion of the history of questions of privilege and of the rule of the House of Representatives:

A question of privilege supersedes consideration of the original question and must first be disposed of.

That is the definition of a question of privilege given by Jefferson's Manual, and it never has had any other definition or significance.

Now, let us take the position of the Senator from Iowa and assume that he is correct. The Senator from Missouri said, "I ask that the Newberry report, or the report in the Newberry case, or the Newberry case be laid before the Senate." Supposing that the Chair had the power, without regard to the wishes of the Senate, to comply with that request and without a motion or resolution presented to the Senate, what would be the question to be voted on by the Senate? What would be the question of privilege to be disposed of by the Senate?

Will the Senator from Iowa answer that question? Suppose he had authority, as the Presiding Officer of this body, to disregard whatever may have been the wishes of the Senate to comply with the request of the Senator from Missouri, what would be the question of privilege upon which the Senate would be called upon to vote?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me for the interruption, I said a moment ago that I intended to supplement my point of order with another point, and it is so pertinent to the feature of the case which the Senator is now discussing that with his permission I will submit it at this time.

I make the further point of order that there is no motion or resolution before the Senate for consideration. I call attention to a number of precedents upon questions of privilege. I read from Gilfry, first volume, page 478, as follows:

FEBRUARY 25, 1858.

The question was raised whether the presentation of credentials and papers involving the right of a State to representation in the Senate was a privileged subject, but before a decision thereon the matter involved was referred to a committee.

OCTOBER 17, 1877.

Mr. Thurman presented the credentials of Henry M. Spofford, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana for the term of six years, commencing March 4, 1877. The credentials were read. Mr. Thurman then submitted the following resolution and asked for its present consideration:

"Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford, whose credentials as a Senator from the State of Louisiana have been this day read, be now sworn and admitted as such Senator."

That became the question before the Senate.

Again, if the Senator will pardon me, I read from page 482 of the same volume:

JANUARY 9, 1911.

Mr. OWEN submitted the following resolution for consideration: "Resolved, That the so-called election of William Lorimer on May 26, 1909, by the Legislature of the State of Illinois was illegal and void and that he is not entitled to a seat in the United States Senate."

Mr. Gallinger raised a question of order, viz, that under the rule the resolution should go over one day, and was therefore not in order.

The Vice President [Mr. Sherman] overruled the point of order, and decided that a resolution of this character, presenting a question of the highest privilege, does not have to stand over for a day.

From the decision of the Chair Mr. Beveridge appealed to the Senate.

The Vice President [Mr. Sherman] stated the question to be, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? It was determined in the negative.

So the resolution went over for one day.

So it can not even be considered that the question before us is brought under this precedent. But what is the resolution? There is none. There is none in the report. I read from the majority report as follows:

Your committee recommends that the action of the Senate be as follows:

- (1) That the contest of Henry Ford against Truman H. Newberry be, and it is hereby, dismissed.
- (2) That Truman H. Newberry is hereby declared—

And so forth.

There is no resolution at all. They simply recommend that the Senate take such action upon any resolution that may be offered. So the Senator from Arkansas is quite right in saying that there is absolutely nothing here upon which the Senate can act; no resolution or motion whatever.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Montana for the injection into my remarks of those suggestions. During the remarks of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] I announced my purpose to make that point of order. I am so certain that it is right, that there is no precedent to the contrary, that I now challenge the oldest Senator in this body to rise and cite a precedent, either actual or recorded.

It is not necessary, Senators, to the determination of this case to disregard your rules. This question can be brought before the Senate by a motion or resolution, and there is no justification for any other procedure. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who is a great parliamentarian, agreed with me exactly on that proposition. He sought to avert the force of the suggestion by creating a fictitious unanimous-consent agreement or order on the part of the Senate. He thought he heard the Senator from Missouri request unanimous consent, but the Chair promptly informed him that no such thing was asked.

Mr. POMERENE. And the Senator from Missouri admitted it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; the Senator from Missouri frankly stated that no such consent was asked, and that he deliberately and intentionally refrained from asking unanimous consent.

Do Senators know what the establishment of this sort of precedent means? It means that so long as there may be a question of privilege tied up in the files of a committee of the Senate, any Member of the Senate may rise on the floor of the Senate, no matter what is being considered, and suggest that this question of privilege be laid before the Senate, denying to the body the right to consent to its consideration and denying to the body the right to vote on the question of its consideration. Who ever heard of such a precedent anywhere, any time?

I hope that the consideration of this case, involving as it does in a sense the integrity of the United States Senate, its justice and its impartiality, will be marked from the beginning and throughout by a spirit of fairness and liberality.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON. In just a moment. It is not necessary, in order to consider this case, to violate all the precedents of the Senate. We can consider it in an orderly way. It is not necessary to put the Senate in the future at the mercy of any Senator who may want to defeat the consideration of important measures and who may be willing to ask that questions of privilege be laid before the Senate without formal motion accompanying it.

What is the question of privilege now? Supposing that the report is before the Senate, we have nothing but a recommendation; there is no resolution, no motion on which the Senate can vote.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not think there is any intention on the part of any Senator to take advantage of the Senate. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] holds that the report of the committee embodies a resolution. I agree with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that the matter can only be taken up in one of two ways: First, by unanimous consent or, second, upon a motion. If a resolution is presented, under the action of the Senate on two different occasions, once by a Democratic Vice President and once by a Republican Vice President, it has to go over for a day. It was decided in the case of John Martin, of Kansas, a Democrat. Upon an appeal from a decision of the Chair that it was not a question of privilege and that the resolution should go over for a day, a motion was made to lay the appeal on the table, and it was carried by a vote of 40 to 8. The second occasion was in connection with the Lorimer case where the Senate overruled Vice President Sherman on a ruling that the question "was one of the highest privilege and did not have to stand over for a day." Clearly this case can only be brought up in one of two ways—by unanimous consent or by a motion to consider a resolution, and if objection is made, such a resolution would have to go over for a day.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator from Kansas; and in view of his statement and the statement made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], I renew the point of order made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order made by the Senator from Montana, that there is no question before the Senate at this time. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken.

The Senator from Missouri has asked the Chair to lay before the Senate the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Chair understands that it was ruled by a former occupant of the chair that he had a right to lay that report before the Senate; but that does not necessarily bring up any question for the Senate to decide, there not being any resolution or motion attached to the report.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the Ford-Newberry election contest, being report numbered 277.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I object to the immediate consideration of the motion, and ask that, under the rule, it may go over for one day. That was the ruling in the precedent to which I invited the attention of the Chair a few moments ago.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will the Senator from Montana kindly state his point of order or request? I did not hear it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I object to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Indiana at this time, and ask that, under the rule, it go over for one day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has made a motion; he has not submitted a resolution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The only difference between the two, so far as that is concerned, is that the one is a verbal and the other is a written proposal for the consideration of a particular subject. That is different from the case of a motion to take up a bill which is on the calendar or has been pending before the Senate. The Chair has just ruled that there is nothing before the Senate. The motion of the Senator from Indiana is the first effort to bring the subject before the Senate. Of course, if a bill is introduced, is referred to a committee, and the committee reports the bill and it is on the calendar, we have something then upon which we can act, and a motion to take up the bill is appropriate. That is not a resolution which goes over for a day. The rule refers to matters brought for the first time before the Senate. The motion of the Senator from Indiana is in the nature of a resolution. That was the ruling made in the precedent to which I invited the attention of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand that the Senator from Indiana has offered a resolution, but that he has made a motion to proceed to the consideration of the matter named by him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will again refer the Vice President to the ruling which I previously cited. However, Mr. President, I ask that the motion which was made by the Senator from Indiana may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the so-called Newberry election case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I make the point of order—the same point of order which was made heretofore—that there is no resolution before the Senate upon which we can now act. Let us suppose that we proceed to the consideration of this matter, and finally, after debate is closed, we proceed to a vote. On what shall we vote? What is the question on which we shall vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to rule that the motion at this time is not in order.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Very well. I was going to withdraw the motion anyway.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that if the pending matter is not of such high privilege as entitles it to be brought up without a motion—and the Chair has just ruled that it is not such a matter—a motion is necessary to bring it up, and of course the motion must be directed to some existing resolution. The majority report closes with recommendations which, however, in my judgment, can not be called a resolution. Therefore I now offer the resolution which I send to the Secretary's desk, and I move its immediate consideration. I admit that if objection is made to the resolution, under the rule, it must lie over for a day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 172), as follows:

Resolved, (1) That the contest of Henry Ford against Truman H. Newberry be, and it is hereby, dismissed.

(2) That Truman H. Newberry is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator from the State of Michigan for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1919.

(3) That his qualification for a seat in the Senate of the United States, to which he has been elected, has been conclusively established, and the charges made against him in this proceeding, both as to his election and qualification, are not sustained.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that the resolution go over for a day under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule, the resolution will go over one day.

Mr. KENYON obtained the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Iowa has been recognized. Does he yield to the senior Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KENYON. I merely wish to ask the Senator from Missouri if any arrangement has been made with reference to a time for a vote; that is, whether there has been any tentative agreement to that effect? I understood that there was some such suggestion pending.

Mr. SPENCER. There was an effort, I will say to the Senator from Iowa, to fix a time when a vote should be taken, but it has been unavailing. I hope, if the Senate decides to take the matter up to-morrow, that it may be continued until it is finally disposed of.

Mr. KENYON. Is it the intention of the Senator from Missouri to keep the matter before the Senate until it is voted on?

Mr. SPENCER. Of course, that will be entirely a matter for the Senate to determine, but when I ask that the subject may be brought up to-morrow, if the Senate agrees to its consideration, I hope that the Senate will continue to consider the matter until it is ready finally to dispose of it.

Mr. KENYON. In the Senator's judgment, then, will it supplant the unfinished business?

Mr. SPENCER. It can not supplant the unfinished business under the ruling of the Chair unless the Senate votes to displace the unfinished business and to continue the consideration of this case.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to say that I find myself to a large extent in the condition of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I have read nearly all the record in this case, and I wish to discuss it. I am not ready to discuss it in the way I should care to discuss it; and I do not believe anything is going to be gained by trying to press or jam—I believe that expression was used here this morning—the matter through. I had understood the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] was to leave the latter part of this week on a trip to Haiti to shed the light of his countenance upon the benighted citizens of that island, and that there was general acquiescence in his desire to go, not that we might be rid of him, of course, but that the islanders might have the benefit of his presence. Is the Senator from Ohio in accord with the program of finishing this matter within the next few days?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as a general proposition I am in accord with the desire to have this matter disposed of as expeditiously as may be consistent with its importance. I may say that that was my thought when I first presented the resolution for the investigation of the unfortunate situation growing out of the Michigan election, and that has been my position ever since. I was blocked at every turn for a year and a half or for, perhaps, longer; but we went along, and finally hearings were begun. They were rushed through, and were closed when I was not present. The then Senator from Delaware, Mr. Wolcott, a member of the committee, asked that the matter be deferred until I could get back, but ruthlessly his request was turned down. I have never heard of any procedure of that kind in the United States Senate or any of its committees heretofore, but that is what was done. I propose, however, to discuss that later on, not now.

Afterwards when the report of the committee and the views of the minority were prepared, the Senator from Missouri and myself were in accord in the desire that this matter should be disposed of, and I supposed that it could be done. Yesterday, however, during the afternoon as well as to-day it has developed that there are many Senators on this side of the Chamber who have not had the opportunity to read the record or to read the report, and, if I am correctly informed, on the very day that a favorable report was ordered there was a poll of the Republican side of the Chamber, and it was announced informally that they had the votes to seat the junior Senator from Michigan, and so forth. That poll was taken before a Senator had an opportunity to read the report. My sense of the dignity of the United States Senate rebels against that method of treating a very serious problem.

Mr. KENYON. If that is so, if it is all settled now, what is the real use of discussing the case? I simply rise to say that, so far as I am concerned, I am not in the habit of delaying the business of the Senate, but the case is going to have very considerable discussion, and I do not think the gentlemen who desire to force it through hurriedly will succeed in doing so.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to say further that I was appointed on the committee to visit Haiti. I know the situation there which is being investigated involves some very important questions. I did not solicit the appointment, but Senators came and asked me if I would serve, and I said that I would. I have gone into the question pending before the committee which has to do with affairs in Haiti and which is presided over by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] to an extent to justify my saying that the situation there is a very serious one, and that justice to ourselves as well as justice to the islanders requires a thorough investigation and a fair and impartial report.

I had hoped that matters might be so arranged that we could go on and do that work as was contemplated, thinking that we would recess. On yesterday I thought there was a tentative agreement whereby a vote would be had probably on December 10. True, it was an open question; but later on I was informed that it would take more time to make the investigations at Haiti than I was led to believe that it would take. Under those circumstances, I think that Senators who permitted themselves to be polled on this subject owe it to themselves and their constituents to take the time to read this record and to read these reports.

Mr. President, that is the situation. I trust that sober judgment will assert itself and that an opportunity may be given which will enable Senators to form a fair and impartial judgment in this matter.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a very brief statement.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], as I understood him, said that it was his understanding that a poll had been taken—at least on this side of the Senate—on this proposition. Did I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes. I was so informed.

Mr. NEW. I wish to say that I have been here continuously, almost without any absence at all, and I never have heard of any such poll. I never have been polled on the subject. I know that other Senators sitting about me here say that they never have been polled and never have heard that a poll was undertaken. I therefore think that that part of the statement of the Senator from Ohio was a mistake.

Mr. POMERENE. If I have been mistaken, I am very sorry about it; but I will say, for the Senator's benefit, that that was a matter of common report here in the Chamber, as well as out of it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, since the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has spoken of the purpose of the committee to investigate the occupation of Haiti and Santo Domingo to leave shortly for the two Republics, let me say that it will be impossible to complete the journey in less than some four weeks. All the members of the committee attach the greatest importance to the coming of the Senator from Ohio with the rest of the committee. The problem which confronts the United States in Haiti and in Santo Domingo, arising out of an anomalous situation in which we find vested in the United States responsibility without authority, is so great that it is important that all the members of the committee should be present in Haiti and Santo Domingo during the investigation there; and it is especially important that the Senator from Ohio should be present, because of the study which he has given to the subject and because of his mastery of the subject.

I say this only in connection with the private conversations and the discussions on the floor looking to an understanding as to a vote upon the election contest before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8331, the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the committee amendments first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The consent requested by the Senator from Iowa has already been granted. The Secretary will read the bill for action on the committee amendments.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion? I know that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] desires to address the Senate upon the bill. I ask at least that one of the pages be sent for him.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Robinson
Ball	Gooding	McKinley	Sheppard
Broussard	Hale	McNary	Shields
Bursum	Harris	Myers	Smith
Calder	Heflin	Nelson	Smoot
Cameron	Hitchcock	New	Spencer
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Sutherland
Caraway	Kendrick	Norris	Townsend
Cummins	Kenyon	Oddie	Trammell
Curtis	Keyes	Overman	Wadsworth
Dial	King	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	Ladd	Phelps	Warren
Fernald	La Follette	Polindexter	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	Lodge	Pomerene	Williams
France	McCormick	Ransdell	Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will read the bill for action on the committee amendments.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "two" and insert "four," so as to read:

That section 207 of the transportation act, 1920, is amended by adding at the end thereof four new subdivisions to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 8, to insert:

(i) The President is hereby authorized to sell any bonds, notes, or other securities acquired by him either before or after this subdivision takes effect, under authority of this act, the Federal control act, or the act entitled "An act to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation, and for other purposes," approved November 19, 1919; and the proceeds of all bonds, notes, or other securities sold by the President, shall be a fund to be used by the President for the purposes described in section 202 hereof. Any balance not so required shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. Any such sale or sales must be made at a price which will save the United States from loss in the transaction and without recourse.

Mr. CUMMINS. I explained as fully as I could on yesterday the purpose of this amendment. I have no desire to repeat what I have already said.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to ask the Senator whether this subdivision (i) authorizes the President to make these sales to the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. CUMMINS. It certainly does.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I see no provision to that effect here, but I presume it is provided for elsewhere in the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I explained yesterday, this amendment is for the purpose of separating the power of the President to sell and the power of the War Finance Corporation to buy. In the bill as it passed the House they are coupled together in the same subdivision, and the difference between the bill as it passed the House and this amendment is that by the amendment the President is given the authority to sell to anybody, to any organization, to any syndicate which may desire to buy these securities, whereas by the bill as it passed the House the President had no authority to sell to anyone except the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I notice the provision that "Any such sale or sales must be made at a price which will save the United States from loss in the transaction and without recourse." Of what use is a provision "to save the United States from loss" when the President is permitted to make sales to a corporation whose stock is owned wholly by the United States?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is exactly the same provision in the bill as it passed the House, and it is, of course, retained in our report with regard to the War Finance Corporation. The United States, no matter what agency acts for it, must get par for these securities; that is, it must get the price at which they were taken from the railroads, and they must be disposed of without recourse.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator, suppose the President sells $100,000 of these securities to the War Finance Corporation at par and accrued interest, and sells them without recourse, and then the War Finance Corporation, whose stock is owned wholly by the United States, incurs a loss of $25,000—

Mr. CUMMINS. It can not incur a loss under this provision. That is, the bill as it passed the House provides that if the War Finance Corporation sells—

The aggregate purchases thus made shall not exceed $500,000,000. Any such securities so purchased shall be purchased at the prices, and subject to the discounts, if any, at which acquired by the President.

(b) Whenever, in the opinion of the board of directors of the corporation, market conditions justify, any such bonds, notes, or other securities, acquired by the corporation under this section, may from time to time be sold, marketed, or disposed of by the corporation at a price to produce net not less than the original cost thereof to the corporation. And all such securities shall be sold without recourse.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This provision would protect the United States if the sale is made to an independent purchaser, but I can not see how the United States has any protection whatever in selling to a corporation whose stock is owned by the United States Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. The United States has the securities now, or will have them as we proceed. The United States will have them, whether they are in the hands of the President or in the hands of the War Finance Corporation. They are both agencies of the United States. The Senator agrees with that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Whenever they pass from the United States into the hands of any third person or independent organization, then the United States, whether they are sold by the War Finance Corporation or by the President, must receive par, and without recourse. There can not be any loss to the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There can very easily be a loss by the War Finance Corporation, and if the War Finance Corporation has a loss it is a loss of the United States Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the securities can never be disposed of, there will be a loss to the United States, of course.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, to the extent that these securities are sold to the War Finance Corporation, this provision for the protection of the United States is in vain.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not see it in that way. I can not understand it that way. The United States has these securities. It matters not whether they are in the hands of the War Finance Corporation or in the hands of the President, they are owned by the United States. If they are not worth anything, the United States loses. If they are worth something, and can be sold at par—and they can not be sold at all unless they are sold at par—then the United States loses nothing and can lose nothing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My point is that if the sales are made to independent purchasers, and the securities are sold at par and interest, without recourse, then there is no chance for the United States to lose any money; but if, instead of being sold to independent purchasers they are sold, as provided in the amendment, to the War Finance Corporation, the provision that the War Finance Corporation loses money, the United States, from loss, and without recourse, is utterly in vain, because if the War Finance Corporation loses money, the United States, which owns the War Finance Corporation, loses the money.

Mr. CUMMINS. But can not the Senator from Nebraska see that when they are sold to the War Finance Corporation they are simply moved from one department of the Government to another, so that they are not sold at all?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So the Senator admits that that nullifies this provision.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all; it does not nullify anything. We have the securities. If they can be passed into the hands of the public, whether through the War Finance Corporation or through some other organization at par, we will lose nothing, and they can never leave the possession of the Government under terms that would create any loss. If they can not get par for them, they remain permanently in the hands of the Government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator admits, then, that in case of any sale to the War Finance Corporation it is merely a transfer to another agency of the Government, and is not really a sale?

Mr. CUMMINS. Does not the Senator from Nebraska admit that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I contend that that is not a sale.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not, in the proper sense of the word, but it is precisely what we have empowered the War Finance Corporation to do in many other financial transactions. It is simply an agency of the Government, as the Secretary of the Treasury is, as the President is, or any other officer of the Government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The provision for a sale to the War Finance Corporation is nothing but a device, I will not say subterfuge, but a device, to avoid making an appropriation.

Mr. CUMMINS. That has been so from the beginning. The Senator helped to create the War Finance Corporation, and therefore I assume that he believes it could perform and has performed some valuable functions during the war and since the war. I think he is entirely right about it. These are all functions of the Government. I am hoping very much that the President will not be compelled to employ the War Finance Corporation. He sold $100,000,000 of equipment trust certificates recently without using the War Finance Corporation in the transaction.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I sincerely hope he will not have to use it, because I think that is merely using a device to avoid what really ought to be done. Those securities ought to be sold to independent purchasers.

Mr. CUMMINS. If there is any loss at all, it will be because the securities are not of such a character that either the War Finance Corporation or the President can put them on the market without loss, and in that event they will not be sold at all under the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have very serious doubt as to whether the War Finance Corporation should be used for this purpose. I think it would be much better to make an effort to sell these securities to independent purchasers and not compel the United States to be still holding the bag, to use a vulgar expression.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope so, too; but it will no more hold the bag in that event than it is holding it now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not so sure about that. It might be easier to make the sale now, if an effort were made in that direction, than two years from now.

Mr. CUMMINS. You may be sure the President will make every effort that he can to dispose of these securities. It is highly necessary that he shall. He has not the money with which to pay the railroads what is due them, and we will either have to make an appropriation to pay the sums due the railroads or we must dispose of these securities.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The doubt I have in my mind is whether it is wise for Congress to resort to this device of high finance to avoid doing what the law originally intended that we should do—make appropriations to buy these securities. That was what the law contemplated.

Mr. CUMMINS. What has the Senator from Nebraska in mind as to the ultimate disposition of the securities? The United States will not want to hold them indefinitely.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I believe the United States should sell them at the earliest possible moment, wherever they can find an independent buyer; but I think in turning them over to the War Finance Corporation, which is another agency of the Government, and delaying the sale of them, we are resorting to high finance.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that that question does not arise upon the amendment now pending? That question will arise upon a later part of the bill, where we give the War Finance Corporation the authority to buy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I realize that the Senator is correct, but I wanted the explanation as to whether this provision did authorize a sale on the part of the Government to the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. CUMMINS. I answered the Senator affirmatively, because I think it would give the President the power to sell to anybody, but the War Finance Corporation, under the law as it is now, has no power to buy, and therefore the question suggested by the Senator from Nebraska will arise upon the consideration of the House text, not upon the amendment which the committee has offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 24, to strike out "(i)" and insert in lieu thereof "(j)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 6, to strike out the quotation marks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 7, to strike out the quotation marks and to insert:

(k) In making settlements with the carriers under this act, no payment or allowance shall be made to any carrier on account of the so-called "inefficiency of labor during the period of Federal control"; and no final settlement between the United States and any carrier shall be made which does not forever bar such carrier from setting up any further claim, right, or demand of any kind or character against the United States growing out of or connected with the possession, use, or operation of such carrier's property by the United States during Federal control, except a claim specified in clauses (1), (2), or (3) of subdivision (b) of section 202 hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 23, to strike out the quotation marks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 2, to strike out the quotation marks and to insert:

This subdivision shall not apply to any claim in respect of any obligation of the Director General of Railroads: (1) Assumed in paragraph (i) or (j) of section 4 of the standard contract between the United States and the carriers, to save the carriers harmless as to claims, if any, of third persons, arising out of or incident to Federal control, or (2) in respect of the payment of taxes under section 6 of such contract, or (3) arising out of the accounts created pursuant to general order No. 68 of the Director General of Railroads.

Mr. CUMMINS. I explained this amendment quite fully yesterday. I should be glad to further explain it if any Senator desires.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was not here when the Senator explained it yesterday. I would like to have a brief explanation.

Mr. CUMMINS. The provision to which this is an addition recites:

(b) Every claim of a carrier against the United States arising out of or incident to Federal control shall, if not filed within one year after this subdivision takes effect, be thereafter barred, and the carrier shall be considered as having waived the claim.

Then the proposed amendment proceeds:

This subdivision shall not apply to any claim in respect of any obligation of the Director General of Railroads: (1) Assumed in paragraph (i) or (j) of section 4 of the standard contract between the United States and the carriers, to save the carriers harmless as to claims, if any, of third persons, arising out of or incident to Federal control, or (2) in respect of the payment of taxes under section 6 of such contract, or (3) arising out of the accounts created pursuant to general order No. 68 of the Director General of Railroads.

That, as I remarked yesterday, is in conformity with the form of final settlement which has been used by the director general from the beginning. The reason why it is excepted from the final settlement is that claims which arise in favor of third persons can not be ascertained or some of them may not be ascertained within a year, and it is not to be expected that the carriers will release a claim which they could not possibly prefer within the time fixed by the statute.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the nature of the claims that are referred to in paragraphs (i) and (j)?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will read it. It is quite long, but I will read it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Perhaps the Senator can state the general nature of the provisions.

Mr. CUMMINS. It ought to be understood.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. May I ask a question just there, if the Senator please. Do these claims mean adjudicated claims?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; these are claims which arose in favor of third persons against the director general and which ultimately may become liens upon the railroads after they are turned back.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How are they ascertained? Are they ascertained in court? Are they such claims as the railroads might concede without any trial in court?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think, of course, they are susceptible of settlement between the director general and the persons in whose favor they arise. The director general can settle a claim precisely as anyone else can settle it. But I shall read the paragraphs. They are quoted in full in the report made on the bill. Paragraphs (i) and (j) of the standard contract, to which reference is made in the amendment, read in this way:

The director general shall pay, or save the companies—

That is, the railroad companies—harmless from, all expenses incident to or growing out of the possession, operation, and use of the property taken over during Federal control, except the expenses which under this agreement are to be borne by the companies. He shall also pay or save the companies harmless from all rents called in the monthly reports to the commission—equipment rents or joint-facility rents, and all judgments or decrees that may be recovered or issued against, and all fines and penalties that may be imposed upon, the companies by reason of any cause of action arising out of Federal control, or of anything done or omitted in the possession, operation, use, or control of the companies' property during Federal control, except judgments or decrees founded on obligations of the companies to the director general or the United States.

That is, the Interstate Commerce Commission—

I have read paragraph (i). It is a claim which may arise under that paragraph which can not be included in a final settlement made within one year or because many of them may not arise and be made known to the carriers within that year. I think when the fact is recalled that it has been shown that this is the form of final settlement which has been used from the beginning by the director general, it ought to give assurance that the rights of the United States are fully guarded in the arrangement.

Paragraph (j) reads as follows:

(j) Except as otherwise provided in this agreement the director general shall save the companies harmless from any and all liability, loss, or expense resulting from or incident to any claim made against the companies growing out of anything done or omitted during Federal control in connection with, or incident to, operation or existing contracts relating to operation; and shall do and perform, so far as is requisite under Federal control for the protection of the companies, all and singular the things, of which he may have notice, necessary and appropriate to prevent, because of Federal control or of anything done or omitted thereunder, the forfeiture or loss by the companies of any of their property rights, ordinance rights, or franchises, or of their trackage, lease, terminal, or other contracts involving a facility of operation; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to require the director general to make any capital expenditure necessary to preserve a franchise or ordinance right not heretofore availed of by the companies. The director general shall also save the companies harmless from any and all claims for breach of covenant heretofore entered into by the companies or by any predecessor in title or interest in any mortgage or other instrument in respect to insurance against losses by fire.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has just been reading as I understand paragraph (j).

Mr. CUMMINS. It is a part of paragraph (j) of the standard contract.

Mr. NORRIS. That is one of the exceptions, as I understand it. I mean it is an enumeration of some classes of claims that are not made final, but they stand out as an exception against final settlement. Is that right?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is right. In this particular amendment they are excepted from the one-year limitation.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose that would include all litigation or anything which arose during the operation of the railroads by the Government—

Mr. CUMMINS. In favor of third persons.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; in favor of third persons; that was not terminated at the time the railroads were turned back.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think so.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand it, there might be a very large number of claims, and of very great importance and volume, which would be included under the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. There might be.

Mr. NORRIS. And they never could be terminated until the statute of limitations had run as to all cases that were then pending.

Mr. CUMMINS. For instance, as an illustration, there occurred in Minnesota a very disastrous fire a year or two ago while the railroads were still in the hands of the Government. Immense claims have been made on behalf of third persons for losses incurred in that fire, and the question whether the railroad companies are liable to third persons is a question which is as yet undetermined, at least in part, if it is not wholly undetermined. It goes without saying that a statute of limitations of one year, requiring the railroad companies to present all their claims, would be impossible.

Mr. NORRIS. I can see that it would be, because the claims made by third persons against the railroad companies might not be even commenced within that time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with the exception. It seems to me these things would necessarily have to be excepted, because, of course, the Government must be responsible for the property while they were operating the railroads, but I thought it would be interesting, although it may not be directly relevant, if the Senator were able to give an idea of about the number and volume of those claims extending over the entire United States. The probabilities are that the Government, no matter what else may happen, will be litigating those claims for half a century yet.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not so long as that. It is litigating them now vigorously and there are claims in litigation all over the United States. However, I am not able, simply because I have not inquired, to answer the Senator from Nebraska with respect to the aggregate amount involved in those claims. I know that in the Minnesota fire alone there are claims of $40,000 or $50,000 at least involved.

Mr. NELSON. There is over $1,000,000 involved.

Mr. CUMMINS. I mean $40,000 or $50,000 against the railroads. Of course, the entire losses in the fire were much greater.

Mr. NELSON. There are many claims against the Federal administration for losses that occurred while they were operating the railroads.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator remember the aggregate of those claims arising out of the Minnesota fire?

Mr. NELSON. No; I do not; but it runs up into millions of dollars, because there were nearly a thousand lives lost and a great territory burned over. Last year, by agreement, they submitted the question to five judges of the districts in St. Louis County to hold a hearing and pass upon the question as to whether the Railroad Administration was liable. The judges decided, one dissenting, that the Railroad Administration was liable, that the fire had spread from the locomotives, but they did not pass upon the amount of the claims. I understand that the Railroad Administration is now engaged in the work of liquidating and settling the particular group of claims in which the judges held that, as a matter of fact, the railroads were liable. However, that includes only a small portion of the aggregate of claims, which, I imagine, will run up into millions of dollars before they get through. Those are claims against the Railroad Administration of the Government while they were running the railroads.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I had in mind that particular group of claims; but I had not been informed that the losses brought about by fire in other localities had been attributed to the railroads.

Mr. NELSON. No; in the other localities there are suits pending, but they have not as yet been tried.

Mr. CUMMINS. At any rate, it is quite likely to involve a large sum of money.

Mr. NELSON. It will be several million dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. One of the points I should like to bring out and have the Senator from Iowa explain, for, as he said the other day, he has lived with this question for a long time, is this: People generally, I think, believe, and I think some Members of Congress have an idea, that the Railroad Administration can soon wind up its business and be closed. If I understand aright the paragraph of the bill which the Senator has just read, it will make it necessary for the Railroad Administration to be kept alive and to maintain an immense amount of machinery by way of attorneys, agents, investigators, inspectors, and so forth, in order to take care of the thousands of cases that must necessarily arise. So they will have to retain much machinery and run on about the same scale as when the Government was operating the railroads.

Mr. CUMMINS. It will not be necessary for the Railroad Administration to continue to retain so formidable and so large a force, I think. The director general believes that he will be able to reach final settlement with all the railroads within about a year. There will then be these exceptions, and it will require some force—I do not know how large a force—in my judgment, for many years to settle and litigate and pay the various claims that have arisen against the railroads during Federal control. I hope, however, that a large part of the expenditures which we are now incurring may be avoided after about a year's time.

Mr. NORRIS. The claims under the exceptions contained in paragraph (j), which the Senator has read, will not at all depend for their determination, as I understand, upon the settlement between the Railroad Administration and the railroads proper, but there will be claims made by third persons under the various laws of the several States against the Railroad Administration while they were operating the railroads. A great many of those cases can be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. They are not involved in the settlement with the railroads except that in the end the railroads might have to pay some of those claims that had not been paid by the director general. In that event the railroads will have their recourse against the Government, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the machinery that is now maintained by the director general for the purpose of taking care of the claims made against the director general will be retained regardless of settlement with the railroads proper, because the Government by its contract has agreed to save the railroads harmless against this kind of damages.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. So that we shall be maintaining a large part of the present machinery even if we should settle with all the railroads to-morrow.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know just how much of the machinery we shall have to retain for a long time, but I have predicted all the while that for 25 years we should hear the echoes of Federal control. Mr. President, what I have stated, I think, answers the question suggested by the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

PRODUCTION AND SALE OF COTTON.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I had hoped that I might be ready to say what I have to say on the pending bill at this time, but certain important statistics which I had hoped to be able to obtain the department informs me will be sent down not later than to-morrow.

I do not care to delay the measure before the Senate, but there is a subject of such vital importance affecting not only my section but directly and vitally affecting the whole commercial and industrial organization of the country that I wish to put some facts into the Record relative thereto.

We have heard a great deal about the necessity for opening markets. The wheat growers of the West have been confronted with the argument that on account of conditions abroad foreign countries could not take their surplus wheat; that the demoralized condition of the markets of the world made it impossible for them to absorb the cattle of the West through the packing houses; in other words, that the raw products from the field were suffering this terrific break in price because of the demoralized condition of the trading world; and hence whatever price was being paid for such products as did find a market was more or less the result of speculation and of men taking a chance without any apparent outlet.

I now wish to call the attention of the Senate to these conditions as they pertain to the cotton production and sale in this country and abroad.

The clothing of 900,000,000 of people is more or less directly dependent upon nine cotton-growing States in America. In 1914, when the World War broke out and demoralization ran rampant, it looked as if Providence or fate or chance had placed upon the South a burden that could not possibly be borne. In that year when 16,000,000 bales of cotton were produced the world was thrown into chaos by the World War; all the channels of trade were disrupted; and confusion and bankruptcy stared the people of the South in the face. Senators will remember that there was then inaugurated throughout the country the "Buy a bale of cotton" movement; the people of America were begged to come to the aid of the distressed cotton growers of the South in order to absorb the surplus by buying a bale of cotton.

It was humiliating to me. I did not enthuse over that movement. What was the result? In spite of the World War and the destruction of the channels of trade, we consumed in the year from August 1, 1914, to August 1, 1915, 14,800,000 bales of American cotton.

As I said in the introduction to my remarks, the cry has gone abroad that the mills are demoralized; that trade is demoralized, and therefore the price of the raw material has been disastrously reduced. The Agricultural Department in estimating the probable yield of the present year put it at 6,500,000 bales, in round numbers. Last year we produced about 13,500,000 bales, so that we have sustained a loss in production this year as compared with last year of 7,000,000 bales. The average production of the Southern States for the last 10 or 12 years has been around 12,500,000 or 13,000,000 bales of cotton. The world has practically consumed that, carrying over a stock from time to time of something like 1,000,000 bales. As to the character of the cotton which has been carried over no man definitely can say. It is shrewdly suspected by those who are in the position to know something of the character of the cotton carried over, that the 1,500,000 or 2,000,000 bales of so-called stock cotton are of an undesirable grade, falling under technical classifications with which the ordinary layman may not be familiar, such as gin cut, water packed, perished fiber, and linters. What the accumulation of that kind of cotton is, no man, as I have said, definitely can tell. I introduced a resolution in the Senate, which was passed, giving the Agricultural Committee the right and power to make an investigation and to determine the amount and character of all the cotton in this country. That investigation was begun through one of the departments of the Government, but we found ourselves face to face with this curious condition.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	McKinley	Shields
Borah	Harrison	McNary	Smith
Bursum	Heflin	Nelson	Spencer
Calder	Johnson	New	Sterling
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Swanson
Caraway	Kendrick	Norris	Townsend
Ciberson	Kenyon	Oddie	Trammell
Cummins	Keyes	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	King	Pago	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Ladd	Poincxter	Williams
France	La Follette	Pomerene	Willis
Fredlinhuysen	Lodge	Ransdell
Glass	McCormick	Robinson
Hale	McKellar	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as I was saying in pursuance of that resolution, in investigating the actual quantity of cotton on hand in America and the quality of it, we found one very practical difficulty. In some of the warehouses cotton had been stored and money had been borrowed on it regardless of the grade, so that the counting of it was all right, but when it came to the grading a regrading might reveal that the amount loaned on it was beyond the proper per cent of its value. But, be that as it may, everyone knows that there has been for years an accumulation of this unspinnable stuff, and just what per cent of that enters into the counting of the carry-over stock no one at this time is in a position to say; but, counting that in with the present prospective supply, this startling fact was revealed this morning at 10 o'clock by the Bureau of the Census:

There had been corroboration of the contention of the traders that the markets did not justify the purchase of cotton; that the law of supply and demand did not warrant any better price than was then being paid. The conditions have changed, however; and this morning, as supplementary to the statistics that were given me on yesterday, coming up to the 1st day of October, as to the amount of cotton consumed in this country and the amount exported, I asked for additional information as to the month of October. The reply was that it would be given at 10 o'clock; that under the law they were not allowed to promulgate these statistics until they had given them by wire to the entire trade; and this morning the report was given. I got it simultaneously with the trade, and it revealed the fact that the export and domestic consumption of American cotton for the month of October amounted to 1,336,000 bales—about as great consumption as the world has ever made of American cotton for one month. At that rate of 1,336,000 bales, from now until August 1 there would be consumed 16,000,000 bales of American cotton, when, according to the present outturn of the crop that has just been gathered and ginned, and the carry-over from 1920, there will not be in excess of 12,500,000 or 13,000,000 bales of cotton. In other words, the so-called dead markets of the Old World seem to be in a position to absorb a great deal more cotton than we are likely to be able to furnish.

There has been consumed and exported of American cotton from August 1, 1921—August, September, and October—3,189,372 bales of cotton. The rate of consumption has progressed since about June or July.

It is interesting just to enumerate the amount of cotton exported. I give it for the benefit of the Senators from the cotton-growing States, to show how rapidly the consumption of cotton has increased as the months have gone by.

In August of 1920 there were exported, in round numbers, 145,000 bales; in September, 1920, 228,000 bales; in August, 1921, 423,000 bales; and in September, 1921, 522,000 bales—more than double—while the American mills are taking just about their prewar amount and in excess of their prewar amount. Yet we have heard, and much has been made of it through the press, of the short time and threatened strikes; and the consequence was that the price of the raw materials dropped, when, according to the present rate of consumption, on August 1, 1922, there will not be a bale of cotton of American production in existence.

Now, Mr. President, I want to call attention to certain facts.

All of us are perfectly familiar with the disastrous results that followed the deflation and contraction of our currency. Cotton dropped, wheat dropped, meat dropped, to a point where to-day the farmers of America are standing face to face with a condition the like of which never before confronted them; but I want to say that so far as Congress could it has come to the rescue of the situation, so that to-day whatever conditions exist exist in spite of what we have done here, rather than because of what we did not do.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I should like to have the Senator call attention to the fact that the per capita amount of indebtedness to-day is greater than the per capita amount of circulation; and wherever that happens there is financial ruin ahead of the people unless that situation is remedied.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, is seemed to me—a layman, a man inexperienced in high finance—that of all pieces of unmitigated shortsightedness and folly the greatest was the policy pursued by certain ones of our administration, when it was a definite fact that we had increased our bonded indebtedness from less than a billion dollars to something like $20,000,000,000 and had assumed this tremendous debt when the purchasing power of the dollar was at its very lowest ebb, and then, when pay day came, we deflated and contracted to a point where the purchasing power of the dollar was quadrupled, making our indebtedness in effect not $20,000,000,000 but $80,000,000,000, measured by the ability of the people to pay.

I say that just in passing; but the thing that I desire to analyze and get down to where the responsibility is placed where it belongs is this:

The rate of rediscount where paper based on agricultural products was desired to be renewed was at such a point that it was not profitable; in fact, in some instances it could not be obtained. Those of us representing the agricultural districts protested against the action taken by the financial interests of this country through our Federal reserve act. We protested against a rate of discount that was producing from 100 to 180 per cent when the law only allowed those who had it in charge to keep 6 per cent for themselves, putting a burden upon the American people of something like 94 per cent, which tended to restrict business when every indication pointed to the necessity of our doing all the business possible and making all the money possible in order to meet the burden to which the Senator from Georgia has called attention. So rapid has been the shrinkage of the value of the wealth of this country, so rapid have our debts accumulated, that the per capita of wealth in the form of circulation is less than the per capita of debt entailed upon each individual. If the debt were divided and the money were divided, there would not be money enough in America, if each one got his pro rata share, to meet the obligations.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. There is not money enough in the whole world to do it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in order to place the responsibility where it belongs, let us inquire what we have done? I want this to go in the Record. In the first place, it was claimed, and we all knew, that it was practically impossible for the rank and file of the people to get a loan on agricultural paper. To sell agricultural products then meant ruin. As I said, they claimed the markets were dead. They claimed that business was stagnant. Therefore the question was whether the throwing of the products of the farm and field upon an already glutted market would not spell ruin and bankruptcy.

We passed what was known as the farmers' relief act, an act amendatory of the War Finance Corporation act, which gave the War Finance Corporation the privilege for three years of issuing bonds to the amount of $2,000,000,000 on agricultural products, regardless of whether they were for export or for domestic consumption. That is the law now.

We raised our protest here against the high rate of rediscount. That has been lowered to an average, perhaps, of 5 per cent, from 6 and 7.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If my friend the Senator will allow me, the Federal Reserve Board has not commanded or instructed the regional banks to put that lower rate into force, and until it shall have done so, that lowering of the rate gives no relief to the States.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, under the law the several regional banks can, by and with the consent of the Federal Reserve Board, lower the rate of rediscount. I am officially informed that the average now is around 5 per cent.

First was the necessity for formulating some plan by which the man who produced the raw material, agricultural products, out of which the wealth of this country is transformed into our money could get relief. We passed the farmers' relief bill, with the $2,000,000,000 revolving fund, with a three-year privilege on their paper; that is, regardless of whether the products were for export or for domestic consumption, the local banker could underwrite the farmer's paper, and he could get the value of that paper from the War Finance Corporation for a period of three years.

Next came the lowering of the rate of rediscount. Then we were told that the uncertain condition in the official relations of this country with central Europe was a deterring influence; that we were technically at war; that any trade we might carry on with Germany was subject to uncertainties which rendered it hazy and doubtful. We have now ratified the treaty of peace with Germany.

We were then told that the threatened railroad strike was one of the things which was making it impracticable for men to enter the market. The railroad strike has been settled.

We passed the farmers' relief bill, the rate of rediscount was lowered, we ratified the treaty of peace with Germany, the railroad strike is settled, and still the market goes down.

To recapitulate the thing in its entirety, it was claimed that we had no market before. According to the tables furnished me by the Bureau of the Census, we consumed and exported, in the month of October, 1,336,000 bales of cotton, which rate of consumption, if kept up until August, 1922, the consuming year being from August to August, would mean 16,000,000 bales of American cotton consumed, when the visible supply, including this year's production, is less than thirteen and a quarter million bales. We consumed in this country in the month of October 470,000 bales and exported 860,000 bales.

The countries which took the bulk of that cotton were the so-called paralyzed and poverty-stricken countries. The cotton was not sold through the War Finance Corporation abroad, or any export corporation, but was sent through the regular channels of trade to the amount of 3,176,000 bales in the months of August, September, and October. Yet with peace with Germany declared, with the railroad strike settled, with the farmers' relief bill passed, with the rate of rediscount lowered, and the supply notoriously inadequate to meet the demand, the price goes down.

It was not the fault of Congress. We have passed the necessary legislation. It is not now, apparently, the fault of the banks, because the rate of rediscount is lowered, and we make provision under the farmers' relief bill for a revolving fund of $2,000,000,000, and I understand the relief is being afforded wherever the need of it is indicated.

What are the sources of the trouble? To be perfectly fair, one source of this trouble comes from the lack of confidence inspired by the disaster which followed the terrific deflation and contraction which took place in this country from January, 1920, up to September, 1920, without rhyme or reason. There is an old saying that nobody but a fool would be bitten by the same dog twice, provided he knew the dog, and the American trading public believe that the same power that destroyed them in 1920 can do so again, and I maintain that one of the prime reasons why the markets of this country and the trading public are demoralized is because they can not figure out why prices should break as they did and reach the disastrous depths to which they fell in less than six months.

I shall indicate to the Senate some of the countries which have been taking American cotton for the last 12 months, and in that connection I call attention to a rather remarkable thing. Let us take Germany, for instance. I shall read the statistics from August 1, 1920, up to July 31, 1921. Germany took of American cotton in August, 1920, 45,000 bales; in September, 42,000 bales; in October, 79,000 bales; in November, 120,000 bales; in December, 160,000 bales; in January, 132,000 bales; in February, 117,000 bales; in March, 105,000 bales; in April, 85,000 bales; in May, 95,000 bales; in June, 108,000 bales; in July, 212,000 bales; in August, 106,000 bales; in September, 159,000 bales.

In other words, in the 12 months of the consumption year, from August 1 to August 1, Germany took more than a million and a quarter bales of cotton.

Let us take the United Kingdom, the country which used to be the greatest consumer of American cotton in the world. In August they took 43,000 bales; in September, 104,000; in October, 211,000; in November, 240,000; in December, 317,000; in January, 159,000; in February, 116,000; in March, 64,000; in April, 96,000; in May, 159,000; in June, 142,000; in July, 90,000; in August, 56,000; in September, 52,000.

That is, Germany in September took 159,000, against the United Kingdom taking 52,000, and in August Germany took 106,000, against the United Kingdom's 56,000.

In other words, the United Kingdom, during the period I have covered, has taken very little more than Germany has taken. The list of the countries prominent in cotton taking are Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the Ukraine, the United Kingdom, Canada, Newfoundland, Cuba, Guatemala, Mexico, Panama, Ecuador, French West Indies, China, Argentina, British India, Japan, Peru, and British South Africa.

The main thing to which I have desired to call attention this afternoon was the fact that with a probable production not to exceed seven and a quarter million bales of cotton, with a carry over of not to exceed 6,000,000 bales of cotton, making a total visible supply of all kinds of American cotton, excluding linters, of 13,000,000 bales, the present rate of consumption would take 16,000,000 bales, and yet, in spite of that, cotton has declined in price.

I wish to emphasize one other fact. The year 1921 has witnessed the infestation of the entire cotton acreage of America by the boll weevil. It is a matter of national concern that this great source of the world's clothing material should probably pass from the hands of the United States on account of the inroad of an insect on which the fight of the Agricultural Department seems to have no effect. This year probably 6,000,000 to 7,000,000 bales of cotton have been destroyed by this insect.

Having covered the entire cotton belt in 1921, I venture the prediction that we have seen for the last time in American history the production of a 14,000,000-bale cotton crop. In my State this year the weed was as fine as ever, and the prospects, from the standpoint of stand and season, were perhaps as good as ever. Last year we made 1,600,000 bales, in round numbers. This year we will make 650,000 bales. One million bales wiped out in the State of South Carolina, which at 20 cents a pound is $100 a bale, means that from my State alone $100,000,000 in primary value is gone. Multiply that by the 11 cotton-growing States, and Senators can understand what the loss of 7,000,000 bales of cotton means to America. It means $700,000,000 in primary loss. With its added values as it moves on up through the different stages of manufacture, there is a total loss to this country of something like $2,250,000,000, I believe.

The present outlook is for something like 2,500,000 to 3,000,000 bales less than the world's demands this year, with the possibility of next year being more disastrous than this, because the second or third year after the infestation of the weevil is worse. So that the outlook in the South for anything like an adequate supply of American cotton for world consumption is very grave indeed. Yet, in spite of it all, the price of cotton to-day, in view of the crop that is made, has left the section of the country which I represent absolutely stripped of anything like available resources.

I venture the assertion that if we were to take the carry over of last year's crop that they held on to, hoping against hope that the price would rise to where they could pay the debts incurred in its production, and add to it the production of this year and sell it all at 30 cents a pound, it would not pay the debts incurred in 1920.

Senators representing the cotton-growing States sitting about me now are confirming my statements. I repeat, if we took the entire crop of 1921 and added to it the carry over from 1920 and put it all upon the market at 30 cents a pound, it would not pay the debts incurred in the production of 1920.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask my colleague if it is not also true that the crop in Egypt was about the smallest that it has been in 25 or 30 years?

Mr. SMITH. My information in reference to the world supply of cotton from all sources is that it is something like 16,000,000 bales, as against about 24,000,000 bales average production of all sorts of cotton in the world.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator mean in the year 1920?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. As against a normal year?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Now, Mr. President, I have called attention to these facts for the reason that I think it is the duty of those of us who have in charge the welfare of this country to let the public know just what the situation is. I frankly state that the statistics given to me this morning that 1,336,000 bales of cotton were consumed in the month of October, with the price of cotton dropping, were surprising. It was estimated that there were 145,000 more bales of cotton ginned up to November 1 than had been estimated by the Government. The threatened strike and complications that have arisen about certain foreign exchange brought about a drop in price from October 1 up to and including November 4 of $25 a bale, in spite of the conditions which I have just recited.

Mr. President, I do not know, but I am persuaded to believe that the only hope of relief for the agricultural interests of the country in the long run is to fight the devil with fire, to organize their own cooperative selling companies, organize their own banks, and tend to their own business. It looks as though every law we have passed and every effort we have made to help the cotton grower becomes a breastwork and a bulwark from behind which those who have fattened upon him from time immemorial turn his blessing into a curse and make a Frankenstein out of his own creation.

Mr. President, I ask that the tables to which I have referred in the course of my remarks may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION LAW.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, while the railroad bill is the unfinished business I dislike to take the time of the Senate in considering another subject, but the prohibition enforcement bill is to be voted on at 12 o'clock on the 18th of this month, and any discussion of that measure must be had before that time. Therefore I feel justified in taking a little of the time of the Senate now in a discussion of the matter.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] yesterday discussed the conference report in a very exhaustive way from the legal standpoint. I desire to present some suggestions and some facts with reference to the merits of the proposition which I think it would be well to have in the Record before the close of the discussion. I hope that when the measure is passed it will be all the legislation that we will need upon the subject for a great many years. I believe it will be. What I think we shall need will be a more efficient administration and enforcement of the law rather than new legislation.

Mr. President, while generally I welcome interruption I would rather proceed with what I have to say to-day without interruption. I am satisfied that interruption would only consume time without affecting the result one way or the other or changing anyone's vote.

The pending conference report on H. R. 7294 has raised once more the question, Can prohibition be enforced? Do the results of prohibition justify the continuation of this policy of Government?

The chief attack on prohibition has always been that it can not be enforced. Some even say that as much liquor is sold under the prohibitory laws as under the license system.

A series of articles are now being printed in the press and in magazines stating, in general terms, that the prohibition law has broken down and the country is flooded with liquor.

Too often these articles are written by some well-known and prolific writer, who sallies forth, makes a few inquiries of enforcement officers, listens to a great deal of conversation among the habitués of his social club, travelers in smoking compartments of railway trains, frequenters of cabarets, and other types of our American life. Most of those who comprise these and similar classes have long been accustomed to social drinking. In so far as they had given any thought to the matter they were opposed to the principle of prohibition largely upon personal grounds. They have not yet awakened to a realization that prohibition is now in the fundamental law of our land by the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. They regard prohibition as a fad and delight to relate stories of schemes for the evasion of the law. These are many times magnified in the telling.

These classes, however, represent the froth of our civilization. They do not represent the great mass of the American people, those who comprise the bone and sinew of our body politic. It was this great body of our people who represent the homes and firesides that made prohibition possible. These people, through long years of observation of the evils of the liquor traffic and experience of the benefits obtained through applying the principle of prohibition to small communities by local option and State-wide laws, came to believe its application to the Nation as a unit would be to the best interests of our national welfare. These people, believing in the principle and having seen the law enacted, have gone about their daily tasks, and are not constantly agitating and discussing the question or violating the law, as some of these stories would have us believe.

Everyone admits that the prohibition law is violated. I know of no law that is not violated. If every citizen would do his whole duty to his fellow men, we would need but few, if any, laws to carry on the work of government. Criminal laws are not made for the law-abiding but for the lawless, and this class of citizens will always break the law as long as they see an opportunity to do so.

No one on sober thought, however, will insist that a law is a failure simply because it is violated. The charge of wholesale violations is unfounded. If the authors of these various articles would state definitely when and where the violations occur and then nothing is done by the officers of the law, their charges would have more weight.

It would serve a good purpose if every United States and State district attorney and the foreman of every Federal and State grand jury would subpoena the authors of these articles to appear and tell what they know. Thus far, so far as I can learn, when called on to state definite facts they admit they know nothing that is definite. A glittering generality about law being violated without the facts to back it up serves no good purpose. It misleads those who are in no position to know the facts and it encourages those who are inclined to break the law.

Another objection that is made to the prohibition law is that it infringes the personal liberties and rights of the individual. This is a very common plea that is made. I have been surprised to hear it made upon the floor of the United States Senate. Mr. President, there is no such thing as personal liberty in a Republic. Our right to do as we please is restricted in many, many different ways, and it is enough to say that no man in a Republic has any right to do what the duly constituted majority has declared shall not be done. Prohibition is the law of the land, established and brought about in the regularly constituted way, and no citizen of the Republic, whether high or low, has a personal right or a personal liberty, if you please, to do contrary to that law. When duly passed as it has been it does not infringe upon any personal liberty of any citizen of the country.

Those who scoff at this law or encourage others who are violating it fail to realize the harm they are doing their fellow men and their country. Law must be enforced or orderly government will fail. This Nation can not afford to waver on this issue where we must choose between law and lawlessness. The recent utterance of the judicial section of the American Bar Association should be heeded by every patriotic citizen:

The judicial section of the American Bar Association, venturing to speak for all the judges, wishes to express this warning to the American people: Reverence for law and enforcement of law depend mainly upon the ideals and customs of those who occupy the vantage ground of life in business and society. The people of the United States, by solemn constitutional and statutory enactment, have undertaken to suppress the age-long evil of the liquor traffic.

When for the gratification of their appetites or the promotion of their interests lawyers, bankers, great merchants, and manufacturers, and social leaders, both men and women, disobey and scoff at this law, or any other law, they are aiding the cause of anarchy and promoting mob violence, robbery, and homicide; they are sowing dragon's teeth, and they need not be surprised when they find that no judicial or police authority can save our country or humanity from reaping the harvest.

In spite of the organized effort to defy this law and the indifference of many citizens to its enforcement the Federal prohibition department is making headway in checking law violations. It deserves the commendation of the friends of law and order. The cost and results of this department briefly summarized are as follows:

The amount expended in prohibition enforcement during the past fiscal year, covering salaries, rent, travel, and so forth, was $6,250,095.43. The amount of assessments, involving civil penalties, special taxes, and so forth, was $53,296,998.87, of which $2,152,387.45 has been collected. This does not include court fines, which are being compiled, nor over $1,000,000 penalties from brewers. In addition the appraised value of property seized was $10,906,687.53.

The number of cases involving violations of the prohibition act pending at the end of the year was 10,365. During the year 29,114 criminal cases involving violations of the act were commenced, 16,610 offenders plead guilty, 17,962 were convicted, and 765 were acquitted.

Mr. President, I desire to say that the facts which I am setting out and that I propose to set out have been very carefully verified, and I have very little if any doubt as to their correctness.

William Jennings Bryan, who has been a keen observer of the enforcement of prohibition, said in Washington this week concerning the progress of its enforcement:

They say as much liquor is sold as ever, but the statistics show a tremendous decrease, and this decrease is apparent to any who want to see it. They used to bring liquor in by the carload, deliver it in drays at the principal corners, and bottles were arranged on shelves to lure men to drink. No carload lots are now shipped, they do not deliver it by the dray load at the street-corner saloon, nor is it sold on the principal streets nor exhibited on the shelves. It is brought largely in valises and carried at night through the alleys. This is progress toward the extermination of the evil.

Complaint is made because there are still violations of the law. The law against murder has been on the statute books for over a hundred years, and still some murders are committed and not all murderers are caught. The same is true as to the law against stealing. Last year about 2,500 automobiles were stolen in Philadelphia, and 20 per cent of them were never found. Yet no one suggests the repealing of the law against stealing automobiles.

This is the greatest moral reform ever attempted by law. Its success is wonderful. The change already wrought is not only very great, but it enables us to understand the benefits that will come to the country when enforcement is perfected. The chief cause of nonenforcement is the appointment of wet officials to enforce a dry law and the smuggling of liquors into our country from the outside. This will be corrected, first, by the appointment of officials to enforce the law who are in sympathy with the law and its enforcement; and, second, by serving notice on our neighboring countries that their flags are being used to protect smugglers.

In calling attention to the vital importance of the subject under discussion and the respect we owe the eighteenth amendment and its enforcement, may I speak of the attitude of three eminent visitors to our capital? Gen. Armondo Vittorio Diaz, organizer of Italy's "elastic defense," is reported in the Washington Post on Monday morning, October 24, to have said, "I have brought no liquor with me, and I intend to drink none while I am here. I believe that while a guest in another country I should show the same respect for their laws as I would show for those of my own nation." While diplomatic precedent would permit him to bring wine and liquor into the country for his personal use, Dr. Paul Andre, his personal physician, states that Marshal Foch intends to follow the American custom of taking only water with his meals. No wine or other liquor is being carried in the marshal's luggage, the physician said. Sunday, October 30, was the birthday of the Emperor of Japan. Baron Admiral Kato, delegate from Japan to the disarmament conference, and his party would ordinarily have drunk a toast to the Emperor, as is their national custom, but with the fine courtesy for which the famous admiral is noted, he said, "This is a prohibition country and we will not drink a toast but celebrate banzais," the equivalent of three cheers in the American language. What an example to genuine Americans!

There is a reason back of this patriotic attitude that does not appear on the surface. These great generals know that disrespect for international law is just as dangerous to world peace and prosperity as defiance of law is to a nation. The World War was fought to teach one nation that her treaties were not scraps of paper and the laws of the sea should be respected. This Nation was willing to sacrifice billions of money and thousands of lives to help sustain the majesty of international law.

That same spirit of respect for law will cause loyal Americans to do what is necessary to enforce a law adopted by themselves. If we can not enforce a law which we ourselves enact, respect for our form of government will be weakened throughout the world.

State prohibition enforcement departments are meeting with similar success in their efforts to enforce the prohibition law. In Ohio, Judge Don Parker, State prohibition commissioner, reported at the end of the first six months' work this year that the department had collected in fines, forfeited bonds, and prohibitive taxes on the illegal sale of liquor an amount which represented four times the cost of the department, or, in other words, enough to carry on the enforcement work for the next two years. It is manifest, therefore, that enforcement departments properly organized are not a burden upon the taxpayers.

The enforcement departments of the Government are becoming much better organized than they have ever been before.

I simply wish to add that in my State the United States district attorney, the United States collector of customs, the United States internal revenue collector, the United States marshal, and all the various Government officers who may be brought in touch with the operations of this law are acting in the utmost harmony. Not only is that true, but the State prohibition director has brought about almost complete harmony between his force and the State officials; and, furthermore, he has also brought about cooperation between his force and the various county officials; so that from the Federal officials of the highest rank in our State to the lowest enforcement officials there is hearty cooperation looking to the enforcement of the prohibition law not only of the National Government, but of the State government. If we can secure that sort of cooperation all over the country, there will be very little complaint with reference to violations of the prohibition law.

Mr. President, in discussing the effect of prohibition legislation it is well at the beginning to consider its results, shown by the first 22 months' experience.

As briefly as it can be covered I shall discuss the effects of prohibition on crime, alcoholism, labor, bank and savings deposits, economics, agriculture, family life and children, health, insanity, and drug addiction, illustrating my points by reference to the country in general and to specific localities. Let the facts speak for themselves.

GENERAL REDUCTION IN ARRESTS FOR DRUNKENNESS AND CRIMES RELATED THEREOF.

Reports from chiefs of police in 51 largest cities of the United States, including New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and cities of that size and former degree of wetness, and with a total population of over 20,000,000, show a slump in arrests for all causes from 960,603 in 1917 to 851,108 in 1920. Greater stringency in traffic, juvenile, and other laws prevented an even better showing. The total arrests for drunkenness in these cities in 1917 were 307,108. This was cut to 108,835 in 1920, or almost 65 per cent of a decrease.

Police Commissioner R. E. Enright, of New York City, gives the official crime statistics for the principal felonies, murder, felonious assault, assault and robbery, and burglary as follows: 1915, 15,885; 1916, 14,431; 1917, 13,141; 1918, 10,838; 1919, 11,292; 1920, 10,614.

Murders decreased 51 per cent, burglaries 10 per cent, and robberies 6 per cent in Chicago during 1920 as compared with 1919, according to the report of Henry Barrett Chamberlain, operating director of the Chicago crime commission. The number of disorderly conduct cases disposed of in the Chicago municipal court in 1920 was 32,305, as compared with 38,633 in 1919.

The reports of the Massachusetts prison commission give the arrests for drunkenness for the year ending September 30 as follows:

	Boston, Mass.	Massachusetts.
1914.....	59,455	108,185
1915.....	58,385	106,146
1916.....	64,550	116,655
1917.....	72,897	129,455
1918.....	56,001	92,838
1919.....	42,856	79,212
1920.....	19,897	37,160
1921.....	30,409	56,932

The increase shown for 1921 is not an argument against prohibition. It either shows more vigilance in the arrest of offenders and therefore a reduction of actual illegal traffic, or if the contrary be true, it is a plea for better enforcement. The sharp reduction in arrests for 1920 shows the great success of prohibition.

Mr. Sanford Bates, Massachusetts commissioner of correction, says that in spite of unemployment, increase of population, and after-war conditions, the entire penal population of Massachusetts shows a decrease of 3,625; September, 1914, 6,877; in September, 1921, 3,253. This is an increase over the figures of 1919 and 1920 and yet it is still over 50 per cent less than under the license system.

A survey by the Ohio Institute for Public Efficiency shows that four workhouses have been closed by prohibition and about 10,000 fewer persons were in the workhouse the first full dry year than in the wet years immediately preceding.

Warden Edwin Lewis, of Pittsburgh, reports that during 1918, when the city was wet, there were 14,684 prisoners committed to the jail; during 1919, half of which was under war prohibition, the number decreased to 10,588; during 1920, under national prohibition, there were only 4,721 committed to jail.

These are but samples of results in nearly every city and town in the country showing the universal effect of prohibition upon drunkenness and its related crimes. The absence of the customary drunks from the streets of nearly every former wet city, as our own observance testifies, is a tribute to the value of national prohibition which can not be refuted. Prohibition is proving to be its own best advocate in its exhibit of results, despite the clamor about its nonenforcement.

Without making any invidious comparisons that would even tend to reflect on any other country, it is an interesting fact that the recent report filed in Parliament by the commission appointed by the King shows a marked increase in convictions for drunkenness in England and Wales. The summary set forth in this report reads as follows:

The total number of convictions for drunkenness in England and Wales in 1920 as compared with 1919 shows an increase of 37,815, or 65.26 per cent.

The figures for every month in 1920 were higher than the figures of any month during the four preceding years, except in January, 1916, and December, 1919.

The total for 1920 is more than three times as great as the lowest total reached during the war, viz, in 1918, and for the first time since 1915 the year's figures exceed one-half of the highest total recorded since 1907, viz, 188,877 in 1913.

In Washington, D. C., the saloons were limited to 300 in 1914. District prohibition went into effect in 1917 and national prohibition in 1920. Commitments to the workhouse are as follows: 1914, 6,590; 1915, 6,472; 1916, 6,458; 1917, 5,582; 1918, 3,232; 1919, 2,511; 1920, 833. The slight increase in 1921 still shows a marvelous decrease compared with former wet years.

Mayor G. W. Smith, of Louisville, Ky., reports that arrests for drunkenness and disorderly conduct during the first year of war and national prohibition decreased 84.5 per cent.

In Milwaukee, the following figures show the results of prohibition in that city which beer made famous:

	1915	1920	Per cent decrease.
Cases of abandonment.....	302	190	38
Drunk and disorderly.....	3,073	1,247	60
Assault and battery.....	682	426	38
Disorderly conduct.....	2,445	1,139	59

	First 9 months—		Per cent decrease.
	1915	1921
Cases of abandonment.....	261	179	32
Drunk and disorderly.....	2,193	1,386	38
Assault and battery.....	528	400	25

Gov. Albert O. Brown, of New Hampshire, reported in July, 1921, that there had been but 43 jail inmates in that State since December, 1920.

The population of Richmond, Va., has increased 27 per cent in the four years that the State has been dry, but the arrests for drunkenness and disorderly conduct have decreased 75 per cent.

ALCOHOLISM REDUCED.

B. E. Neal, president of the 45 Neal Institutes for the treatment of the drink habit, said recently:

During the 12 years before the Volstead Act became effective we treated more than 125,000 drinking men and women. Chicago and Cleveland institutes treated more than 100 patients a month; Los Angeles and San Francisco averaged 25 to 30 a month. To-day Neal Institutes still operating do not average 2 patients a month. * * * Drinkers are not turning to the use of drugs.

The health department of the Scientific Temperance Federation of Boston shows the proportion of deaths from alcoholism in New York City before and after prohibition—1916, 687; 1917, 560; 1918, 252; 1919, 176; 1920, 98.

The annual report of the Washingtonian Home for Drunkards published in the Chicago papers February 1, 1921, is as follows:

Average number cases treated, 1910-1919 (56 per cent delirium tremens), 921.

Cases treated, 1920 (107 alcoholic, 16 drug addicts, 2 mild mental cases; of the alcoholics only 3 were delirium tremens), 125.

Mr. John Dawson, of Wellington, secretary of the New Zealand Alliance, writes from Chicago under date of October 30 while on a tour of this country:

The chief Keeley Institute at Dwight is closed and has been taken over by the health department for injured soldiers with accommodations for 230. The Keeley Institute now has an office only in Dwight and is treating 18 out patients at present.

Dr. Horatio M. Pollock, statistician of the State Hospital Commission of New York, said in a recently published article that within less than two years after the eighteenth amendment became operative there are no State hospitals for inebriates left in the United States. The State Asylum for Inebriates in Minnesota is now a hospital for mental diseases. The Connecticut State Hospital for Inebriates is now a part of the Norwich State Hospital for the Insane. The State Hospital for Inebriates at Knoxville, Iowa, has become a United States Public Health Service hospital for the treatment of mental defectives. These are the last of the State institutions for inebriates to be converted to other uses. The New York City Industrial Colony discontinued receiving inebriates in October, 1918, and was permanently closed in December of that year.

LABOR CONDITIONS.

Two-thirds—345—of 526 labor leaders interrogated by the Literary Digest, March, 1920, as to whether prohibition had been a benefit to the workmen and their families, replied "Yes," many emphatically. The replies indicated that they had been made with great care, and nearly a third of the cases after a poll was taken on the question at the regular meeting.

Mr. Fred R. Johnson, associate secretary of the Detroit Community Union, speaking on conditions in that city, where alone 100,000 to 125,000 were laid off, states:

National prohibition has assisted in substantially reducing the hopelessly "down-and-out" group which has always swelled the number of destitute homeless in previous periods of unemployment.

BANK AND SAVINGS DEPOSITS.

The commissioner of banks of Massachusetts has submitted his report for 1920 and gives the following figures:

The increase in deposits for the year has been $92,233,305.29, which is approximately $11,820,000 more than the gains shown in 1919.

Savings banks: The 196 savings banks report assets amounting to $1,317,107,394.47 and deposits of $1,206,546,997.69, represented by 2,593,287 deposit accounts, or an average of $465.26 for each account.

Trust companies: The aggregate number of depositors in all trust companies, including both commercial and savings departments is 895,334, an increase during the year of 145,068 depositors.

This increase during the past year nearly equals the total number of depositors in all trust companies in 1909 and is chiefly due to the rapid growth of the savings departments.

Cooperative banks: The 202 cooperative banks had total assets of $173,979,204.70. This was an increase of 12 in number and $19,099,566 in assets, which is the largest amount ever gained in one year.

E. H. Scott, superintendent of banks in Ohio, submitted his report to the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. At that time the total resources in the 636 incorporated and 121 unincorporated banks under State supervision amounted to $1,507,972,285, a gain of $163,995,699 over the report of the previous year. Of this gain, $29,097,119 is in savings deposits. This report does not include the national banks.

Iron Age of February 3, 1921, published an article on "The effects of prohibition among steel workers." The article states:

In Youngstown district the personal deposits of every man, woman, and child approximate $550, exceeding, so far as known, similar figures from any other community of equal size in the country. Prohibition has been responsible to a large extent for the change in the habits and spending propensities of the average steel worker.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune of January 30, 1921, says:

Increase of bank savings of 30 per cent, the conversion of 1,800 saloons into productive business sites, the impetus given the realty business, the general tendency toward thrift and contentment, are some of the noteworthy strides taken by the city since prohibition went into effect a little more than a year ago.

Mr. C. T. Harsch, secretary of the Peoria (Ill.) Clearing House Association, submits statistics on bank clearings as follows:

Clearings for the year 1918.....	$249,507,480.74
Clearings for the year 1919.....	260,439,834.78
Clearings for the year 1920.....	281,528,228.93

The Washington Post presented the following facts in an editorial on November 8, 1921:

The report from the Comptroller of the Currency shows that savings bank deposits materially increased during the last fiscal year. Stagnated industry, business depression, and growing unemployment under ordinary circumstances would be expected to reduce the savings deposits, but they did not. Returns from 623 mutual savings banks, located principally in New England and the Eastern States, show that on June 30, 1921, these institutions held deposits amounting to $5,575,181,000, credited to 9,619,260 depositors. One year previously the same banks had deposits of $5,186,485,000 and 9,445,327 depositors. This June the average deposit was $579.59, and a year ago it was $549.14. According to these figures there was a gain of $338,336,000 in the deposits of these banks and a gain of 173,933 in the number of depositors during the fiscal year. In the same period there was a gain of $30.45 in the average deposit. That unemployment increased during the last fiscal year is generally known and that the trend of wages was downward is undeniable. Under these circumstances men and women ordinarily would be compelled to draw upon their reserves in savings institutions, and as a result the deposits of savings banks would be expected to shrink. Instead they expanded in the volume of deposits, the number of depositors, and the size of the average deposit.

The Post article does not say so, but the year covered by the above report was under national prohibition, and the economic benefits of this policy more than offset the depression resulting from a readjustment from war conditions.

ECONOMICS.

William Childs, president of the company owning the chain of Childs restaurants, in an interview appearing in the November number of the American Magazine, made the following statement about the results of prohibition as they affect his business:

It has raised sales. Lots of men who used to drop into a café for a glass of beer and a light luncheon now visit restaurants. Also when the day's work is over they are more likely to take their families to dinner. They have more money to spend and fewer outside influences to distract them. Even before national prohibition came in we noticed these effects as the various States went dry.

CHILDREN.

The Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children showed in a memorandum of 1,893 cases treated and closed in the six months ending April 30, 1921, that intemperance was a factor in only 14.2 per cent of the cases. In 1907 an analysis of 338 cases showed intemperance a factor in 39 per cent. The 1921 figures therefore represent a decrease of 63 per cent. An official of the society stated that the actual decrease was probably considerably greater. There has been improvement in recent years in methods of keeping records. Actually for years the percentage of cases in which alcohol figured causatively was never below 55 per cent and long varied between 50 and 60 per cent.

In one county district, Hampshire, the number of families in which drunkenness was a factor in the cases fell from an average of 88 for the three years 1916-1918 to 17 cases in 1919 and 6 in 1920. Physical neglect fell from an average of 113 in 1916-1918 to 54 in 1919 and 27 in 1920. In Franklin district the drunkenness element fell from 52 per cent in 1917 to 2.7 per cent in 1920. In the great industrial section of Fall River drunkenness as a factor dropped from 50 per cent in 1918 to 10 per cent in 1920.

The State report of the society for 1920 said:

The reduction in the amount of drunkenness during the past year as by one stroke gave many a child in this broad land more to eat, more to wear, better parental care, and better home life. This is an example of what may be done by wise community action in reducing the volume of cruelty and neglect.

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, when speaking before the Twentieth Century Club in Boston on Saturday, October 29, 1921, said, in part:

There are three classes whose testimony I find most valuable—district nurses, school nurses, and social workers of all kinds. All these can give testimony to the good effects of prohibition legislation on families, chiefly families of the working men. A district nurse recently called on a woman who was expecting her confinement. The woman said to her visitor: "I have got four children already. This one that is coming will be the first born above ground." The nurse did not quite comprehend, but the woman went on: "The only way I used to be able to get money was to take it out of my husband's pocket when he was helplessly drunk in my room. I took what was necessary, but I never could get enough to hire any room that was not in a cellar. All my four children were born underground. This one is going to be born above ground."

The district nurse followed that case through confinement and had the pleasure of seeing the husband positively attentive to his work and bring all his earnings to his wife. Then on the last visit the nurse made she had the pleasure of seeing him holding his little girl in his lap. She was very neatly dressed already. It was Sunday morning, and this father, who had never given a cent to his wife until the prohibition amendment came, was curling the little girl's hair in order that she might look pretty when he took her to Sunday school.

The infant mortality rate in 519 cities of the United States, comprising a population of over 42,500,000, was as follows for five years, according to tables compiled by the American Child Hygiene Association:

1916.....	101
1917.....	98
1918.....	107
1919.....	89
1920.....	90

Without attempting to ascribe the marked falling off wholly to prohibition since higher wages and the continued child welfare campaigns have been factors, the marked decrease of the period began in the first year of prohibition. Philip van Ingen, M. D., in Mother and Child, July, 1921, said:

The last two years have been most encouraging. If this rate may be regarded as fairly close to that of the entire United States, it means that 25,000 less babies died this past year (1920) than would have had the same conditions existed as did even five years ago.

The noticeable decline in the number of heat prostrations during 1921 as compared with former years is credited by health commissioners to prohibition. Dr. W. L. Dick, health commissioner, and Jennie L. Tuttle, superintendent of the District Nursing Association, of Columbus, Ohio; Dr. Collins H. Johnson, Dr. Wells, Dr. George A. Parker, and Dr. Stephen O'Brien, of Grand Rapids, Mich., the three last named superintendents of the large city hospitals; and Supt. Daniel Test, of the Pennsylvania Hospital, in Philadelphia, all agree that the lack of alcoholic beverages is responsible for the small number of heat prostrations in a summer of more than ordinary heat.

Dr. Thomas A. Hyde, of Christ Hospital, Jersey City, N. J., writes under date of September 7, 1921:

As a hospital executive, I would have you know that I regard the prohibition movement as a tremendous humanitarian blessing. The passage of the eighteenth amendment brought an instantaneous change

In the character of our work. Our men's ward since the enactment of it has not been comfortably filled, which prior to that time was filled to overflowing. The ambulance was accustomed to answer ten or a dozen calls on a Saturday night; one or two calls soon became the rule. Neither did we experience a "dope" epidemic.

Deaths from tuberculosis in Chicago during 1920 numbered 2,652, a decrease of 572 as compared with 1919 and a decrease of 1,175 as compared with 1918. Health Commissioner Robertson says:

There is a decrease all over the United States, but not so marked as here. This is due in part to prohibition. People are getting more sleep and are not carousing and drinking so much.

The annual number of deaths from alcoholism in 14 of the largest cities of the United States—New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, St. Louis, San Francisco, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Washington, D. C., Milwaukee, and New Orleans—averaged 124.2 in the years 1916 and 1917, the last normal health year before prohibition. In 1920 they averaged 19.7, a decrease of 84 per cent. Liver cirrhosis in the same cities declined in the same time from 180.9 to 94, which was the average number of deaths per year per city from this cause, a decrease of 48 per cent. That prohibition was responsible for the change is shown by the fact that similar declines in alcoholism and liver cirrhosis occurred previously in certain cities when they came under State prohibition, and little change therefore occurred in such cities when national prohibition went into effect.

INSANITY.

In the Boston, Mass., Psychopathic Hospital admissions for insanity due to alcohol fell off 74 per cent after the advent of prohibition, according to a statement of chief officer Harlan L. Paine, May 20, 1921.

Fillmore Condit, expert in figures on insanity, gives official statistics showing that prohibition has checked the increase and turned the scale downward in the number of cases of insanity. Illinois hospitals had 279 insane patients for each 100,000 of the population July 1, 1918, and 261 per 100,000 on January 1, 1921. From 1904 to 1919 insanity increased in Illinois 3.5 per cent annually, or much more rapidly than the general population, and only 1.3 per cent annually since prohibition went into effect, a much slower rate than the increase in population. In 1917 New York had 391.9 insane for each 100,000 of the population; in 1918, 395.7; October 1, 1919, 393.7; January 1, 1920, 374.6. For many years insanity increased in California at the rate of 5.6 per cent annually. The increase from January 1, 1919, to January 1, 1921, was only 59 cases, or 1,094 less than the number there would have been if the normal increase from 1904 to January 1, 1919, had continued. The California Lunacy Commission recently stated that the maintenance cost of the insane in 1920 was $1,832 per capita, so the taxpayers are saving about $2,000,000 in the care of the insane.

DRUGS.

The Journal of the American Medical Association on December 11, 1920, says:

Clinics conducted by the Narcotic Division of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, through which agency several thousand drug addicts were examined, revealed no evidence of an increase in the narcotic habit since prohibition went into effect.

The claim that prohibition increased drug addicts is without statistical foundation, and where there seems to be an increase it is due to the active enforcement of the antinarcotic law. In New York a regulation requiring registration of addicts who wished to buy drugs went into effect about three weeks after war prohibition became effective. The United States Treasury Department commission quoted estimates ranging from 80,000 to 4,000,000 addicts for the entire country; legislative investigations in New York brought out the opinion that, roughly speaking, there were from 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 drug addicts in the city, then a wet city in a wet State. Since July 9, 1919, drug addicts have been required to register, and the records show about 13,000 users in the State, besides probably 26,000 unregistered cases who obtain drugs illicitly. This makes about one-third of the minimum number—100,000—estimated three years before by health officers. This shows that estimates are too large, and there is no evidence that prohibition has increased the number of addicts. Minnesota had committed 26 addicts to State institutions in 1918, 17 in 1919, and 4 in 1920. Chicago had an average of 12.50 cases per month at the house of correction in 1919, and 11.25 cases per month to May 1, 1920. A number of institutions for treatment of these cases have been closed.

TESTIMONY OF GOVERNORS.

Under date of November 6, 1921, the Daily Mail, of Charleston, W. Va., published replies from 25 governors of States in answer to the question, "Is prohibition enforcement successful in your State?" Twenty-two report conditions vastly improved under prohibition, and several state that the prohibition laws are as well enforced as any other laws. One governor reports an unsatisfactory condition because the leading city of his State is an open seaport and violations are hard to overcome. Two others decline to answer. The statement of the governor of Colorado is wholesome and deserves careful consideration. He says:

Prohibition is eminently preferable to the old saloon system, but requires education and enforcement to make it effective. People must first learn its advantages, and enforcement will follow naturally.

PROHIBITION AND ITS EARLY RESULTS.

(By Commander Evangeline Booth, of the Salvation Army.)

Who better than the Salvation Army can speak of the quick and blessed results of the banishment from the streets and the hovels of the poor of this liquid fire and distilled damnation?

Our social secretaries tell us that drunkenness among the men frequenting our hotels and industrial homes has almost entirely disappeared; that men who previously had not enough money to pay their way from one day to another now have money in the bank. In one of our hotels there are 120 men with banking accounts of considerable amounts who previously could not keep a dollar for 24 hours.

In another hotel 25 men, who before prohibition could not muster a dime among them, have deposits ranging from $100 to $500. Paul Stoker, a man who drank every cent of his earning, has saved $700 since prohibition came into effect. An increase in prosperity and thrift is universally acknowledged. The State of Minnesota reports a saving increase of $17,000,000 for the year. * * *

The nurses of the Baby Hygiene Association, visiting throughout the city, already find a marked improvement in young children. The sword of sorrow and shame which overhung their homes has been snatched away, which has meant development, beauty, and vitality to tens of thousands.

Needless to say, the experience of our own slum officers emphasizes these benefits. "Father buys us clothes since prohibition; he used to drink all the money up," said a little girl of 6 in Hell's Kitchen last week. They find the home better cared for and less divided, and where they used to get mother and children only to the meeting the whole family now attends.

The entire army world seems to have heard of our boozers' day—how year by year we have celebrated Thanksgiving holiday from 6 in the morning, collecting the drunks from the park benches, feeding them and sobering them up, and saving them with huge and lasting results. But last year they were not there, and so we gave the day to the poorest children of the great city.

In large numbers we gathered the underprivileged boy—the little lads who sell the newspapers, the waifs and strays, and even the crippled who eke out their unhappy existence in the unchanged miseries of the slums. Never shall I forget the upturned faces of the 5,000 of New York's poorest under 14, as they lifted their childish voices in the song which must still echo somewhere in heaven, "Yes, Jesus loves me; the Bible tells me so!" And never shall I forget the upsurging emotions of admiration and gratitude of my own heart to that flag that has made it a criminal offense to trade their home, their bread, their clothing, and their life's blood for the most complete damnation of body and soul gloated over in hell.

And this seems to me to be one of the most significant of the early results of prohibition. It means that in the future we shall have less to do with the grave and more to do with the cradle; less binding up of life's broken plants, and more training of life's untrammelled vines; that more of our energy, our ingenious methods, will be thrown into work of prevention, which in the final analysis must be so much more valuable to the home, the Nation, and the kingdom of God than even the most worthy work of cure.

By the constitutional amendment of prohibition a measure has been enacted that will do more to bring the kingdom of God upon earth than any other single piece of legislation.

A few of the general beneficent results of national prohibition were summarized in an article in Leslie's Weekly, February 12, this year, which I ask to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

It has demonstrated to the world that a self-governing people are willing to vote upon themselves, through their regularly constituted representatives, self-discipline and self-restraint for the public good. Never has any other great nation subjected itself to so severe a moral test.

Prohibition has convinced the world that it is not necessary for a nation to raise its revenues for public expenses out of a recognized evil like the liquor traffic. This Nation without liquor revenues is better equipped to meet the big reconstruction problems following the Great War than any of the countries sodden with liquor.

It has removed the saloon as a public nuisance and menace. There is not a single wet advocate who champions the return of the old-time saloon. In 10 years those who are now championing a beer and wine or other weakening amendment to prohibition will be against any change of that kind. Some people are always one lap behind in the race for human progress.

Prohibition has revealed the criminal character of the liquor traffic and its deep-seated, vicious influence. The official report authorized by United States Senate resolution 307 gives the conclusion of 7,000 sworn pages of testimony. It brands the liquor traffic as an unpatriotic, boycotting, press-subsidizing, tax-evading, corrupt influence in American life. The traffic is keeping up its established reputation. Prohibition is the searchlight to discover who some of the real enemies of orderly government are.

A policy of government that reduces crime, drunkenness, and poverty, and increases the health, wealth, and happiness of the people is a success and should have the support of patriotic people. Without stopping to recount the economic advantages of prohibition, apparent in practically every bank of the United States and in every industrial enterprise, large and small, or in countless thousands of American homes where comfort and happiness prevail, and not penury and misery as heretofore; without using any valuable space to accumulate the overwhelming testimony of boards of health and physicians and the irrefutable comparison of vital statistics, all showing the improved health conditions prevalent throughout the land; without mentioning any testimony of church officials, Sunday-school superintendents, ministers, college presidents, and others interested in moral welfare, who with practical unanimity proclaim the success of this movement and its uplifting effect upon the morals of the Nation; as against the unsupported desultory evidence and statements here and there that this law is not enforced in this place or in that place—which at most means that it is not perfectly enforced and is not enforced all of the time in one place—let us look at other places where the law is enforced. These places more nearly represent the average conditions in the United States than the few places which may be picked out as a horrible example of prohibition.

(The article then sets forth the statistics showing the marked reduction in arrests for drunkenness and crime under prohibition.)

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the enactment of a prohibition law is the beginning of the end of the fight against liquor, but it is not the end. The organized forces that secured prohibition have the most difficult part of their task yet to perform.

This Nation will be the greatest laboratory experiment for prohibition in the world. We confidently predict the following extremely beneficial results:

The United States will develop a race free from the taint of alcoholic poison. It has been demonstrated scientifically that alcohol is one of the greatest sources of race degeneracy, reflected in lunacy, epilepsy, idiocy, and feeble-mindedness. The improvements in these respects will not be fully realized for a generation. The present decrease in the applicants to the institutions, particularly insane asylums, proves that, if no other good results came from prohibition, it is worth more than the entire cost to secure it. Every defective, criminal, and delinquent eliminated puts new strength into the Republic.

We will be the greatest financial power of all the nations, because we will conserve what other nations waste for liquor. Over $2,000,000,000 a year saved in money formerly spent for intoxicating liquor will be a big asset. Add to this at least an equal amount which will come as a result of increased efficiency and decreased accidents, and we will begin to realize what a financial asset prohibition will be. The average increased attendance in the schools under prohibition has been about 10 per cent. An intelligent citizenship is an essential to a successful democracy.

Prohibition will be an unmistakable health and life extension influence. The National Medical Association has repeatedly proclaimed that intoxicating liquor is a menace to life and good health.

The home life of the people will be better and happier. Hundreds of thousands of children will be better clad and better fed. The politics of the Nation will be cleaner. Measures designed for the public good will no longer be censored by a liquor lobby.

Business men will no longer be subjected to the un-American liquor boycott, which the sworn testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee proved was one of the effective liquor weapons in the past.

Prohibition will demonstrate that a righteous policy of government exalts a nation. A self-governing people courageous enough and moral enough to ignore the misrepresentation and abuse which follow every advancement for moral progress will develop a moral fiber that will not only be a source of strength at home but will inspire the world to follow our example. The prohibition of the liquor traffic will make the United States the greatest financial, political, and moral power in the world.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks a statement from Eugene C. Brokmeyer, general attorney for the Association of Retail Druggists, which is headed, "Retail druggists opposed to handling medical beer," and also a brief editorial from one of the leading drug journals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RETAIL DRUGGISTS OPPOSED TO HANDLING MEDICAL BEER.

The National Association of Retail Druggists went on record at its national convention against retail druggists selling beer as a medicine, even on prescriptions. The issuance of the beer regulations will not induce many druggists to accept the hazard which this business carries.

The present druggists' permit does not authorize the sale of medical beer. It will require a new permit to do this. The druggists who take out these permits would have to get a new bond and carry the additional expense for this. If the anti-beer bill passes, they would have the beer on hand and it would be a total loss to them.

In addition, if any druggist should violate the law with reference to the sale of beer, his permit to handle other liquors for legitimate purposes would be canceled along with the permit to dispose of medical beer. If any of his clerks should sell it to a person who used it for beverage purposes, the druggist might be held responsible for this under certain conditions. The hazard of the beer trade is too great to make it alluring to druggists.

EUGENE C. BROKMEYER,
General Attorney for the Association of Retail Druggists, 856 and 857 Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.

LEADING DRUG JOURNAL CONDEMNES MEDICAL BEER.

[Editorial, Oct. 31, 1921, from Oil, Paint, and Drug Reporter, established 1871.]

MORE TROUBLE FOR THE DRUG TRADE.

The drug trade has not wanted medicinal beer. The medical profession has expressed no desire to be allowed to prescribe beer. In fact, even those who once brewed malt intoxicants acquiesced in the department's view that the authorization of medicinal beer was of no practical advantage. Who wanted the stuff? One scarcely can attribute its authorization to a desire for such on the part of those who alone prevented its legal elimination, even though it is difficult to believe that they could not foresee the outcome of their obstinate demand that an anti-beer law be anti-industrial and medicinal alcohol as well.

No honorable druggist will want to fill the prescriptions for 2½ gallons of malt liquor which may now legally be issued by physicians. He can hardly handle such orders in anything even resembling a professional manner. His store would have to be a beer warehouse.

What of the wholesaling of the new medicines? The addenda to the regulations contain no statement which indicates that malt liquors are to be handled at wholesale in any way different from spirituous liquors or alcohol. How under the sun is the wholesale druggist going to find storage space for this latest addition to this varied stock?

It looks as if the authorization of medicinal beer would be an especially strong incentive for the establishing of bogus drug houses, wholesale and retail, because of the reluctance of the legitimate trade to handle it. Doubtless the Treasury Department has acted in strict accordance with the law, and the drug trade is further to be burdened and subjected to the defaming action of imposters. It is a pity that there has not been moral strength enough in Congress to pass the sort of anti-beer bill that the shortcomings of the law made necessary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I also have here a statement headed "Citizens, Help These Leaders to End Prohibition." It sets out an organization which is known as the Association against the Prohibition Amendment (Inc.), which is located here in the District of Columbia. It gives the name of some gentlemen who are said to belong to the organization. There are some gentlemen named here who I can hardly believe belong to the association, but their names are set out in this publication. I ask that it may be printed. This was sent to an editor of one of the labor papers. I also desire to have his reply printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CITIZENS, HELP THESE LEADERS TO END PROHIBITION.

(A few of the leading members of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment (Inc.): R. L. Agassiz, Gen. Felix Agnus, Vincent Astor, Thomas F. Bayard, Rex Beach, Rev. James H. Black, Maj. Gen. W. M. Black, Hon. Richard Bartholdt, Irvin S. Cobb, Hon. L. A. Coolidge, Rev. S. Norris Craven, T. DeWitt Cuyler, Tracy Dows, William P. Eno, Rev. Frowin Epper, Stuyvesant Fish, Dr. Julius Friedenwald, Harrison Grey Fiske, Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, Hon. John Philip Hill, Seth Low, Rt. Rev. Monsignor Edward J. McGolrick, Hon. James M. Munroe, Rear Admiral Hugo Osterhaus, Spencer Penrose, Rev. Dr. Max Raisin, John A. Roebing, Archibald B. Roosevelt, Kermit Roosevelt, Gen. Geo. F. Randolph, Charles H. Sabin, James Speyer, Admiral Yates Stirling, Rt. Rev. Monsignor C. F. Thomas, Charles Hanson Towne, and Henry Kitchell Webster.)

These men—prominent, fearless, far-seeing Americans all—are protesting against the tyranny of organized fanaticism.

They know that the Volstead law is wholly pernicious; that by reason of its unpopularity and impracticability it is bringing all law into contempt and disrepute, and is making law-breaking a pastime—something for the average citizen to "brag about." They deplore the illicit liquor traffic, with its crimes and lawlessness—all born of the Volstead law. They know that prohibition has choked our courts with liquor cases; that it has created added friction between capital and labor; that it has afforded an opportunity for graft (in connection with "enforcement") of a magnitude to stagger the imagination; that it is an unwarranted violation of liberty and American principles of government.

Prohibitionists promised us empty jails—we have an unprecedented crime wave.

Under prohibition we were promised a richer Nation—we now pay increased taxes, and the Government reports increased costs and decreased revenue.

These men know that a campaign of organized protest against prohibition is the only remedy for present conditions. Will you back them up?

The Association Against the Prohibition Amendment (Inc.) is the leading national society which is working to repeal the Volstead law, to curb fanaticism and rule by the minority, and to restore liberty, prosperity, and self-respect to America. It is the only society which has branches formed or forming in every State to combat the Volstead law, and with a plan of campaign to cover every congressional district and to reach every candidate for office. It does not advocate the return of the saloon, but does stand for fairness, moderation, and respect for the Constitution of our fathers.

If you believe that the Volstead Act is wrong, then your duty under our Constitution and laws is to work for its repeal.

MEMBERSHIP APPLICATION BLANK.

To THE ASSOCIATION AGAINST THE PROHIBITION AMENDMENT (INC.), 511 Eleventh Street NW., Washington, D. C.

I inclose $1, being my fee for membership for one year from date in the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment (Inc.), and request that my name be placed on the rolls of the association.

I am in favor of the repeal of the Volstead Act.

It is my firm intention, under normal conditions, to favor those legislative and congressional candidates who openly stand for the repeal of the Volstead law and who favor States' rights as to prohibition.

I reserve the right to resign at any time or to suspend this pledge upon filing a letter to that effect with the association, for any given election, when, in my opinion, the public interest justifies this course.

UNION LABOR BULLETIN,
Newark, N. J., July 8, 1921.

ROBERTSON S. WARD,
President A. A. P. A. (Inc.), 36 Park Place, Newark, N. J.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your questionnaire:

1. We favor prohibition.
2. We do not favor interference with the eighteenth (or prohibition) amendment nor its repeal.
3. We favor absolute annulment of the saloon where it may serve to prostitute the morals of the region to which it caters.
4. We condemn the sale of light wines or beers with meals in restaurants or hotels.
5. We disapprove of the sale of light wines or beers for consumption anywhere.
6. Our employees have increased their efficiency 100 per cent because of prohibition.
7. We can not encourage anyone to join your association.
8. You may use this information in whatever manner will aid the return of this country to a sane enjoyment of prosperity, which is impossible where stimulants destroy brains and develop physical weakness, accentuate moral laxitude and lassitude, and undermine the real strength of government.

Yours, very truly,

UNION LABOR BULLETIN.
T. CHAS. PRICE, Editor.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him to state again the name of the organization to which he has just referred? I did not catch it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment (Inc.).

As illustrating the methods that have been pursued heretofore by some of those who are opposed to prohibition, I wish to put into the RECORD a clipping from the Washington Sunday Star of January 2, 1921, headed, "Abandons plan to start movement as result of visit to United States." Then it purports to quote from a very strong prohibitionist, Mr. Larsen-Ledet, a leader of the Anti-Alcohol League of Denmark. The statement quoted was so different from what anyone who knew this man would expect from him that a cablegram was sent to him quoting the remarks attributed to him and asking him for the facts. I ask to have printed in the RECORD the newspaper article and the cablegram which was sent to Mr. Larsen-Ledet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Copy of clipping from the Sunday Star, Washington, D. C., Jan. 2, 1921.]

ABANDONS PLAN TO START MOVEMENT AS RESULT OF VISIT TO UNITED STATES.

(Cross-Atlantic cable service to the Star.)

COPENHAGEN, January 1.

"It would be a great calamity if Denmark were to become prohibition as America is now," declared Larsen-Ledet, leader of the Anti-Alcohol League of Denmark, who has just returned from a three-month trip to the United States, where he has been studying the prohibition situation.

The plan to start a movement for dry legislation in Denmark has been abandoned as a result of his trip. And he is strongly of the opinion that present conditions in America are ruining the character of its people.

"What is happening in America is exactly the opposite of what was expected," he said. "My own opinion is that prohibition is an absolute failure in the United States. It simply shows how impossible it is to make a nation moral by legislation. The battle against alcohol must be conducted along new lines, until the people give it up voluntarily. Compulsion evidently will bring results opposite to those desired."

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 5, 1920.

Mr. LARSEN-LEDET,
International Electoral Superintendent, Aarhus, Denmark.

MY DEAR FRIEND LEDET: We were considerably surprised a few days ago by the appearance in one of our Washington papers of the inclosed statement credited to you. Personally I feel that there must be some mistake about it, because I am sure that if you had any such feeling with regard to the net operation and results of Federal prohibition in the United States you would have told us while you were still in the country. But while we know that prohibition is not uniformly well enforced, at the same time it has produced such splendid results on the whole that I do not believe that you indulge the feeling that is attributed to you in this article. I can say this, while at the same time I recognize the fact that you might still entertain some question in your mind as to the desirability of making general prohibition applicable to your own country under present conditions, although before you would be able to secure prohibition throughout Denmark under those conditions public sentiment, etc., would materially change. I have therefore taken the liberty of inclosing the article in question to you, and if it is an unwarranted statement and is at variance with what you have said, either in its language or in its general purport, I should be glad to have you say so, so that I can properly correct same through the press here, which gave special publicity to the statement.

In addition to the article referred to, I am inclosing an article speaking about the results of prohibition in two of our largest cities—New York and Chicago.

Very sincerely, yours,

(Signed)

EDWIN C. DINWIDDIE,
National Electoral Superintendent,
International Order of Good Templars.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is the reply of Mr. Larsen-Ledet:

AARHUS, January 29, 1921.

DINWIDDIE, Washington:

Shameless lie; not one word true. Every day I challenge European nations follow America's footsteps. Ask Star who sent false report.

LEDET.

Mr. President, I have here an article published in the Scientific Temperance Journal of May, 1921, headed "Alcoholic liquors in and out of the new United States Pharmacopœia," which I ask may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article referred to will be inserted in the RECORD as a part of the Senator's remarks.

The article referred to is as follows:

[Reprinted from the Scientific Temperance Journal, May, 1921.]

ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS IN AND OUT OF THE UNITED STATES PHARMACOPŒIA.

(Francis Hathaway.)

(The following article contains a brief account of the purpose, origin, and development of the United States Pharmacopœia, the official standard of drugs used for medicinal purposes, first issued in 1820. Whisky and brandy were not included until the third revision (1850 decade) and were dropped in the ninth which went into effect in 1916. Various medicinal wines were omitted from time to time and all wine and medicinal wines were dropped at the same time as whisky and brandy. Beer and other malt beverages have never been included in the Pharmacopœia.)

Six years ago, in 1915, whisky and brandy were dropped from the list of standard drugs in the ninth decennial revision of the Pharmacopœia of the United States. This indicated, according to the president of the pharmacopœial convention, Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, that they were "no longer of sufficient importance as medicinal agents to retain a place among standard drugs," although they might continue to be nonofficial remedies. It is not so generally known that the wine was also dropped, as were certain medicated wines, drugs made up with wine.

An examination of the 10 editions of the Pharmacopœia of the United States which have appeared during the past century reveals somewhat interesting facts as to the place which alcoholic beverages have occupied in the physician's official drug armamentarium.

ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE PHARMACOPŒIA.

The Pharmacopœia, as is generally known, is the official book of formulae or directions for the preparation of medicines, a standard for the chief drugs used for medicinal purposes. It is the property of the Pharmacopœial Convention, now an incorporated association which meets once a decade (the first year in each decade ending in zero—that is, 1910, 1920), but the work of revision usually occupies several years. Thus, though the first meeting for the ninth convention was held in 1910, the completed revised Pharmacopœia did not become effective until September 1, 1916. The convention is made up of delegates from incorporated professional institutions such as medical colleges and schools, pharmaceutical schools and colleges, State medical and pharmaceutical associations, the American Medical Association, American Pharmaceutical Association, American Chemical Society and bureaus of the Government engaged in medical or sanitary work.

The father of the project for a United States Pharmacopœia was Dr. Lyman Spalding of New York City, a native of New Hampshire, who submitted a plan for it to the medical society of the county of New York in January, 1817. Preceding American pharmacopœial compilations had been mainly of a local character, the European pharmacopœias being the principal reliance of the medical profession.

The product of the first convention, appearing in Boston December 15, 1820, is a stubby little leather-bound volume, hardly more than a list of names of drugs printed both in Latin and in English. Decade by decade the convention developed and perfected its organization, and enlarged its work. The Latin version was first omitted in the second revision, published in 1842. The successive revisions became more and more elaborate and technically exact; standards for the manipulation of drugs were established. Many remedies disappeared, but new medical and pharmaceutical knowledge is recorded in the changing and enlarging list of remedies. The latest revision, the ninth, is a volume of over 700 pages.

WINE IN THE PHARMACOPOEIA.

In the little brown volume of the first pharmacopoeia compiled for the United States only one alcoholic beverage appears, Vinum on the Latin page, wine on the English page, and this was elucidated by the descriptive word "Teneriffe." In the first revision decade of 1830, in addition to this wine, there were also 10 medicated wines, drugs like aloes, antimony, ipecac, rhubarb, gentian, opium, rhubarb, tobacco, and white hellebore made up with wine for medicinal purposes. With a few exceptions these medicated wines persisted in the pharmacopoeia for almost a century. Wine of meadow saffron disappeared in the third revision, but wine of colchicum root and seed and of ergot appeared in that same volume. Aromatic wine and coca wine ran short careers in one decennium only, the former appearing in the sixth revision (1880), the latter in the eighth (1900).

Wine itself appeared under various names, sometimes in the simple Latin terms for red wine and white wine, sometimes in terms meaning port and sherry wine. But port and sherry disappeared in the sixth revision (1880); the former Latin terms for red and white wines reappeared, and there was added "strong white wine," a fortified wine composed of seven parts of white wine with one part of alcohol, the total alcoholic strength to be no less than 20 per cent by weight, nor more than 25 per cent. This strong wine lasted but 10 years and disappeared in the seventh revision (1890). By this time also there had gone the wines of tobacco, white hellebore, rhubarb, and aloes. In the next revision (1900) the wine of colchicum root went.

SPIRITS IN THE PHARMACOPOEIA.

Whisky and brandy, it is interesting to observe, did not appear in the pharmacopoeia until the third revision (1850).

While the eighth revision was being made, an international conference was held in Brussels for formulating standards for potent remedies which would be adopted by the various pharmacopoeias of the world.

Of the state of opinion concerning the medicinal use of wine at this period, Martin I. Wilbert, of the Hygienic Laboratory at Washington, said in some notes presented by Dr. Reid Hunt at the Twelfth International Congress against Alcoholism, London, 1909:

"Probably the oldest of the now used alcohol-containing liquids is wine, the fermented juice of the grape, vitis vinifera. As a beverage, and to some extent as a medicine, wine has been in use from a very early period, and a study of its history, the uses to which it has been put, and the influence that it has had on the development of the human race would go far toward elucidating many of the problems that are involved in the present-day discussion of the use and abuse of alcohol. More than half a century ago Jonathan Pereira, one of the pioneers of modern medicine, asserted that: 'The uses of wine are threefold—dietetical, medicinal, and pharmaceutical. To persons in health, the dietetical employment of wine is either useless or pernicious. As a medicinal agent, wine is employed principally as a cordial, stimulant, and tonic, but it is much less frequently and copiously employed than formerly. As a pharmaceutical agent, wine is employed for the preparation of the medicated wines. Its efficacy resides essentially in the alcohol which it contains, but as the quantity of alcohol which it contains is variable, and as it is more liable to undergo decomposition than a tincture containing the same proportion of spirit, the medicated wines are objectionable preparations.' The several points that are involved in this assertion, made by Pereira more than 50 years ago, are as true to-day as they were then, and are as well worth taking into consideration."

Having confirmed Pereira's observations of 60 years ago that wine was much less used as a medicinal agent than formerly, Mr. Wilbert pointed out that wine was slowly passing as a solvent for drugs, because unsatisfactory and undependable and better to be replaced by mixtures of alcohol and water.

"Without further discussing the use of wine as a dietetical or as a medicinal agent, let us consider the gradual, though admittedly slow, passing of wine as a pharmaceutical agent. As a solvent for the active ingredients in vegetable drugs, wine has long been recognized as being inferior to definite, easily-controlled mixtures of alcohol and water, and the 'Brussels conference' adopted as one of the principles of the final protocol the provision (a) of article 2, that 'No potent drug shall be directed to be prepared in the form of a medicinal wine (vinum).' The accompanying table shows that in a general way at least, the revisers of the pharmacopoeias that have appeared since the convening of the Brussels conference have complied with the requirements of this international agreement, and that, with a more widespread appreciation of the desirability of international uniformity, future editions of the several pharmacopoeias will, no doubt, eliminate all of the now included formulas for wines of potent medicaments."

Whisky and brandy were also discussed by Mr. Wilbert as undependable preparations of alcohol for medicinal purposes.

"The same general objections that have been made to the use of wines as solvents also hold good for distilled liquors, such as brandy, rum, and whisky, which have aptly been described as being 'Alcoholic liquids of variable strength which owe their distinctive flavors to contained impurities.' One of the most objectionable features of both wines and liquors, as ordinarily found, is the very widespread practice of adulteration. The nature of this adulteration is well evidenced in the recent investigations on the identity and the composition of distilled liquors, and in some of the more recent reports of the State boards of health. The report of the State Board of Health of Massachusetts for 1906 asserts that all of the samples of brandy examined were found to be below the United States Pharmacopoeia standard, being artificially colored in all cases, and having residues consisting largely of sugar; and in the report of the North Dakota experiment station for the same year, E. C. Ladd says that upward of 95 per cent of the whiskies sold do not comply with the United States Pharmacopoeia requirements. The report of the State Board of Health of Indiana asserts that more than 50 per cent of the wines examined, all obtained from drug stores in that State, never saw a grape, and that many additional samples were wines of very inferior quality."

"It will hardly be necessary to dilate further on the general unreliability of wines and distilled liquors as medicinal or pharmaceutical agents. The variability and their widespread adulteration are features that are not conducive to reliability as medicinal agents or as solvents, and will no doubt lead to their final deletion from the official list of standard medicaments."

"ADVANTAGES OF ALCOHOL OVER ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES."

"Being a chemical, alcohol should be considered and used as such and should be given preference, for pharmaceutical purposes at least, over the natural or artificial mixtures containing it. The restriction of the pharmacopoeial use of alcohol to the pure substance would be of advantage in that the identity and purity of this substance is, comparatively, easily controlled; its solvent action, either alone or diluted with water, is not influenced by accompanying contaminations; universal adoption of it as a solvent would make for international uniformity; and last, but by no means least, it is of itself not inviting as a beverage."

This growing distrust of the medicinal value of alcoholic beverages doubtless found expression in the ninth revision (in effect 1916). This present pharmacopoeia dropped whisky, brandy, red wine, white wine, and the few remaining medicated wines.

Beer and other malt liquors never have been included in the United States Pharmacopoeia. The drug in beer beside alcohol is lupulin, a mild narcotic derived from the hops. Even the extract of lupulin is now gone from the pharmacopoeia.

The United States Pharmacopoeia, therefore, now contains no alcoholic beverages—spirits, wines, or malt liquors—among official medicinal agents.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks an article from the same journal headed "Physicians protest against beer," together with the names of the physicians making the protest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be inserted in the RECORD together with the names.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PHYSICIANS PROTEST AGAINST BEER.

The following protest against the manufacture and sale of beer and other malt liquors for medical purposes has been signed by 104 well-known physicians of the United States from some 20 different States and sent by the organizing committee of physicians to Government officials. The list includes the president, vice president, and three members of the pharmacopoeial convention having in charge the ninth revision of the United States Pharmacopoeia. There are the names of editors of medical journals, of four former presidents of the American Medical Association, of professors in 23 medical schools and colleges, physicians connected with the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, the Burke Foundation, and the Mayo Foundation, with the Life Extension Institute and 18 well-known hospitals in 9 States. There are also physicians connected with local, State, and national public health service. The protest has been signed by over 450 additional physicians in the State of Massachusetts:

To whom it may concern:

The undersigned physicians of the United States desire to place on record their conviction that the manufacture and sale of beer and other malt liquors for medicinal purposes should not be permitted. Malt liquors never have been listed in the United States Pharmacopoeia as official medicinal remedies. They serve no medical purpose which can not be satisfactorily met in other ways, and that without the danger of cultivating the beverage use of an alcoholic liquor.

PRODUCTION AND SALE OF COTTON.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wish to say a word or two in line with what has been said by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Statistics show that we have exported more cotton since August, 1920, than the American crop of 1921 will be. We have consumed in the United States since August, 1920, nearly as much as the American crop of 1921 will be. If the American crop should be 7,000,000 bales this year, it will require 5,000,000 bales of that amount to supply the American mills. That would leave only 2,000,000 bales out of this crop to go where more than 7,000,000 bales went before.

Mr. President, the statistical position of cotton indicates that we are facing a cotton famine. Why is it that cotton is selling below the cost of production? I have always favored regulating the cotton exchanges, if they could be regulated. I do not want to hurt any agency that may help in the distribution of the crop or contribute toward carrying out the law of supply and demand; but I am thoroughly convinced to-day that the New York Cotton Exchange and, perhaps, the New Orleans Cotton Exchange also are standing in opposition to the operation of the law of supply and demand. We know that the 150,000,000 and odd spindles operating in the world need more than the amount of cotton that we are going to be able to produce in America this year, far more than we can supply, and yet we are confronted with a situation to-day where the price of cotton is below the cost of production. For the best grade of cotton the price to-day is 16.82 cents a pound.

Some of my friends in the Northern States do not understand what is meant when they see the price of cotton quoted at 16½ or 17 cents a pound. That is the top-notch price; it ranges all the way down from that figure to 10 cents perhaps. So the highest point of the price to-day is 16 and 17 cents, and it ranges on back down to 9 or 10 cents.

Mr. President, I repeat that that is below the cost of production, and no country is justified through its constituted authority in permitting any condition of things to exist that denies to those who produce the wherewithal to clothe the world a fair price and a living profit. It is inexcusable and indefensible for any country to sit silent and permit products to be forced upon the market below the cost of production; and yet that is what we see to-day in the cotton market.

What office is the exchange performing in this critical time for the cotton farmers of the United States? Within the four walls of the New York Cotton Exchange some strange things occur each day. Let me read to the Senate a line from the market report of yesterday, and show you how the cotton industry of thirty-odd million American people is affected by the various things that come into the minds of the speculators on the New York Cotton Exchange. Listen:

NEW YORK COTTON.

NEW YORK, November 14.

Optimism over the prospect for limitation of naval armaments was considered responsible for an advance of nearly a cent a pound in the cotton market during to-day's early trading.

What on earth did any prospect of disarmament in the future have to do with the cotton market on the exchange in New York on yesterday, God, and God only, knows. Optimism regarding the outlook for disarmament affected the cotton gamblers as they stood around the pit of the New York Cotton Exchange yesterday. While they were feeling good, and they imagined that the situation look rosy in some direction, they permitted the price of cotton to go up nearly a cent a pound. Later on in the day they got to feeling badly, after they ate their lunches. Some indisposition or indigestion seized some of them, and they broke the price back down about what it gained while they were feeling good. So goes the exchange.

Are we going to permit that condition to exist? There never was a better time than now to stop them, to cut their heads smooth off. There never was a time when it was better for the producer to be drawn up in battle array on the one side against certain spinners and speculators upon the other and fight out this question and decide whether or not the producer shall have a fair price and a living profit.

Why do I say that? Because the supply of cotton is so small, the demand for cotton is so great, the threat of a cotton famine so imminent, that there never was a better time for the producer to see whether or not he can live and continue to produce cotton when he holds the whip hand; and he does hold it now. If he holds out of this crop 3,000,000 bales, as I believe he will do, he can shut down the spinning industry of the world in April of next year. Will he do it? Yes; he will do it. In spite of those who sit with their machine guns in the cliffs shooting him from the exchange breastworks, he will hold his cotton, when he knows that he will double the price in doing so.

There is not any excuse now, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has said, for cotton remaining at a low price. The horizon is clear so far as German peace is concerned. The railroad strike is out of the way. With nothing of a disturbing nature along the horizon, with increasing demand, and with the smallest cotton crop in 30 years, cotton is still selling below the cost of production.

Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] has called attention to a very serious fact here to-day, that the per capita indebtedness of the United States is greater than the per capita circulation. I do not know what the Federal Reserve Board is doing with regard to permitting money to be loaned on cotton. I quoted here a few days ago a statement from a member of the board at Atlanta saying that they would lend money on cotton to the extent of 80 per cent of its value for 12 months. I do not know whether they are talking one way and acting another or not.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. In the statement which I made I did not allow for taxes—State, county, or municipal; but I will say to my friend from Alabama that according to the statement of the War Finance Corporation, now lying on my desk in my office, they have not loaned one cent to the State of Georgia, or to the Senator's State, or to any other southern State around us.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am sorry to hear that. Our people can not be deceived. They must be dealt with fairly. You can not write with chalk marks on a blackboard that this thing or that thing can now be done and is being done, when it is not being done, and accomplish results. If the farmer can be enabled to hold his cotton off the market—and no honest man or woman will deny him the right to have a price that will yield a profit—he can compel a fair price and a living profit. It is the duty of the Government to see that he has a fair chance in the struggle for existence, and aid ought to be given him, especially when one of the institutions of the Government, the Federal Reserve Board, is largely responsible for his sad plight to-day.

Mr. President, I quoted here a few days ago from a statement given to the Washington Post by the Federal Reserve Board. It did not contain the facts as to what the rediscount rate was in various places. Reading from that report, I said that the rediscount rate at the Atlanta bank was 5 per cent. That was a mistake. It is  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent; but New York has a rate of 4 or  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, I believe. Now, why is it, I ask, in all honesty and fairness, that for the benefit of Wall Street, where the speculators congregate and the gamblers hold high carnival in the exchanges, the Government will reduce the rediscount rate of the speculators to  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent and hold it up to  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent for the producer of the American cotton crop? Is there anything fair in that? Is there anything honest or just in that? Yet that is the situation that we have to-day.

Mr. President, I expect to spend some time, with other Senators, in calling upon the cotton producers to hold out of this crop and off the market 2,000,000 bales or more. If they will do that, the time is coming in the early spring when the spinner will have no cotton to spin, when he will have to go out and buy it, when he can not get it in the cotton exchange. The dog-tail stuff that they tender on contracts will not feed a cotton mill, and they will have to go out in the open market then and buy from the man who produced it. I look to see cotton sell for 30 cents next spring, maybe higher than that, and then what are you going to see? You are going to see every yard of cloth from that time on—the cotton having been bought maybe for 15 cents a pound—sold on the basis of the cost of the raw material at 30 cents or 35 cents, or whatever it is, so that the producer will have been robbed, and the consumer will have been robbed, and nobody benefited except the speculator and certain spinners.

Mr. President, agriculture is the most important industry in the country. It is the cornerstone upon which all other industries rest. Without it there would be no life in the Republic. It is the industry of all industries that must be safeguarded and protected; and yet how are we treating it to-day? You are just kicking it around. No definite plan has the majority in Congress or the party in power to protect the interests of the agricultural industry of the United States.

Rome neglected her agricultural industry. That is the first great crime she committed, and from that time on she commenced to totter to her fall. This Government to-day is pursuing a policy which permits the agricultural products of the West to sell under the cost of production. Potatoes out there are selling under the cost of production; wheat, corn, cattle, your main products, and our money crop, cotton, are selling under the cost of production, while the gamblers in the exchange flourish in evil doing. They can get all the money they want through the Federal reserve system at  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, while the cotton farmers of my section must face a rediscount rate of  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.

Do you know what that means, Senators? They do not lend money to the individual. They lend through a bank. The individual presents himself at a local bank, and he says:

"I want to borrow some money on this cotton."

The local banker says: "I will take it up with the Federal reserve bank and see what can be done for you. I suppose you are aware of the fact that I have got to indorse your paper. I have got to put the wealth of my bank back of your paper."

"I understand that."

"I have got to pay the bank at Atlanta  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent for you before we can get a dollar. Now, what am I going to receive for the risk that I take for you?"

The States have fixed legal rates of interest, some of them 6, some 7, and my State has a rate of 8 per cent. The individual has to pay an interest rate to the local banker, he has to pay that rediscount rate to the Federal reserve bank, and God only knows how much it is before he gets through. It may be 10 or 12 per cent. To Wall Street the rate is  $4\frac{1}{2}$ , but to him it is  $5\frac{1}{2}$ . Why that difference of 1 per cent? Are we putting a premium upon speculation? Are we encouraging the devilish work of those who pillage and plunder the agricultural masses of America, and are we making it more difficult by placing obstacles in the way of the poor man in distress to borrow money to meet his needs? That is what is occurring, Senators. That is exactly the situation which confronts us to-day.

I have about reached the conclusion that it would be well to suspend the operation of the cotton exchanges for 90 days at least. We could not be hurt. The producer then would not have any gun fired on him from smoke screens and ambush, where those who could borrow money at a small rate of interest could come and with a very few dollars deal in cotton futures. It does not take much money to speculate in a hundred bales of cotton, or a thousand, or fifty thousand, but the farmer holding it has his year's toil in it, has the cost of production from the standpoint of money, in fertilizer and labor and implements, and all that.

Mr. President, we will soon have a meeting to discuss this question and to decide what should be done. I myself am ready to have the activities of the exchanges suspended for a time. There never could be a better time for that, I repeat, because we have a small production of cotton now. If we had an overproduction, it would be different, but with the small supply of cotton and with the increased and increasing demand there never was a better time than now to start the matter of getting along without a gambling exchange.

Why should there be a gambling exchange to fix the price of produce? Why is it necessary, where men and women consume articles, to have somebody speculating or gambling in them on the street corner? Why not let the law of supply and demand be untrammelled in its operation, unhampered and unhindered by any gambling den anywhere in the country?

Mr. President, we were told a while back, when an increase in the appropriation for the purpose of building a big Navy was asked, that a lot of people were out of employment and that the expenditure of that money by the Government would afford them employment. What would such a course as that mean? It would mean the taking of money out of the pockets of the taxpayers of America to give certain people a livelihood.

We are simply asking that the Federal Reserve Board shall be required to supply the money necessary to meet the needs of agriculture.

Why should we be paying  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent? Senators, some tell us that Germany is in a woeful fix; that the German mark is worth only so much in certain countries; that it is practically valueless. Let me call the Senate's attention to this significant fact, brought to my attention by the Senator from Georgia, that Germany is prosperous, Germany is getting along well within the confines of the German Empire. Her people are busy, everybody is at work, her industries are going, her cotton mills are moving, and there is no sign of distress in all the broad expanse of the German Empire. Why is that? Because that mark, however little you may value it, circulates freely from man to man and woman to woman, and meets the need of every one, be he laboring man, mechanic at the bench, blacksmith at the forge, or farmer in his field. He gets the wherewith in exchange for his produce. That presents a situation which thoughtful statesmen here might well consider.

What are we doing? The Senator from Georgia has pointed out that the per capita circulation is smaller than the per capita indebtedness. With the accumulated gold of the world, mountain high, we stand upon its summit, waving the golden scepter, with starvation in some places, 6,000,000 men out of employment, and the agricultural industry on the decline in this, the greatest country on the globe.

"What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul," and what shall it profit a nation if it gain the gold of the whole world and injuriously affect the mood and break the morale of its people, turn laborers out of employment, and strike down agriculture in the markets of the country?

That is the condition we have under the operation of the Federal Reserve Board, which the President continues to hold in place and power, a board discredited and repudiated by the honest business men of the South and West. And yet that board still holds its position. What is the tie that binds? Will somebody on the Republican side tell me what is the tie that binds? Why do you not turn that board out? You say it was appointed by President Wilson. Yes; and what a change of attitude in the board since Wilson appointed it—Democrats and Republicans they claimed they were. I repudiate all of them, without regard to party. I have been doing that ever since January, and will continue to do it. I repudiate them for being unfaithful to honest business in America. I impeach the business integrity of that board because of its treatment of the agricultural industry of the South and West. I indict that board for raising the rediscount rate from 3 to 7 per cent and charge that its members did it for the purpose of making it impossible for the farmers of the South and West to obtain the money needed to meet their needs in the hour of their great distress.

Mr. President, if that board is guilty of that President Harding ought to remove it. I hold to that view, and there are Senators who are sitting around me who hold to that view, and there are some on the other side who hold to that view. Then why will the President persist in holding at the head of this great banking system of America a board utterly discredited and repudiated by the American people?

I ask again, what is the tie that binds? Is it true that Wall Street will not permit you to turn this board out? Is there anything in the suggestion that Wall Street wants this board continued in power, that Wall Street promised to reward that board for special service rendered?

We frequently discuss vital questions here, and we are to pass on one in a day or two, as to whether seats in this body shall be bartered like sheep in the market place. We are going to determine in a day or two whether men with their millions can wade through the primary and purchase votes, poison public sentiment, buy up newspapers, and achieve a seat in this the greatest law-making body in the world; and that is a very great question.

Mr. President, there is no greater question touching the American people as a people than that of the control of the money supply and the credit of a hundred million people. When you turn that power over to a committee of seven, as you do when you put such power into the hands of the Federal Reserve Board as presently constituted, you give it the power of life and death over the business of the country. It can pick out its favorites, as it has done in Wall Street. It can reduce the rediscount rate to one concern, and raise it to another, and thus showing favors, hamstringing various kinds of industries in the United States.

I submit these observations for the consideration of Senators. There is not going to be any end to this. As long as the farmers of the West are carrying their produce to the market and selling it at prices under the cost of production, and as long as the farmers of the South are doing the same thing, I intend to protest, and others on this side are joining in that protest, as well as a few on the other side.

Mr. President, there are few on the other side who join with us in protesting against the treatment of the American farmer, but a very few.

There should not be any politics in this. We ought to work together here for the good of this great American industry, for cotton, corn, cattle, wheat, and all the agricultural products of our country. To that end there should not be any dividing line in this body. We ought to strike hands about a common center for an honest and square deal for the farmers of America.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is about to discuss a very important measure, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dial	Harris	King
Caldier	Ernst	Harrison	Laod
Cameron	Fernald	Heflin	La Follette
Capper	Fletcher	Jones, Wash.	McCormick
Caraway	France	Kendrick	McKellar
Cummins	Gooding	Kenyon	McKinley
Curtis	Hale	Keyes	McNary

Myers	Page	Spencer	Warren
Nelson	Poinexter	Stanley	Watson, Ga.
New	Pomerene	Sutherland	Williams
Nicholson	Ransdell	Swanson	Willis
Norris	Robinson	Trammell
Oddie	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Overman	Smith	Walsh, Mass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION LAW.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, if I correctly caught the words of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], he made the most astounding statement of a legal proposition that I have ever heard. I understood him to say that in a republic there could be no such thing as personal rights.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I did not make any such statement as that.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will the Senator kindly repeat his statement?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I said no personal liberty, in the sense that no man has a right to do what the majority have said should not be done.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will the Senator repeat his statement as he formerly made it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is exactly as I stated it. Of course, I did not say that in a republic no man has any personal rights. I did not make such a statement as that.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. But the Senator did say he had no personal liberty?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No personal liberty, in the sense that no man has a right to do what the majority have said shall not be done.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Even that is an unsound proposition of law. There are some things which belong to the individual, as an individual, and belong to him in a democracy or a republic more fully than anywhere else. It is not within the power of the majority to take away those personal liberties. I could cite so many instances in disproof of what the Senator alleged that he himself would admit that he made a statement which he can not sustain.

Does the Senator mean to say that there could be passed by this Congress or by any legislature a law that could prevent marriage, prevent divorce, prevent the rule of a father over a child, of a mother over her child, or the right of property, the right of freedom of locomotion within the bounds of liberty, within the bounds of the statutes? Does the Senator mean to state that Congress or any other legislative body could limit his or my right of occupation, our right to choose where we shall work, at what we shall work, and on what terms we shall work, if we can agree with those who desire our services? The Senator's proposition can not be maintained.

Neither can that of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who is not present at this moment. I wish very much that he were present. This is twice that he has made an argument on the floor of the Senate that amounts to about this: That personal liberties are to be vested in the discretion of petty officers of the law, and that the only redress of a private citizen whose personal rights have been invaded is to have those officers arraigned and punished. Mr. President, that is not the law, and I am prepared to maintain my position against the Senator from Minnesota or any other lawyer in this body or elsewhere.

Let me say once again by way of introduction, lest my position be misunderstood, that I, in part, represent a banner prohibition State. The very first speeches I ever made were temperance speeches. In my own county I helped to win the fight to do away with the barrooms. In the legislature of my State I did the same thing. Those were the days when prohibition was in the minority, ridiculed, despised, fighting battles at a great disadvantage. In those days we had no campaign fund.

There were no papers which we could subsidize, no lecturers who were paid, no lobbyists to come here or to the State capitals to lobby measures through. The case had to stand on its merits. We pleaded it before the people upon its merits, and it may interest the Senate to know how, in one State at least, we gradually obtained prohibition.

The very first step that we took was to throw a line around the churches by the enactment of a statute reading "no intoxicating liquors shall be sold within 1 mile of New Hope Church," for instance, "during the hours of worship." From that we made the whole mile free of the traffic during the whole year. Then came the camp grounds. We made it illegal for anyone to vend spirituous liquors on the camp grounds or within a certain distance thereof—3 miles, as I remember.

I was in the courthouse one day when a white man, who was tried by a white jury, prosecuted by a white solicitor general, and the law given to the jury by a white judge, was convicted of having violated the law at a negro camp ground. By those slow approaches to prohibition we spread the dry spots one after the other all over the State of Georgia until at length the cause came before the highest law-making body of my State. The best we could do or sought to do was to pass a local-option law giving to each county a free referendum vote to decide for itself whether or not there should be open barrooms in that county. Under that law we voted whisky out of 135 counties, leaving only the four or five big cities, which took the position that the country counties had no right to dictate to them as to what they should do in regard to their barrooms. They claimed the right to home rule; they claimed the right to decide that for themselves.

For a long time that plea maintained its ground, but finally there was passed in Georgia a State-wide bone-dry prohibition law drawn up at the instance of an Ohio lobbyist, with the aid of a man who had been lobbying for the whisky interests for years and who was probably paid a larger fee by the "dry" men than the "wets" were able to pay him. The moment he got the law through, without referendum to the people, he left the State of Georgia bone-dry and went to New York, where he could get something to drink. His name was T. B. Felder. That law was never referred to our people; they never voted on it; they never had a chance to vote on it.

Now, the lobbyist, who represents not so much the real temperance sentiment over this country as he represents those drinks that aspire to take the place of wine and beer, says that a doctor shall not prescribe beer or wine for the sick. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] on yesterday, reading his argument, declining to be interrupted, took the very life out of the fourth amendment, emasculated the fifth amendment, ignored the fourteenth amendment, and passed beyond the eighteenth amendment. I know quite well that speeches in the Senate do not change votes, but they change public opinion; they do have weight outside. What I want the country to know is that we lawyers, dictating to the doctors—one profession assuming to boss another—in trying to forbid by statute the prescription of beer or wine in cases where the doctors think it necessary are violating other clauses of the supreme law that are immensely more valuable than any one human life or any statute.

In this connection I am going to ask Senators to listen while I read a few words of James Otis, of Massachusetts, who made the noble fight against writs of assistance by which the King sought by what were really general warrants to invade the personal liberties which are now so much ridiculed, belittled, and trampled under foot. We have been told by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that it is all-sufficient to base the discretion in a petty officer, provided we punish the officer afterwards, if he has acted without proper evidence. As well might we seek to restore the bloom of the faded rose as to restore the self-respect of a man or a woman who has had that self-respect violated by one of the petty prohibition officers acting upon his own discretion without any evidence whatever. James Otis, in 1761, denounced the writs of assistance as—

The worst instrument of arbitrary power, the most destructive of English liberty, and the fundamental principles of law that ever was found in any English law book, since they placed the liberty of every man in the hands of every petty officer.

That applies to you; it applies to me; it applies to your wife; it applies to mine; it applies to our children and to our grandchildren. We are asked to take action that will have that result, and we are told we ought to take it because the officer can be punished after he has violated the self-respect of those who are nearest and dearest to us. An ounce of prevention is worth a ton of cure.

I beg leave to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are asked to violate laws that are older than a thousand years—the right of every person to be secure in his person from every kind of search or seizure, unless he is caught in the act of crime; the right of that person to be secure in his luggage if he is traveling; in his vehicle if he is traveling; in his room at a hotel if he is stopping at one; and in the house in which he lives. We are told here that we will protect the sanctity of the home.

What makes the sanctity of the home? Is it the shingle roof, or the walls, or the chimney, or the floor? The sanctity of the home is made by the human beings that are in it, and surely those human beings should not be less respected by the law when they leave the home.

Let me go back to Magna Charta, and of that a very distinguished author, George Boutwell, on the Constitution of the United States, has said, quoting James Otis again:

Said James Otis, with the voice of inspiration: "Liberty is the gift of God and can not be annihilated. Old Magna Charta," said he, "was not the beginning of all things, nor did it rise on the border of chaos out of the unformed mass. A time may come when Parliament shall declare every American charter void, but the natural, inherent, and insuperable rights of the colonists will remain, and, whatever becomes of charters, can never be violated until the general conflagration."

Beyond the law book and the charter, beyond the code and its written word, is the law of nature, existing everywhere, under every sun, wherever the stars shine, wherever the seas ebb and flow; and those natural liberties can not be abolished by anything that can be done here. Blackstone says when Parliament makes laws that are shocking to common sense and to common reason and to the common instincts of humanity they are void; and every lawyer here recollects one of the illustrations he gave, that whoever drew blood in the streets of Bologna should suffer death, and it was held that the law did not apply to a physician who drew it in the effort to save life instead of taking it.

But I go back to the oldest of these charters, and let us see what it says—the charter of 1215, wrung from the hands of a cowardly and tyrannical king on that summer's day in the small meadow near London, Runnymede. Let us see what it says—just one clause of chapter 29:

No freeman's body shall be taken—

What does that mean? Taken into custody—not for a minute, not for an instant.

No freeman's body shall be taken, nor imprisoned, nor dis seized, nor outlawed, nor banished, nor in any ways be damaged, nor shall the King—

And so forth.

Then we come to the charter of King Henry III. It contains the same principle, showing how precious it was to the people of England, who fought on so many battle fields to wring these rights from their rulers, the feudal lords who exercised over them the power of life and death.

Before the recess I mentioned here the instance of Watt Tyler and his daughter. The tax collector was seeking to collect an excise tax out of that girl upon the ground that she had reached the age of adolescence. Her father said she had not reached it. This petty officer, clothed with his brief authority, and drunk with it, said he would test it himself, and he proceeded to try to do so; and the father of the girl struck him dead; and he was justified in the eyes of every Englishman, just as he would now be by our unwritten law, wherever the American jury has in it the red blood of Americanism.

The man who unlawfully lays his hands upon our women does so at the risk of his life, and whenever that ceases to be the case we will cease to be the great people that we now are.

The charter of Henry III:

No freeman shall be taken or imprisoned—

The word "taken" meaning to put your hand on him, seize him; that is, the taking of the person, and it shall not be done without due process of law.

We go on down further to the charter of Edward I, one of the greatest of English kings, and it repeats the exact language:

No freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or dispossessed—

Except by due process of law and the verdict of a jury of his peers.

That is the old law. We fought for seven years to establish the principles that when our fathers came to Jamestown and to Plymouth Rock they brought those principles with them, and that they had a right to enjoy them here. After seven years of strife, under difficulties almost impossible to describe, they made good that pretension; and upon those old charters and the unwritten English constitution rests our law, rest our constitutions, rest our rights as men.

In the Virginia constitution the Bill of Rights was written in this way by George Mason, a State paper which, as I have stated before, is in my judgment far above the Declaration of Independence, and anybody who compares the two papers will see that Thomas Jefferson quoted from George Mason, and did not always do so accurately.

ART. X. That general warrants, whereby an officer or messenger may be commanded to search suspected places without evidence of a fact committed, or to seize any person or persons not named, or whose offense is not particularly described and supported by evidence, are grievous and oppressive and ought not to be granted.

Now we come to our own Constitution, the fourth amendment of which has been construed away. That is what they are trying to do—construe it away. They can do it if they like. They will hear from the people on it. It has not been long since we heard from the people of New Jersey upon this very question, and the verdict was not favorable to those who construed it away. It was favorable to those who upheld it. Now, let us see:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrant shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Is there any lawyer, is there any man practiced in the gentle art of construing language, who can get the word "warrants" out of both of those clauses? It can not be done. Only a comma separates the two clauses:

The right of the people to be secure * * * against unreasonable searches and seizures.

And yet the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] seriously argue to this assembly, composed largely of lawyers, that a reasonable search can be made without a warrant! Upon what basis? Upon the basis that the little officer or the big officer who makes the search and the seizure believes he has the right to make it. Why, if that is the law, nobody is safe; nobody's house is safe; nobody's safe is safe. The word "warrants" is implied in both those clauses, and you can not construe them together to save your life without putting the word "warrant" into both.

And no warrant shall issue except—

They laid down the conditions. Does any lawyer mean to contend that because some bailiff or constable or policeman may suspect that your house contains these things that he is authorized to seize, he can violate your home at any hour of day or night? No such decision ever has been made, and in my judgment no such decision ever will be made. When you do it, you will have impaired the fourth amendment, you will have ignored the fourteenth amendment, you will have gone far beyond the eighteenth amendment.

Which is the more valuable—life, liberty, and property, or the mere apprehension that somebody will take a drink of beer inside of his house, or in a Pullman car, or in his motor car? Do you really mean to say that in your heart of hearts you believe that life, liberty, and property are less valuable than the prevention of some person who wants to take a drink of wine, as Jesus did every day of his life, or a drink of beer, as Bismarck did every day of his life?

Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota—who read his speech and who did not want to be interrupted; I am not reading mine, and I will be interrupted by any Senator who wants to interrupt—read case after case of State courts, where the State police powers were stretched until you could hear their joints crack. Why did he not read from the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States? That is the highest legal authority outside of the Constitution.

Here is as far as the Supreme Court has ever gone. I read from page 362, paragraph 617, of Boutwell on the Constitution of the United States, a standard work:

The court held that in the case of stolen goods the owner from whom they were stolen would be entitled to possession, and that, in such cases, search and seizure would be justifiable.

Upon what evidence? Upon the evidence of some man in the neighborhood who swore to the facts, described the goods, and described the place where he believed them to be held in possession. That is what the court decided, and that is good law. I read from the next paragraph, 618, on the same page:

It was held that in a case of stolen goods the owner from whom they were stolen would be entitled to possession, and that, in such cases, searches and seizure would be justifiable.

It was also held that in the case of dutiable articles that the Government, having an interest in them for the payment of duties thereon, might, until such duties were paid, keep them under observation and pursue them and drag them from concealment.

That is far removed from the State court decisions picked up here and there, as you pick up mercenary troops, some of which the Senator from Minnesota referred to in his written argument, which would not suffer an interruption; that the Federal Government, which is free and sovereign within its limits, might not itself search and seize without warrant, but could keep suspected goods under observation, because it had an interest in them to the extent of the duty which they ought to pay as they came through the customhouse.

In this connection the Supreme Court held, as stated by Boutwell in section 620 of the same work:

From these cases and others of a like nature, the court distinguished the attempt to extort from a party his private books and papers and make him liable for a penalty, or the forfeiture of his property. Indeed, the latter process was likened to the writs of assistance that in 1761 were denounced by James Otis.

What else do you do but make a man furnish evidence against himself when you force him to put his feet into tracks which you say the criminal made, accusing him of having been the criminal? You can not force him to do it. If he is forced to do it, the evidence is inadmissible.

You can not search a man's person illegally to get evidence against him and use it against him; else you are encouraging the violation of the supreme law of the land.

You can not search his house to find evidence against him, because in the broadest way it is making him furnish evidence against himself; and the old, old law, old as the hills, old as the mountains, and as pure as the snow that rests upon their summits, is that no man shall be made to criminate himself.

The fourteenth amendment, Mr. President, comes within the same class. It is true that the prohibition against depriving the citizen of right, liberty, and property, goes directly to the State; but, except in those cases in which, by necessary inference, the power is reserved to the Federal Government, that which the Federal Government says the States may not do, the Federal Government may not do.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, in that connection, if the Senator will permit an interruption, there is no parity of reasoning between the power of the State and the power of the Federal Government to do these things. The theory under which the Constitution was written was that the Federal Government should exercise only delegated powers, and the powers not delegated were reserved to the States, respectively, and to the people.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. STANLEY. There is a broad power to search and to seize, and a power to apprehend for a criminal offense, or for a breach of the peace, essentially a police power. The police powers of the States are determined only by the will of the people of those States, and a State can vest its own government with any powers not prohibited to it by the Bill of Rights.

The Federal Government, on the other hand, can exercise no police power not expressly delegated, and a decision of a State court, as to its control of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors, or the regulation of gambling, or of nuisances, or the punishment for homicide or larceny, has no relevancy whatever when it comes to the exercise of the same power by the Federal Government. The only reason the State governments can not search and seize is because of the inhibition of the fourth and fifth amendments. Otherwise, State decisions on the question of the exercise of police power by the Federal Government are more than worthless.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has stated, in more forcible language than I was able to use, the thought that was in my own mind.

Mr. STANLEY. I did not hear the Senator's whole argument, and I want to call the Senator's attention to another point, to which I hope to advert later on, but for fear I shall not, I take the liberty of calling it to the attention of the distinguished Senator from Georgia.

Argument after argument has been made here, for hours in length, and the country has been flooded with propaganda touching the right to seize and to search the person of an apprehended offender, notwithstanding the fact that they who erected this man of straw to knock him down know that this so-called Stanley amendment does not touch top, side, or bottom, the right to seize and search the individual. As the amendment was originally drawn, it protected the "person and property" of the citizen from unreasonable search and seizure, just as the fourth amendment does.

It was objected on the part of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and others that an inhibition against the searching of the person might be construed as an interference with the searching of dangerous criminals for weapons or other means of escape or injury to those arresting them. That is where the right to search and seize for such offenses as that touches closely upon the right to search a person for weapons, or for concealed bottles of alcoholic liquor, or something of that sort, and I agreed that the word "person" should be stricken out of the amendment. When it was offered it read "person or property." The Senator from South Dakota objected, and I had the word "person" stricken out in the Senate, as the Senator will remember. That our opponents know full well. Mr. Wheeler and those who voice his sentiments, if they are not mere conduits for his words, know that that question is not raised under this amendment, and never was raised. As far as the Stanley amendment goes, as far as our opposition to this infraction of the constitutional rights of the citizen goes, there is no question about the right of an officer to apprehend and to search the person of any suspected offender, whether for concealed weapons or liquor or anything else, and in the face of that the Senator from Minnesota read a learned thesis on the subject of the right to apprehend the individual and to search his person. No wonder he would not submit to an interruption. No such right is claimed by the advocates of this amendment. We have claimed that the home, including the curtilage, and the property of the citizen, divested from his person, shall be exempt from search and seizure without a warrant, and that is the question they have not touched, and that is the question they dare not touch.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. That is the reason why I was touching it. I do not know how it is in other States, but my understanding of the law in my own State is that the sheriff himself can not arrest a man, or anyone else, without a warrant unless the person has committed a crime in his presence and is about to escape; that in the absence of the sheriff a private citizen may arrest when a crime is committed in his presence, but he must turn the person over to the sheriff at the earliest possible moment and swear out a warrant.

Mr. STANLEY. And he makes the arrest at his own peril.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Yes; he makes it at his own peril; and, of course, it follows that the sheriff, as a matter of self-defense, as a matter of security, can search the person to find whether or not there is a weapon upon the prisoner which might enable him to escape jail or to make a fatal assault upon the arresting officer. There is no general power anywhere which gives a man who suspects another the right to subject that other person to the humiliation and disgrace of an arrest.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] said that this law could be enforced, and he read some impressive figures and some forcible statements upon that subject. I make the statement here and now that there never was a law which could be enforced if that law violated common sense and violated what the citizen thought were his personal rights. The prohibition law is not now being enforced anywhere. Let the officers say what they will, it is not being enforced. We have a bone-dry law in Georgia, and there is more whisky in Georgia than there was before the law was passed.

It is a well-known fact that anybody who wants liquor here in Washington City can get it if he can furnish the price, and we are told in the papers that this Government, "the best that the world ever knew," furnished a military escort to wines and brandies and champagnes and beers which are to be consumed by those who are here to disarm the world and establish universal peace.

Mr. President, if that were not ludicrous enough, the Jew can not worship his God without violating the law or getting an exemption. The Catholic can not worship his God without violating the law or getting an exemption. As my friend the Senator from Kentucky knows, there was a war inside the Catholic Church for centuries because they took away from the laity the right to drink the wine and confined it to the priests. The laity wanted some of it. The priests took it away from them, and the priests still have it; and now we do not want either the laity or the priests to have it, but they are both going to have it; you need not doubt that. We Baptists, we Methodists, we Episcopalians, we Presbyterians can not worship God without violating the law or getting an exemption from it. That is a queer state of affairs. It seems to me somebody is getting badly mixed on general principles.

If I had the time, I would like to read where God Himself tells how much wine you must bring as your religious gift when you worship. Of course, God did not drink the wine; the priests drank it; but God gave the order for it, and the wine had to be furnished.

Everybody who has read the New Testament knows that Christ himself drank wine every day of His life. There was not any water fit to drink in Palestine in those days, and I doubt if they have any there now.

Mr. Jefferson said, after having spent seven years in France and traveling all over the country, that everybody, young and old, drank wine; that the water was not fit to drink; and that he never saw an intoxicated man or woman during the whole seven years. That is the testimony of Thomas Jefferson.

The ceremonial, and about the only one that surrounds the primitive faith of Jesus Christ, commemorates the last supper in which He Himself did not drink nor eat, but in which He handed out the broken loaf and the wine cup. Now, we have become so rigidly righteous that we want to dictate to everybody what he or she shall do.

All history shows the vanity of sumptuary laws. They can not be enforced. Fashion may be the law to the lady of fashion, and she may follow it because others do, but let the law say what she must wear and how she shall wear it, and she will disobey the law. We can not put a limit to the cost of entertainment, to the cost of dress, to the cost of personal luxuries. It has been tried, ah, tried time and again. It runs counter to that natural liberty of man which makes every bird want a free wing to fly with, and every animal free feet to walk upon.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia permit an inquiry?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I did not have the opportunity of hearing the Senator's address this afternoon, except the concluding part. Did the Senator discuss the question as to whether or not the eighteenth amendment carries with it the same authority to deal with police matters and police powers of the State on the question of prohibition and its enforcement as that possessed by the States themselves?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. No; I did not discuss that question.

Mr. KING. I should have been glad to hear the Senator discuss that proposition because it is a very important one.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that following the morning business on Thursday I shall discuss the Willis-Campbell antiprescription bill.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the Secretary may state the next committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 16, the committee proposes to strike out the words "and the President may sell to the corporation," and on page 5, lines 2 and 3, to strike out the words "and shall be sold by the President without recourse," so as to read:

Sec. 19(a). The corporation may purchase from the President any bonds, notes, or other securities acquired by the President either before or after this section takes effect, under authority of the Federal control act, the transportation act, 1920, or the act entitled "An act to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation, and for other purposes," approved November 19, 1919. The aggregate purchases thus made shall not exceed $500,000,000. Any such securities so purchased shall be purchased at the prices, and subject to the discounts, if any, at which acquired by the President.

The amendments were agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next committee amendment is, on page 5, to strike out lines 16 to 25, inclusive, and on page 6 to strike out lines 1 to 12, both inclusive, in the following words:

(d) The proceeds of all bonds, notes, or other securities sold by the President to the corporation or by the corporation as selling agent shall be a fund to be used by the President for the purposes described in section 202 of the transportation act, 1920. Any balance not so required shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

In using any fund or moneys available under this or any other act, for the purposes described in this subdivision, no payments or allowances shall be made to any carrier on account of the so-called inefficiency of labor during the period of Federal control. Such funds and moneys shall not be used in making any settlement between the United States and any carrier which does not forever bar such carrier from setting up any further claim, rights, or demands of any kind or character against the United States growing out of or connected with the possession, use, or operation of such carrier's property by the United States during the period of Federal control.

(e) Whenever used in this section the term "President" includes any agent or agency designated by him under the authority of any of the acts specified in subdivision (a).

Mr. CUMMINS. That is stricken out because the substance of it is contained in an amendment already agreed to. It transfers the amendment to the War Finance Corporation act to an amendment to the transportation act as it ought to be.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is, on page 6, line 13, to strike out "(f)" and insert "(d)"; in the same line, after "corporation," to strike out the words "and the President"; in line 14, after "subdivision (a)," to insert the words "of this section"; and in line 18 to insert after "(d)" the words "of this section," so as to make the paragraph read:

(d) The power conferred on the corporation by subdivision (a) of this section may be exercised at any time prior to July 1, 1922, notwithstanding the limitation contained in the proviso to section 1 of this act. The powers conferred on the corporation in subdivisions (b), (c), and (d) of this section may be exercised at any time during the life of the corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is, on page 6, line 20, to strike out "(g)" and insert "(e)."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. That completes the amendments proposed by the committee, and in so far as I am concerned I shall not ask for any further consideration of the bill to-night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the pending railroad bill there are a number of quotation marks which have no place in the bill. If there is no objection, they will be stricken out. It is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, November 16, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, November 15, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, we would say our Father, and this is the name that unites us all. Through Thy providence the gate of high privilege is still open. May we not enter it alone, but be Thou with us. As the hours are big with duty, O may they be rich with results. Thou who canst hear the falling of a tear and the whisper of a breath, be in all our hearts as a sweet blessing, a rich grace, and as a fadeless blossom. Let Thy kingdom come throughout the earth, and may all oppression, all cruelties, and all things perverse and evil pass away, and may the sun of righteousness, with healing in his wings, fill the skies of the world. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LAYTON rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). For what purpose does the gentleman from Delaware rise?

Mr. LAYTON. I rise to a question of personal privilege. Yesterday, in the course of a rather heated debate on the bill to create a clinic in connection with the juvenile court, I asked of the chairman, who had charge of the bill, the privilege to ask a question. He yielded, and I made the remark to him, "The life of the Nation has been going on for 150 years." Mr. UNDERHILL replied: "It may have been going on for 150 years, but there is no reason why it should not go on for 150 years more, unless some mean, low-down, contemptible, trifling individual wants to stand upon the question of personal liberty when it affects my child, your child, and the children of the people of this District and of the whole country."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to understand whether or not, I having the floor and having just asked a question, the chairman of that committee applied those terms to me. That is what I want to know.

Mr. UNDERHILL. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman, in the view of the Chair, does not raise a question of personal privilege.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Decidedly no.

PRINTING ADDRESSES OF THE PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY OF STATE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which he sends to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution.

Resolved, That 53,000 copies of Senate document 77, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, being the addresses of the President of the United States and of the Secretary of State, delivered before the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments on November 12, 1921, be printed for the use of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I take it that, of course, there will be many public utterances at the conference that will be of great public interest. I have not heard from the conference this morning in any direct way, but I have no doubt that there have been utterances there this morning of public interest. I would like to ask, if I may, if thought has been given to what policy is to be pursued generally with regard to the publication by the Congress of the proceedings of the Conference for the Limitation of Armaments? Is it the thought of the committee that we shall every few days publish—

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, if I may make a very brief statement, I will say that the chairman of the Committee on Printing is away to-day and I am acting as the vice chairman. In the little talks we have had we have expressed personal views, not as a committee, and have rather felt that it should not be the duty of Congress to attempt to print or carry along in print the proceedings. In time they will be officially published, I assume. In this resolution we are asking for a limited publication of the first two speeches by the President and the Secretary of State.

The reason why I adopt the form of procedure of asking unanimous consent instead of calling up H. Res. 223, introduced by me and reported by the Printing Committee, is that the Senate yesterday, by unanimous consent, on the request of Senator LODGE, ordered these addresses printed as a Senate document. That causes the printing of a limited number, and if the House had acted first it would be the same as to numbers, 1,316 copies, distributed as follows: Three hundred and sixty to the House document room, 240 to the Senate document room, 475 to the libraries throughout the country that are depositories, 10 to the Congressional Library, and a few other minor distributions. That is the distribution for all House and Senate documents. The Senate having acted first, under the law the Public Printer is barred from duplication. Therefore all we can do is to ask for a reprint or additional print of the Senate document. The number that this resolution calls for—53,000—will cost $326.48, and will distribute to each Member about one hundred and sixty-odd copies. Members desiring additional copies may buy them at about $6 a thousand.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON], a member of the committee, agrees that the document should be printed, and the committee rather thought that the number ordered was too small, but it is sufficient, however, to let each Member send out about 160 copies, which will come to him through the folding room.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will indulge me, I have no very well-defined views, perhaps, but I have what might be called a hazy sort of a feeling that as a matter of propriety, as well as for other reasons, Congress ought to be very careful about the printing of the proceedings of the conference.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think that it should apply not only to the matter of printing speeches or utterances as documents, but I think it should apply to the insertion of speeches in the RECORD that may be made at that conference. I have no objection to printing the speech of the President of the United States and the Secretary of State in the RECORD of yesterday, and I do not propose to object to printing these as a document at this time. But I hope that this will not be regarded as a precedent whereby, without very full consideration on the part of the proper committee or committees of the House, there will be requests for printing the proceedings of the Disarmament Conference either in the RECORD or as a document.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I believe the gentleman from Washington assured us yesterday that the form in which this resolution is presented requires the distribution to be made through the folding room.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 167. An act for the relief of John H. Rheinlander;

S. 2492. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes";

S. J. Res. 120. Joint resolution providing funds for carrying into effect the provisions of Public, No. 28, Sixty-seventh Congress, approved June 30, 1921;

S. 2210. An act for the relief of Lucy Paradis;

S. 2312. An act to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands on the Fort Peck and Blackfeet Indian Reservations in the State of Montana;

S. 2439. An act for the relief of the West Okanogan irrigation district in the State of Washington;

S. 225. An act for the relief of settlers and town-site occupants of certain lands in the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, Nev.;

S. J. Res. 124. Joint resolution to amend Senate joint resolution 89, approved March 14, 1912, amending the joint resolution to prohibit the exports of coal and other material used in war from any seaport of the United States, approved April 22, 1898;

S. 2532. An act extending the time within which allotments may be made in the Crow Reservation, Mont.; and

S. J. Res. 118. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to obligate funds appropriated for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, to the amount of $236,095 from unexpended balances now in the Treasury.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 7051. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to execute deeds of reconveyance for certain lands in the city of Mount Pleasant, Isabella County, Mich.;

H. R. 8442. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes";

H. R. 8298. An act to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to limitations in criminal cases.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 7108. An act authorizing a per capita payment to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota from their tribal funds held in trust by the United States.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 167. An act for the relief of John H. Rheinlander; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 225. An act for the relief of settlers and town-site occupants of certain lands in the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, Nev.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 2210. An act for the relief of Lucy Paradis; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2312. An act to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands on the Fort Peck and Blackfeet Indian Reservations in the State of Montana; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 2439. An act for the relief of the West Okanogan irrigation district in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 2492. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1921; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2532. An act for extending the time within which allotments may be made in the Crow Reservation, Mont.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. J. Res. 118. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to obligate funds appropriated for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, to the amount of $236,095 from unexpended balances now in the Treasury; to the Committee on Appropriations.

S. J. Res. 120. Joint resolution providing funds for carrying into effect the provisions of Public, No. 28, Sixty-seventh Congress, approved June 30, 1921; to the Committee on Appropriations.

S. J. Res. 124. Joint resolution to amend joint resolution 89, approved March 14, 1912, amending the joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal and other material used in war from any seaport of the United States, approved April 22, 1898; to the Committee on Foreign Commerce.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's desk, under Rule XXIV, the bill H. R. 7108, with a Senate amendment, not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, and I move to concur in the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment provides that before any payment is made hereunder to the Chippewa Indians, Minnesota, they shall in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior ratify and approve the act and accept the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 7108, with a Senate amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 7108. An act authorizing a per capita payment to the Chippewa Indians, Minnesota, from their tribal funds held in trust by the United States.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the Committee on Indian Affairs had a meeting this morning, with a quorum present, and instructed the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] to ask the House to concur in the Senate amendment and pass the bill. The gentleman from South Dakota not being present at the moment, I make the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of limitation of armament.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE RECLASSIFICATION BILL.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8928, being a bill to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field service.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution simply makes in order, on the adoption of the resolution, the right to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union for the consideration of this bill. It is a matter that has had a good deal of attention from Members of Congress. The committee has considered the bill and is ready to have the House act upon it. I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8928, and pending that I would like to see if an agreement as to the time may be reached for general debate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I suggest about three hours as the correct time for general debate, one-half to be controlled by the minority side.

Mr. LEHLBACH. There have been very few requests for time on this side. I do not know what the gentleman from Texas may have had, but it occurs to me that an hour on a side would be ample.

Mr. BLACK. I will say that I have not had many requests, but this is really a very important bill, and it involves a considerable change in the classification of civil employees. For that and for other reasons I thought that we should have at least three hours. If we do not use it we can go on with the bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill 8928 be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the motion, the gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] and one-half by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. LEHLBACH was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the question of classifying the personnel of the employees of the Government has been considered from time to time for the last 20 years. The question was taken up in the administrations of Presidents Roosevelt and Taft, and a commission was appointed by President Taft to consider the question, which it did, and made a report, which, however, was never acted upon in the form of legislation.

The situation in the Government service is substantially this. There are about 1,200 different kinds of jobs in the Government service. These are carried in the estimates at the present time under 2,000 different titles. There are in certain instances six or eight different titles which apparently have no relation to each other, but which in fact describe people holding positions wherein they do identical work. We have salaries paid for certain kinds of work which vary in the different departments. That is to say, we pay a different rate of salary for work in one department than for identical work in another department. It is impossible to give an intelligent idea of what the personnel in a bureau and a division are engaged in by studying the estimates for clerical and other personal service for that division or bureau. The need of uniformity, the need of definiteness, the need of equalization in pay have been undisputed. Congress recognized this fact, and in March, 1919, adopted an act which provided that a joint commission be appointed to settle the question of reclassifying the civil service of the Government, which commission was composed of three Senators and three Members of the House. This commission made its report on the 12th of March, 1920. That report in the House was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. That committee from that time until it made its report a few days ago has been giving careful consideration and exhaustive study to the report of the commission, to the proposed bill which the commission submitted, to various suggestions and such data and information as it could gather from the different sources within the Government service, and has from time to time considered tentatively these drafts of bills until finally they have agreed upon House bill 8928, which is now before the House for consideration.

There is now under way, in charge of a commission, a plan for the reorganization of the departments to prevent duplication of work by divisions and bureaus in different departments, for the coordination of work that is done by such different bureaus and divisions, and for collecting them logically under the appropriate departments and eliminating the overlapping of the same work in more than one department. This work of reorganizing the departments would be incomplete without this complement, namely, the work of reorganizing the personnel within those divisions and bureaus when they have been properly gathered in homogeneous departments. The bill provides for such reclassification and provides for equalization of compensation by means of uniform compensation schedules appropriate for the grade and character of work described, but the chief reason for the legislation, the main object sought to be attained by the bill, is making uniform the classifications, the positions, and the equalizing of the pay. However, exact compensation schedules, exact salary ranges, are a detail which is of greatly less importance than the necessity for the scheme of reclassification and putting that into effect for the sake of creating order out of the present chaos in the civil service.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Can the gentleman state to the House whether or not if this bill should become a law it would increase or decrease the number of employees in the Government service and whether it will increase or decrease the amount paid to them?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think the tendency unquestionably will be to substantially decrease the actual number of employees in the Government service. In respect to the pay, of course much depends upon the manner in which the various positions are allocated to the grades described in the bill, but if all employees were graded at substantially the grading which they now have, regardless of the fact whether they did work commensurate with the grading they now have, and if all employees were retained and conditions were not improved by reason of resulting efficiency in the reorganization of the departments, there would be an increase, due to the fact that certain positions are grossly underpaid at the present time, which the House and various committees understand. There would be an increase under such circumstances which the Assistant Director of the Budget has estimated at not to exceed 3 per cent.

Mr. SNYDER. That is a fair answer to my question, but what I had in mind was this: There seems to be such a pressing movement on the part of Government employees to have this bill enacted into law that I thought it must mean that there would be a considerable increase in the salaries by reason of this reclassification. While it would be an unfortunate thing not to have this reclassification go through, yet at this time I think we should consider carefully the question of whether or not it is going to put a greater burden upon the public.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think that interest is most pronounced among those who hold responsible positions in the civil service, men of scientific and professional attainments, men who do that kind of work, men who take an intelligent interest in the civil service and its efficiency, men who are active in the higher branches of the civil service, rather than among the rank and file of ordinary employees.

The interest of this class is based on the fact, I think, that this bill will provide equality and justice in so far as that is humanly possible, and will also provide opportunity for advancement based on merit, and will in these respects, as well as in other respects, reform, reorganize, and make a rational working organization of the present haphazard, thrown-together civil service which the Government must rely on for its work at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information as to the total increases in salaries by grades that are provided for in the bill which he reports to the House?

Mr. LEHLBACH. By the very nature of things it is impossible to draw up a table showing such increases, because, in the first place, until the employees in the various departments are assigned to the appropriate grades which their work justifies, there is no telling how many in each grade will be in the Government service or in the service of any department. Furthermore, after such allocations are made it is entirely the province of the Committee on Appropriations of the House to determine how many employees of a certain grade are justified in a division or bureau, and it makes no difference how many would be tentatively allocated to that grade or are now employed, it would be what was appropriated for that would be paid for.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Take, for instance, the Bureau of Standards, along the line just suggested by the gentleman. We are paying associate physicists in the Bureau of Standards to-day a salary of $2,000 to $2,700 a year. Under the proposed bill, in some instances, we will be paying double the salary. The work of the Bureau of Standards has to go on. When you fix the salary as provided by this bill it is without the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations to cut down the number of positions. That work has to go on. Here we have on pages 10 and 11, under the professional class:

Grade 4, which may be referred to as the full professional grade, shall include all classes of positions in this service the duties of which are to perform independent and highly expert professional work, or to be responsible for the administration of a minor division of a large organization, or a major division of a small organization doing such work.

The annual rates of compensation for classes of positions in this grade shall be $4,140, $4,440, $4,740, and $5,040.

Now, will the gentleman permit further—

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman will, please, he said associate physicists are now paid $2,700 and would be paid a salary double, and then he reads the salary fixed for, say, the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture. An associate physicist who is now getting $2,700 will in all probability be in the grade receiving a minimum of $2,340, $2,520, $2,700, and a maximum of $2,820.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit further? Let us take the proposed grade, grade 3, and see whether by that phraseology he would come under the category of an associate physicist:

Grade 3, which may be referred to as the associate professional grade, shall include all classes of positions in this service the duties of which are to perform independently or with a small number of subordinates in the junior or assistant professional grade, or with other subordinates, responsible professional work requiring extended training and considerable successful previous experience.

Now, I take it that designation would cover an associate physicist.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Some of them undoubtedly—

Mr. STAFFORD. And the salaries that are provided here are $3,120, $3,360, $3,600, and $3,840, where to-day we are paying these men $2,700, which is the maximum. Thirty-one at $2,700, six at $2,500, four at $2,200, and seven at $2,000. Permit me further—I do not want to encroach upon the gentleman's time, but I would like to have a full presentation of the idea of the gentleman—here we are increasing the salary more than $1,000, and the gentleman says it will rest with the Committee on Appropriations to curtail the number. The Committee on Appropriations is helpless to curtail the number. That work has to go on, and will go on, at the new salaries provided by this classification.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Of course, the gentleman's question—I assume it is a question, and therefore presume to answer—is predicated on the premise that we are raising salaries $1,000, but nothing he has said, nothing he has read justified such an assumption. I would like—

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I desire to get a clear idea. I have read the bill; does the gentleman mean to say the Committee on Appropriations would have the privilege to reduce the amount carried in these respective grades as provided in the bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. They would not reduce the amount, but they could certainly limit the number of employees in the various grades that would be provided for in any division or bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Now, if I may just briefly outline the administrative provisions of the bill. The bill that was recommended by the Joint Commission on Reclassification, as I said, in 1920 was accompanied by a report, which was in fact a catalogue or a dictionary, if you please, of all the positions in the Federal service, and embraced in that catalogue or dictionary about 1,700 different positions and prescribed salaries for each one of those positions, and the method of enacting this catalogue of positions into law was by reference in the act.

The report was filed and the accompanying bill said that the report shall be known as the classification of 1920, and is hereby enacted into law. Thus the provisions relating to the classification itself would not be laid before the House, would not be read, would not be considered, or be subject to amendment. It was not deemed feasible to ask the Congress to legislate in that manner. An attempt was made to reduce the classification within such limits that it could itself be incorporated in the bill and passed upon by the Congress. This was done in the bill (H. R. 15225) of the last Congress, but upon further study of the question—and I will say that the suggestion was first incorporated in the bill introduced by Representative Wood of Indiana in this House—instead of making a classification of positions, it was deemed desirable to make the classification one of broad grades, into which the classes in a given service, such as the professional service, the clerical service, the institutional service, and the custodial service, would be divided. Each such service would be divided into six or seven grades, according to the qualifications, requirements, and character of the work which in each grade was described in general language, and that plan has been followed in this bill. This bill provides in the second section for the necessary definitions.

Now, in the third section it excepts from the classification as here outlined—

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Before passing from section 2—I may be a little hard of understanding—lines 10 to 14 on page 2 read:

The term "position" means a specific civilian office or employment, whether occupied or vacant, in a department other than offices or employments in the Postal Service and teachers under the Board of Education of the District of Columbia.

Does it mean that the teachers are excluded, or is the position of a teacher a position—

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is not a position such as is meant here, because the Postal Service and teachers are already classified.

Mr. STEVENSON. The teachers are classified?

Mr. LEHLBACH. They are classified, as well as the Postal Service. When we say this applies to all positions except Postal Service and the District of Columbia teachers, it lets them out.

Mr. ROSSDALE. I would like to say that the so-called classification in the Postal Service does not relate to any kind of a classification like this, because there is really no classification in the Postal Service.

Mr. LEHLBACH. It was really a revision of the pay roll. That was all it amounted to. But everybody agreed it was a wise thing not to disturb the arrangement, which seemed to be satisfactory both to the department and Congress and employees.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Might I interrupt the gentleman one moment to ask the reason for the limitation to the District of Columbia?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Why, because there exists at the present time only data as to the employees in the District, how many there are, the character of the work, and the nature of the work, and consequently the classification could only be made to embrace those concerning whom the information existed. If you do not know what people in the field are doing, you can not very well describe their work in a classification. There is a provision in this bill to extend these provisions to the field service as promptly as possible. This classification is not a haphazard proposition. It is based on precise information and consequently it is limited to those concerning whom the information is in hand.

Mr. ROSSDALE. I am not hostile to this bill, but very favorable to it, but I would like to ask, taking it on the assumption that it is a good thing for the department service in the District of Columbia, would it not naturally follow it was a good thing in the field?

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman will permit me, I have not made any progress yet, and I will fully answer the gentleman in regard to the field service when I come to that provision in the bill.

Section 12 of the bill is the reclassification with the appropriate range of salaries for each grade in each service, and the bill provides that the head of each department shall assign those in his employ to their appropriate grade in the service to which they belong. To let the allocation, in the first instance, be made by an outside agency would be useless labor, because it would have to acquaint itself with the work of every employee, which is already within the knowledge of the head of the department and his subordinates. They make the allocation. That is subject to revision and review and ultimate approval by the Bureau of the Budget. It is by making proper allocation that inequalities are prevented from being made in the department, exorbitant or unjustified salaries from being paid, and equality throughout the service is assured. But in view of the fact that the allocations in a large measure control the expense of the new classification, your committee was unwilling to intrust any governmental agency other than that which is directly responsible for the administrative expenditures—the Bureau of the Budget—with final responsibility for the allocations. It is given large general powers with regard to the compensation schedules and the allocation of positions which may be unique, and which are not assignable to any existing grade, and may also divide the existing salary grades into divisions wherein may be placed positions for which no higher salary may be paid than the specific work justifies, though the specific position may fall in a grade wherein the salary range is higher than the salary range ought to be for this specific position.

Now, with regard to the salary ranges and the possibility of increase in salary of employees: It does not mean that an employee who starts at the beginning of a grade automatically or annually goes to the next higher salary rate. He does not go to the next higher salary rate if his work is simply sufficient and satisfactory.

A system of efficiency ratings based on uniform rules, principles, and methods is provided for, and an employee could only receive an increase in salary if he reaches a standard of efficiency set for the granting of such an increase. There is a standard of efficiency set which a man must attain in order to remain stationary in his position, a standard of efficiency set which if a man does not reach he is demoted or dismissed from the service, and demotion or dismissal from the service is made mandatory on the department heads by this bill in every instance where the employee does not maintain the standard so fixed.

As regards extending this system to the field, the Bureau of the Budget is ordered to make a report on schedules of positions, grades, and salaries for the field service which will follow the principles and rules of the compensation schedules in so far as they are applicable to the field service. This report shall include a list prepared by the head of each department allocating all of the field positions in his department to their appropriate grades in said schedules and fixing the proposed rate of compensation of each employee thereunder. That means that after this bill becomes a law, at the next session of Congress the Bureau of the Budget reports a similar classification of the field service, which, however, does not automatically go into law, but is reported to Congress, and will then be subject to the scrutiny and to whatever action Congress may see fit to take upon it. In the original classification employees in the recognized trades and crafts and skilled laborers were included and salaries and rates of wages were fixed at that time at the then prevailing rate of wages. Now, that that is a poor plan is shown by the fact that in this original joint commission classification, having been made 18 months ago, there were fixed rates of wages for skilled crafts and labor decidedly in excess of the prevailing rates in those trades now. The Government, in its departments where large numbers of these mechanics or tradesmen are employed, does not have a fixed statutory wage rate. They have various wage boards which from time to time adjust wages in accordance with prevailing rates in the industries generally, and these wage boards have at times increased salaries, and recently have in certain instances decreased them.

The wage board system is not disturbed by the classification, but is adhered to and is extended to all this class of employees—to skilled trades and to skilled laborer classes.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. In the compensation for classes provided in this bill have they been estimated with a view to eliminating the bonus of $240?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Oh, surely.

The time is limited. I have tried to answer such questions as have been asked from time to time. I may have not given the subject as exhaustive a review as it merits, but I shall be glad to supplement what I have said if anyone wishes to ask a question.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. There are no amendments in this bill to the retirement bill? You are not dealing with that at all?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No. In the bill recommended by the Joint Classification Commission various other matters of reform in civil-service affairs were included, such as providing for appeals in cases of discipline involving dismissal, and possibly provisions for leave of absence and sick leave, and other questions dealing with much-needed and desirable improvements in the service but which have no direct connection with the reclassification of the service; and your committee thought it wise in considering the subject and in reporting a bill to confine ourselves entirely to this subject and to eliminate other matters, no matter how desirable their consideration at the proper time might be.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman state the amount of increase in the police and fire department forces as carried in the bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The initial salary in the salary ranges is, I think, in every instance below what is actually being paid the police and fire departments at the present time, but in view of the fact that there is a range of salary provided and a system of obtaining promotion the bill provides that where an employee is receiving a salary at a given salary rate within the grade in which he falls, he should remain undisturbed in his salary. If he is receiving a salary within the range, but not at a rate fixed in the bill, he should obtain the salary at the next higher rate, and that involves in a good many instances in the fire and police departments a slight increase, varying from $20 to $30 per man, and which in the police force would amount to $19,000 and in the fire department something less than $10,000. But anticipating that there might be objection to this, and in view of the fact that there was no intention on the part of the proponents of this bill to make present increases in the police and fire departments of the District, I have drawn a series of amendments which will include the rates of salary within the range of salaries of the police and fire departments, which will insure the fact that there will be no increase whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee whether in determining the basis of arriving at the salary scale the committee took into consideration the present salary plus the bonus, or whether they eliminated entirely the bonus now being paid, for instance, in the clerical positions of the Government?

Mr. LEHLBACH. In the first place, the compensation schedules are not permanently based upon existing salaries paid by the Government. You could not do that. Where you have persons doing the same kind of work, receiving varying from $1,000 to $2,100, you can not base salaries for all doing such work, but for purposes of comparison between the present salaries and proposed salaries in the compensation schedule the bonus is included.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is any increased percentage allowed in addition to the present salary and bonus?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Wherever, in certain instances, increases are justified, they have been made. There are classes of positions in which by reason of coming peculiarly in contact with certain classes of the public, like the Patent Office, it was made manifest to everyone that there was a very gross underpayment. That has been sought to be cured by special legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am referring generally to the clerical positions. Has there been an increase in the pay in addition to what they are now receiving, including the bonus?

Mr. LEHLBACH. There is no substantial increase in clerical service at all, but increases come in the positions where scientific and professional attainments are necessary, and where the turnover is constantly hampering the functioning of Government departments, where we have 100 or 150 per cent turnover every two or three years because of the grossly inadequate salaries paid. Any increase resulting from this bill will not be a uniform increase, but will go to those who admittedly are not getting enough at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is recognized.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] has explained a great many of the provisions of this bill, and I shall endeavor not to duplicate the explanation which he has made. However, there are some sections of the bill to which I want to give some attention. All of us who were Members of the House when the World War began and when the cost of living began to soar, remember that an appeal was made, and very properly made, upon Congress to increase these salaries. The answer was made, and made on good ground, that there were so many thousand employees in the Government service and that their duties were so diverse that it was impossible to take up and undertake in a short while to reclassify their salaries and adjust the differences in pay, and that all that could be done at that time, when the pressure on Congress was so great for more important business, was to make a general horizontal increase of $240 for each employee, and by that method undertake to give some relief from the very real burdens of the high cost of living.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. DUNBAR. The $240 bonus did not apply to Government officials receiving over $2,500 a year?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct. The higher paid employees, those that are in the more technical services, and the supervisory officials in the Government departments, and positions of that kind, were in many cases not affected by the $240 bonus.

I may also add for the sake of accuracy that the first bonus or horizontal increase, which is a more proper designation, was only $120 per year and was only increased to $240 per annum after the general cost of living had taken a very substantial rise.

Naturally, in a flat increase of this kind represented by the so-called bonus, some employees received it who were not entitled to any increase at all and others were entitled to receive a good deal more than they got, in view of the salaries then prevailing in outside industries. But that result could not be avoided in dealing with so many thousands of employees and without the time to make a comprehensive review of the whole subject. Congress, after adopting this horizontal plan as a temporary measure, appointed a reclassification commission to investigate the whole subject and report its findings and recommendations to Congress. This commission was appointed at the time the Democratic Party was in control of the House, and Speaker Clark appointed Mr. Keating, of Colorado; Mr. Hamlin, of Missouri; and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] as members of the commission. After a very exhaustive and comprehensive investigation of the subject the commission submitted its report, which makes a very voluminous document, something over 800 or 900 pages. It goes into a very detailed analysis of all these Government positions, giving outlines of their several duties, compensation received, and other related matters, and suggests a plan of reclassification.

After this report on reclassification was submitted to Congress, bills were introduced which undertook to follow the plan suggested by the commission. These bills were so voluminous, so much in detail, undertook to split up the positions in so many numerous divisions and classes, that when our committee came to consider the subject and to report a bill to Congress it was decided to abandon the plan of such great detail and to simplify the matter in every possible way, and the result of these efforts is the present bill, which, after being amended in several respects, was introduced by the chairman of the committee [Mr. LEHLBACH]. It divides up the different positions into a limited number of classified services, and then splits up the different services into grades which take into consideration the responsibility and the knowledge and skill and labor required for the different duties of the position.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will be glad to.

Mr. BOX. As I understand from reading some of the provisions of the bill and hearing the remarks of the gentleman up to this time, the allocation of groups of men and employees to certain classes, and the salaries dependent on such allocation is primarily fixed by those having the employees in charge—that is to say, the heads of the departments.

Mr. BLACK. That is true, with a certain very important qualification which I will discuss presently.

Mr. BOX. That means in effect that the actual working of the bill depends on the manner of its administration.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; that would necessarily be true of any reclassification bill that Congress might pass. I do not see how it could be administered in any other intelligent manner. Naturally the heads of departments must have something to do with allocating employees.

Mr. BOX. In view of the fact that the almost uniform attitude of heads of departments, the bureau itself, and others who will do the allocating, is opposed to economy and in favor of a large expenditure, on what does my colleague base the hope that this will result in economy?

Mr. BLACK. I am glad to give the gentleman an answer to his question. Assuming that the premise of our committee is correct—to wit, that the only way to get a fair division of the Government services and to stop the favoritism and discrimination among employees is to enact a law requiring a careful and fair classification of all Government employees—then our bill should promote efficiency and economy. Of course, if that premise is not correct and it is better to pursue a "haphazard skip and jump" method of dealing with the employees, then perhaps no legislation at all would be desirable. But it seems to me to be a matter beyond dispute that if we are to have order and system in the Government service that we must have a yardstick to measure with. Congress passes laws. We know we can not administer them; that is beyond our province. We do not have the facilities to do it even if it were desirable, and we must necessarily trust the administration of laws to some one, and of course one of the most important inquiries and subjects of investigation in connection with this bill which the committee had was, Who is best to administer the law? We had witnesses before us in the hearings who advocated that the Civil Service Commission in the first instance should make the allocations. Personally I did not think that the Civil Service Commission was a body that ought to undertake to administer the law. Its function is to prescribe the examinations necessary to enable qualified employees to get on the eligible list for appointment and not to perform the work of allocating them to their respective positions.

There was another suggestion to the effect that the heads of the departments make such allocations in the first instance and then put the work up to the Civil Service Commission for their approval. Our committee did not like that any better than we did the first suggestion. The logical thing to us seemed to be to lodge this power with the Bureau of the Budget, which is responsible to Congress and to the country for the submission of estimates of expenditures and which stands as the right arm of the President in accounting to the country for policies of economy. There was a suggestion that we allow the Bureau of the Budget to do this reclassification of positions in the original instance. But the committee on investigation decided that the bureau would necessarily have to refer the matter to the heads of the departments who were familiar with the duties of their several employees and with their qualifications to perform them, and so we decided that the best system was to allow the heads of these executive departments to tentatively allocate all of the employees in their departments to the proper grades provided for in this bill and after such allocation submit the work to the Bureau of the Budget subject to its right to revise and correct the allocations in any manner that it should decide to be proper. It seems to me that we will come as near securing uniformity, equality, and justice, not only to the employees but to the public, in that manner as in any way I can think of.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will this bill fix definite salaries for each position in the service?

Mr. BLACK. Yes, it will; because if any particular position in the Government service does not come strictly within the definitions of services in the bill, then the Bureau of the Budget is given the power to classify that position in the same class as another position which the bureau regards as similar and akin to it.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Another question. Would that classification make it impossible for the head of an office or bureau in charge of a lump-sum appropriation to increase the compensation fixed by the bill for any individual or person?

Mr. BLACK. Yes. The head of a department would not be permitted to change any of these allocations—and to allocate a man means to place him in the position where he belongs—without the approval of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Then, if I understand the gentleman correctly, the bill would result in substantially a fixed statutory salary for each position in the service.

Mr. BLACK. That should be the result, and I think it will be the result if it is properly administered. I see no reason why it should not be. One of the complaints which we have often heard is that in lump-sum appropriations there have been instances of extravagance, favoritism, and waste. The purpose of this bill is to do away with it and place an employee in the salary grade where he properly belongs.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That is a very important feature running through this matter of classification.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In line with the inquiry made by the gentleman's colleague, I want to ask whether section 9 contemplates that the Civil Service Commission shall fix the standards that are to be observed by the heads of departments in making their allocations. Is the duty of fixing the standards intrusted to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BLACK. If I understand the inquiry which the gentleman has in mind, I may say in reply that the Civil Service Commission at the outset will not have anything to do with these allocations because they now have no system of efficiency ratings in the departments, or if they do they have no uniform ratings. It may be that some departments have systems of efficiency rating; but if so, such system is not under the control of the Civil Service Commission.

What this bill contemplates is that after the allocations are made, and are approved by the Bureau of the Budget, and the employees go into their several positions, then in the future their promotions, their demotions, their separations from the service for inefficiency shall depend upon their records, a copy of which will be found in the office of the Civil Service Commission and in the several departments.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand, then, from what the gentleman says, that after these allocations are made by the heads of the departments, subsequently the Civil Service Commission is to have something to do with establishing standards that will govern changes.

Mr. BLACK. That is true. It is to keep a complete efficiency record of each and every employee in the Government service, covered by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Why would it not have been well to authorize the Civil Service Commission in a general way to have prescribed the standards that shall be observed by the heads of the departments in making the original allocations?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to give the gentleman my opinion upon that for whatever it is worth. I believe that such a plan would have presented an almost impossible task. It would really have involved an examination of each and every employee because the Civil Service Commission now has no efficiency ratings of the employees. It might be that it could have been done by establishing a time limit in which a uniform system of ratings should be observed by the departments and later on making the allocations from the information furnished by such efficiency ratings, but that was a plan which the committee did not consider, and I would not be prepared to say that it is feasible.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I desire to ask two or three questions. The first question I ask is, What increase will this make in the expenditures for salaries, as a whole?

Mr. BLACK. That is a very difficult question to answer, inasmuch as the expenditures will depend of course upon the correctness of the allocations by the Bureau of the Budget. I will say this to the gentleman, however, that the chairman of the committee [Mr. LEHLBACH] has submitted this bill to the different heads of the departments for their tentative allocations, and his estimate is that the increase over present expenditures for salaries will be about 5 per cent, including the bonus, now being paid. My own judgment is that if employees who are not needed are dropped from the pay rolls when this reclassification is made, savings enough will be made to prevent any increase in expenditures at all.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know whether that is true or not, and I do not know whether anybody knows whether it is true or not. I do not know whether Mr. LEHLBACH does, but I do not believe any expert can tell.

Mr. BLACK. If we should have an inflated allocation, if the law should be inefficiently and badly administered, of course it would cost a great deal more money than we are now spending for the same purpose. But if the allocations are correctly made and the law is administered with exactness and without favoritism then I do not think there should be any increase, but rather a saving.

Mr. SISSON. I feel the gentleman is perfectly fair with the House and always fair with himself. I have great respect for not only the gentleman's capacity, but for his intellectual integrity in that I believe that he does not ever try to fool himself, and that is the trouble with most of us. Following up that question let me ask this. Take professional services on page 8 of the bill, going down to nearly the bottom of page 11. The positions begin with rather small salaries, as in grade 1, $1,800 up to $2,160, but when we get down to grade 6 the salaries run from $6,000 and up, and as high as $7,200, unless specifically fixed higher by law.

In the allocation of that grade it is within the province, as I have read the bill, of whoever shall allocate these professional services to put a maximum number of employees under grade 6. If that be true, then their salaries in the aggregate will be enormous. In the clerical service they begin at a reasonably low grade, No. 1 being $1,080 to $1,260, but over here in grade 7 we find for clerical service that it goes from $4,320 to $5,280. I take those two typical classes, because there are a great many that under the definition of professional services will be included. Of course, the greater number of civil-service employees will be under the clerical force. What I am asking is, if the power to allocate is absolutely fixed in any one Government institution, then Congress will have nothing to do with the amount of money appropriated, and it will depend entirely, will it not, on what these people do who allocate to these grades?

Mr. BLACK. I believe I can give the gentleman a satisfactory answer to his question. Theoretically the gentleman has mentioned a feature of the bill which I admit may be open to criticism. The power to allocate would be almost the power to destroy the Public Treasury, if we assume that it will be flagrantly and shamefully abused. But there is one feature in the bill which I think destroys that possibility and makes it perfectly safe for Congress to enact this law, and that is this: Every allocation made by a head of a department before it becomes effective must be approved by the Bureau of the Budget. If it does not approve the allocation, it revises it and says how it ought to be made.

Now, the very purpose of the creation of the Bureau of the Budget was to bring about economy in Government expenditure, and surely we do not have any justification for assuming that it will venture off on a riotous rampage of extravagance in making these allocations.

Another safeguard which the bill provides is found in the concluding section of the bill, which provides that the Bureau of the Budget shall submit its estimates upon these classifications to the next regular session of the Congress after the passage of the law. Now, that will be for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1923.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. In just a moment. If Mr. Dawes, in the event he is still Director of the Budget, submits to us at that time estimates which the Committee on Appropriations says are out of all line with our past expenditures for these objects, then, of course, Congress can and no doubt will remedy the situation at once by repealing or amending the law. In other words, we are retaining control of the situation as I view it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I want to suggest, if the gentleman will permit me, how the Committee on Appropriations and through it the House, may control the allocation. Suppose a division has 20 clerks, which it has estimated for, and they are graded and allocated. Suppose 17 of them by reason of their grading do supervisory work and the remainder are doing ordinary clerical work. The Committee on Appropriations would immediately say, "You can not have 17 men to supervise 3 clerks. We will give you 2 supervisors and 18 clerks."

Mr. Sisson. Unless the estimate is made giving us all that information—and I do not know of anything in this bill that provides for the giving of it—we will never have that light. Here is what I am afraid of, and that is the reason that I am asking these questions of the gentleman from Texas, for whose ability I have great respect, and that is this: Whether or not you have not put it within the power—I have not studied the bill closely enough to know—of the people in a department having the power to classify the power to fix a claim against the Government by fixing the salary.

Now, if that is true, then if they allocate the salary and we give the power for them to do it, and the Government fails to appropriate sufficient money to pay that salary, unless there is some clause in this bill that cares for that situation, the general statute which provides that appropriations shall be made to cover the salaries of these particular employees might be actually repealed either by implication or directly by the passing of this act. If that is true, Congress has lost the power to control if it can not control the allocation.

Mr. BLACK. Let me answer the gentleman very frankly. I admit that the only way we could avoid a situation like that which the gentleman from Mississippi depicts, if it should actually arise, would be if Congress was of the opinion that the Bureau of the Budget had made extravagant allocations and had abused its power, then repeal the reclassification law and appropriate upon the old basis, because this law, so far as appropriations go, does not go into effect until July 1, 1923. That would give us plenty of time to deal with the possible situation which the gentleman from Mississippi mentions.

Mr. Sisson. I hope the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. BLACK. I will admit that if the Bureau of the Budget should make these allocations to the several positions under this law, it would be binding upon the Government unless repealed prior to the date when the bill is to become effective.

Mr. Sisson. Let me give a specific illustration, and I think I am not far wrong, and, if so, I will ask Mr. Wood of Indiana, who has been with me on this committee for some time, to correct me. For instance, the secretaries of the Cabinet officers get about $2,500 a year now. Which grade would they fall under here?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The $4,000 grade.

Mr. Sisson. I think that is true.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say this to the gentleman—

Mr. BLACK. The private secretary to a Cabinet officer would come under grade 6. The annual compensation for classes of positions in this grade are fixed in the bill at $3,300, $3,540, $3,780, and $4,020. The entrance grade would be $3,300.

Mr. Sisson. I want to give a specific case. My recollection is that the salary of secretary of a Cabinet officer is about $2,500, is that right?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is $2,500, and this provides that he shall be included within the grade named, which includes private secretaries to members of the Cabinet or the heads of the largest independent establishments, and range from $3,300 to $4,020.

Mr. Sisson. That is my opinion from a cursory examination of the bill, that the illustration is a fair illustration of what is to happen through the bill. You have got a bill here where the salary will be increased from $2,500, something like 60 per cent.

Mr. BLACK. No. The gentleman is extravagant in his estimate of increases.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will yield in that same connection—

Mr. BLACK. Let me answer.

Mr. PADGETT. Just in connection with that. Is it not a fact the bill altogether makes permanent the $240 bonus? Does it not make permanent the $240 bonus in all cases?

Mr. BLACK. No; if the gentleman will permit, I will say that the bill does not do that.

Mr. PADGETT. How does it exempt any case. This act provides that the compensation means the salary plus the bonus, and then it provides that if one does not exactly fit into the graduations that are given in section 9, that they shall be put into one next higher. So that includes the bonus and the salary.

Mr. BLACK. Let me answer these questions with entire frankness. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I think the result of the allocations under the bill will be in most cases to continue their basic salary under the old law, plus the bonus, or horizontal increase of $240 per annum, which was given by Congress during the war, but it will not be necessarily true in all cases. Now, the bill as originally recommended to the committee by the so-called experts—and I do not say that in any disrespectful sense—would have continued every salary in the Government service without reduction, regardless of whether the employee was earning that salary or not, but we unanimously rejected that plan.

The committee took the position that if, in the investigation of conditions pursuant to the enforcement of this law, the Bureau of the Budget finds a certain employee receiving a salary out of all proportion to what he is entitled to receive, then the bureau shall put him into the particular grade where he properly belongs, and if it is necessary to reduce his salary to do this, then it shall be done. In other words, the purpose of this bill is to land every Government employee in the grade where he belongs, whether to do so carries him up or down. If that purpose is not accomplished, then the fault will not be with the law but with its enforcement.

Mr. PADGETT. I notice that the statement says that the allocation was left with the heads of the several departments.

Mr. BLACK. Subject to the approval and revision of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. PADGETT. But it adds that the revision that is contemplated there is only a recommendation. The Bureau of the Budget can not itself fix the salary or the allocation. They can recommend to the heads of the bureaus what it should be, but the report states that it is left with the head of the bureau.

Mr. BLACK. I do not agree with the gentleman, but if we have erred in that respect, we will amend it.

Mr. PADGETT. I was reading what is in the report.

Mr. BLACK. But let me say to the gentleman, and see if he does not agree with me, that the bill provides that the head of a department in the original instance shall make the allocation, but such allocation in order to be effective must be approved by the Bureau of the Budget. Suppose the head of the department sends to the Bureau of the Budget an inflated allocation and the Director of the Bureau declines to approve it, the bill says he may revise and correct it. I submit I do not know of any stronger language we could write to accomplish the purpose which the committee had in view, but if there is any doubt about it, of course the committee wants the Bureau of the Budget—

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that the language in the report to which he makes reference is, "These allocations, however, are subject to revision."

sion by the Bureau of the Budget." Wait a moment. The gentleman did not read it all. It says:

and shall become effective only upon their approval by said bureau. The Bureau of the Budget, in order effectively to revise and approve allocations, is given reasonable latitude to make necessary adjustments, but may not substantially amend the grades or alter the salary ranges.

Mr. BLACK. That is the law of Congress.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield? In the range of salaries the Budget Bureau may make subdivisions, rules, and regulations for the guidance of the department heads in making the allocation. That limitation "may not substantially amend the grades" means they may not amend the law that we passed.

Mr. BLACK. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that particular provision. The bill as originally written I did not think properly safeguarded that feature enough, and so we provided that the Bureau of the Budget should have no power to change these grades, but only make such rules and regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of the bill as were necessary to carry out the provisions of the act. We did not want to give the Bureau of the Budget any power to change these grades or these ranges of compensation. That is a legislative function of Congress, and we certainly did not delegate any of it to the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. PADGETT. It says:

And your committee was unwilling to intrust to any other agency of the Government than the one directly responsible for administrative expenditures the final review of the work of applying the classification.

That is carrying out the idea I suggested, that the final classification was left to the head of the bureau.

Mr. BLACK. Now, I am going to read the gentleman the law itself, and then he will find that even though the report—

Mr. PADGETT. I wanted to see what it meant.

Mr. BLACK. I am glad you have asked the question. I want to read to the House the particular provision which I think upon hearing read they will agree with me goes as far as we need go to safeguard the matter of these allocations. Page 3, line 12, says:

The head of each department shall allocate all positions in his department in the District of Columbia to their appropriate grades in the compensation schedules, and shall fix a rate of compensation of each employee thereunder, in accordance with the rules prescribed in section 6 herein.

That is the section to which I referred a while ago. It says further:

Such allocations and rates of compensation may be revised by the Bureau of the Budget and shall become effective upon their approval by said bureau.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Ought you not to say "shall be revised"?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will say this to the gentleman, and I am sure I say it with the approval of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], that if it is found that stronger and more certain language can be used to make it sure that the allocations of heads of departments shall be subject to correction and revision by the Bureau of the Budget, then, of course, we will amend the language.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 42 minutes.

Mr. BLACK. I will answer one more question, and then I must conclude.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman stated that the effect of this bill, generally speaking, would be an increase of the basic salary and the bonus. I wanted to ask the gentleman what effect, if any, this bill will have upon the salaries of the secretaries of Members of Congress?

Mr. BLACK. None at all. It does not affect anything but the executive departments.

Now let me say a few words in conclusion, because I must not use too much of the time, because some other Member from my side of the House might want to speak on the bill. I want to say one word with reference to the bonus, or $240 per annum increase which was given to Government employees during the war. The bonus was really an increase in salary. It was improperly, I think, termed a bonus. I never have like the word "bonus," because it is not descriptive of what was done. It was not a gift which we made to employees, but a salary increase, which, in view of the increase in the cost of living and wages and salaries prevailing in other employments, was very reasonable.

Now let me call the attention of the House to the fact that in June, 1920, we passed by a unanimous vote a bill that reclassified the entire Postal Service, embracing more than 250,000 employees. Under the old law which was in force prior to the war the basic salary, for instance, of a letter carrier in class 2 was $800. Class 2 had really taken the place of class 1, because class 1 was originally $600, and that was so low that—

Mr. ROSSDALE. Does the gentleman mean city letter carriers?

Mr. BLACK. Yes. Class 2, where the basic salary was $800.

Mr. ROSSDALE. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BLACK. I was on the committee, and I think I know what I am talking about.

Mr. ROSSDALE. It has not been $800 in 20 years.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] was a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I am sure he will agree with the correctness of the statement which I have just made.

Mr. STAFFORD. What was the question?

Mr. BLACK. I said that before the first Madden reclassification bill was enacted that the basic salary of letter carriers and postal clerks in grade 2 was $800, and ranged up to $1,200 in grade 6.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BLACK. Certainly I am correct. Now, what did Congress do with reference to these postal salaries? After enacting several temporary measures—I was referring to the old basic law that was in existence and in effect when the war began—after having passed several temporary measures, last year, June, 1920, we passed a postal reclassification bill which raised grade 1 to $1,400, and we now have five grades in the Postal Service of letter carriers and postal clerks: Grade 1 at $1,400; grade 2 at $1,500; grade 3 at $1,600; grade 4 at $1,700; and grade 5 at $1,800; and gentlemen can see that we increased the salary $600 from the initial grade of $800 to what is now the initial grade of $1,400.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. In a moment. And not only that, but the basic salary of rural carriers for a standard route of 24 miles was $1,200, and we increased that to $1,800.

The postal reclassification bill passed this House by a unanimous vote, and so far as I know, it has received the general approval of the country. In my judgment, taking this reclassification bill as a whole, the salary increases are not any greater in proportion than those in the postal reclassification bill, and in my judgment they are not as great. There may be, and probably are, instances where they will be greater. There are certainly instances where they will be much less in proportion; and, taking the bill as a whole, I am quite sure that the percentage increases will not be as great as was provided in the postal reclassification bill.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The general question I want to ask is, About what is the average increase over the present amount, including the bonus?

Mr. BLACK. That can not possibly be determined, as I stated, until the allocations are made by the heads of departments and approved by the Director of the Budget. But the chairman of the committee [Mr. LEHLBACH] submitted this bill to the heads of departments for tentative allocations, and he states that in figuring up the expenditures based upon these tentative reports it will increase the total pay roll for this same number of employees 5 per cent more than it now is, which would include the basic salary and the bonus.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; and then I must conclude.

Mr. DUNBAR. After the allocations are made by the heads of bureaus and approved by the Bureau of the Budget, can those allocations afterwards be changed?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; they are subject to be revised and changed at any time, except—

Mr. DUNBAR. By whom would they be revised and changed?

Mr. BLACK. We will say, for example, that an employee is placed in a certain grade in the clerical force. The gentleman wants to know whether, if the head of the department should decide that the employee was improperly allocated, he can demote him. Is that the purpose of the gentleman's question?

Mr. DUNBAR. I would like for the gentleman to answer that question.

Mr. BLACK. What I was about to say was that the employee, in order to be demoted, must be demoted according to his efficiency rating, which efficiency ratings will begin immediately after this law goes into effect and will be on file with the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. DUNBAR. Then, on the other hand, if a clerk is allocated to a particular class and is found to be deficient, the class to which this clerk belonged could not receive a different allocation? In other words, if that class received a salary of $2,000 a year, that class could not afterwards be paid $1,800 a year?

Mr. BLACK. No; Congress itself, if the bill passes, fixes the grades and the compensation that goes with the different grades. Of course, the allocation of any particular employee to a specific grade will be an administrative feature which Congress could not exercise and never has attempted to exercise.

Mr. DUNBAR. If Congress fixes the salary of a clerk at $2,000 next year can the next Congress increase it or decrease it?

Mr. BLACK. Congress could amend a law at any time in any particular, but the law itself will govern the range of salaries in the future, until amended.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman explain just how the efficiency of employees is to be determined and through what agency? How is the Bureau of the Budget going to fix it? Are they going to delegate it to some irresponsible official that Congress does not come in contact with and have a report made back to the bureau and adopt that?

Mr. BLACK. The Bureau of the Budget does not in any way handle the efficiency rating of the employee. That will be handled by the heads of the departments subject to revision by the Civil Service Commission. The heads of departments must work out the efficiency ratings in harmony with the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is there any rule prescribed for determining that fact?

Mr. BLACK. No; it would be utterly impossible for Congress to do that for all the varied employees; it would be impossible to lay down rules for efficiency which would go into such great detail as would be necessary. That is one of the things which must be left to administration.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is there any court of appeal by which an employee whose efficiency has been rated down could have his case reviewed?

Mr. BLACK. There is not at the present time any board of appeals. There is a bill on the calendar providing for such a board of appeals. If after the passage of this bill the head of a department undertakes to dismiss an employee for inefficiency, such dismissal must be subject to the approval of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the employee have a hearing on that or can he be removed from the service without a hearing?

Mr. BLACK. I assume that the Civil Service Commission would not give approval without being satisfied that the employee's record was such as to justify his removal. In other words, that the employee will be given full opportunity to be heard.

Mr. BRIGGS. And there is no board of appeal?

Mr. BLACK. No. We considered the Civil Service Commission a sufficient board of appeal.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would like to ask my colleague if in this bill they fix a minimum salary?

Mr. BLACK. No; we do not attempt to make a minimum wage law at all; we fix the range of salaries beginning at a fixed sum and ranging to a higher sum, but we have undertaken to do that not with a view of complying with any minimum wage agitation but with an endeavor to fix a compensation in fair proportion to the work done.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. What is the probable maximum amount to be paid under this bill as it is now drawn? You have a range from a minimum to a maximum, and I will take the maximum.

Mr. BLACK. Perhaps the gentleman was not in the Hall when I answered a similar inquiry of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson]. Of course, if the Bureau of the Budget should approve an erroneous and inflated allocation, the bill would cost a great deal more than the present expenditure; but if the work is well done, it seems to me that there should be very little, if any, additional cost. Enough should be saved in dismissing unnecessary employees and in getting better work out of those who remain to more than make up for such increases in compensation as the bill provides.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask not to be interrupted, for I have some very concrete propositions which I wish to submit for the consideration of this committee and in opposition to this measure. I regret that the membership of the House is not larger, because, in my opinion, this is the most important and far-reaching measure that will come before Congress, and if I am not mistaken, if the bill is carried out in its terms, it will increase the salaries and the expense of the Government more than $8,000,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the importance of the subject, involving an aggregate expenditure, in my estimation, of $10,000,000, if the bill passes, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Fifty-eight Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The committee rose; and Mr. WALSH, as Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 8928, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, when 276 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he handed in a list of the absentees for printing in the journal.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this bill prescribes a number of compensation schedules, establishing work classes and subclasses, each carrying a definite range of compensation. The head of each department is required to allocate the positions under his jurisdiction in the District of Columbia to these classes and to fix the compensation of his employees accordingly. The action of the department head, however, with respect to both the allocation of employees to grades and the fixing of rates of pay, requires the review and approval of the Bureau of the Budget before becoming effective. The first regular estimates to be submitted to Congress after the adoption of the legislation must conform, under the terms of the bill, to the compensation schedules prescribed; and the compensation schedules are to become effective on the first day of the fiscal year following the presentation of these estimates to Congress, and not before.

The compensation schedules are not to apply to field employees nor to skilled tradesmen in the District of Columbia. The pay of mechanics and other skilled laborers is to be fixed, and readjusted as may be necessary, by a new agency proposed in the bill, to be known as the Federal Wage Commission. For field services the Bureau of the Budget is required to submit special compensation schedules to Congress at the beginning of the first regular session following the approval of the legislation, accompanied by lists prepared by the various department heads allocating all field employees to the grades prescribed in the schedules and fixing their proposed compensation.

Under the terms of the bill the Civil Service Commission is required to establish uniform systems of efficiency ratings throughout the departments, and to fix maximum and minimum ratings for the purpose of controlling promotions and demotions and dismissals from the service. Department heads are required to rate the efficiency of their employees in accordance with these systems. Promotions are to be given only to employees whose ratings reach the minimum limitation; they are to be allowed only once a year, and no one may be promoted more than one subclass at a time. Reductions in pay or dismissals from the service may be made by department heads, but only with the concurrence of the Civil Service Commission.

Thus the administration of the provisions of the bill is scattered among the following agencies: First, the heads of departments, who under the terms of the bill are stripped of virtually all their authority in personnel matters, but who are permitted tentatively to allocate their employees to grades and tentatively to fix their salaries; second, the Bureau of the Budget, which is required to approve the allocation of all positions to grades and the fixing of all rates of pay; third, the Civil Service Commission, which is to establish uniform systems of efficiency ratings, which is to fix minimum and maximum ratings for the purpose of governing promotions, demotions, and dismissals, and which is to control department heads in making reductions in pay and dismissals from the service; and fourth, a Federal wage commission, which is to fix the compensation of skilled tradesmen.

Here is the first serious objection to this legislation. No proper reclassification plan should be permitted to impair the authority of department heads over their personnel, for the department heads are responsible under the law for the work which the employees do. But this plan takes away from the responsible executive officers virtually all their authority over their employees. Not only that, but it divides this authority among three separate and distinct outside establishments, none of which is in any way responsible for the work done—the Bureau of the Budget, the Civil Service Commission, and a new Federal wage commission.

All of these agencies, one of which is of course not yet in existence, are wholly lacking in experience in administrative matters. They do not pretend to know anything about the question of fixing salaries or efficiency ratings or personnel management.

Take the Budget Bureau. The director of this bureau makes no secret of the fact that he does not want the job of reclassifying salaries. The Budget Bureau was established as a planning agency for the President—to assist the President in coordinating the work of the several executive departments and establishments. Its functions should be limited to the consideration of broad questions of fiscal policy and other similar matters such as the distribution of work among the different departments or the duplication of activities between different Federal agencies. Its principal business ought to be the construction of the annual work program for the executive branch of the Government, to be submitted to Congress for its consideration. Certainly, this was the intent of the budget and accounting act. But it is now proposed that the Bureau of the Budget shall take over an administrative duty—a stupendous piece of research work—a job that has no connection whatever with the functions which the bureau was established to perform. The Budget Bureau does not want this administrative job, and it could not handle it—even if it had the necessary force, which it has not—without greatly interfering with the more important work which it is required by law to do. Congress has in recent months been subjected to severe criticism for assigning two or more entirely unrelated functions to the same executive establishment. Why make a similar blunder now and give to the Bureau of the Budget this administrative function which is wholly without relation to its present statutory duties?

Virtually, the same argument applies to the Civil Service Commission. The function of the Civil Service Commission is to examine candidates for positions in the Government service and to certify successful candidates for appointment in the departments. The hands of the commission have heretofore been kept clear of dabbling in the administration of personnel matters; that is, the handling of matters affecting employees actually working in Government offices. The Civil Service Commission is an employment agency pure and simple, and if it is to be even reasonably effective as an employment agency we must see to it that it is given no duties that will interfere with its work of examining applicants for positions in the Government service. The commission is wholly lacking in the force, the funds, and the experience which would be required by any agency expecting to make a success of the installation and supervision of efficiency rating systems in the departments. But more important than that, these new duties are not compatible with the commission's present work, and in all probability were Congress to make the blunder of giving it the job of supervising efficiency ratings in the executive departments, neither that job nor the commission's present work would be performed with the effectiveness which the public has a right to expect.

Now the proposed Federal wage commission. This is a new commission which we are proposing to add to the already long list of independent establishments of the Government. Evidently we have not enough boards, bureaus, commissions, and offices already in existence. We must keep piling up new agencies. Whenever we think of a new job which we should like to have done, instead of giving it to one of the 220 existing bureaus and offices, we create a new board or commission, adding more confusion to the already confused order of our executive departments and establishments. This proposed Federal wage commission can not be justified on any grounds whatsoever. If it is true that Congress is no longer intelligent enough or honest enough to fix the compensation of Government employees—if we must turn over to an irresponsible executive establishment the authority to determine the wages of skilled laborers employed in the various departments of the Government—we should at least make use of some of the machinery which has already been set up. What this Government needs is a reduction—not an increase—in the number of its executive agencies.

A few weeks ago the President issued an Executive order directing the Bureau of Efficiency to establish a uniform system of efficiency ratings in all executive departments and establishments in the District of Columbia. Under this order the head of each department and establishment has appointed a representative to cooperate with the Bureau of Efficiency in installing the system. The necessary regulations have been prepared, the system has been worked out in detail. It will be possible, I am told, to have the initial ratings made within the next few weeks. The Bureau of Efficiency has a force trained in the operation of efficiency rating systems. It designed the system now used in the Post Office Department and the State Department. It installed the system employed in the Loans and Currency Division of the Treasury Department, and in the office of the Register of the Treasury. It has put rating systems in every department that has shown any interest in rating systems. It has a force trained in this business, and in all other matters connected with personnel administration.

Under the provisions of this bill all the work done by the Bureau of Efficiency on efficiency-rating systems is to be scrapped. The duty of installing rating systems is to be given to the Civil Service Commission, which has neither training nor experience in work of this kind nor the force to carry it on. The President has selected the Bureau of Efficiency to handle efficiency ratings. He was doubtless influenced by the fact that the Bureau of Efficiency has been engaged successfully in these matters for almost nine years. This bill is in direct conflict with the President's expressed wishes and with his program for the immediate establishment of a rating system under the general supervision of an experienced organization.

What the proponents of this bill have apparently overlooked is that an adequate efficiency rating law is already in existence. I refer to the act of August 23, 1912, which, as amended by the act of February 28, 1916, requires the Bureau of Efficiency, when directed by the President, to install uniform efficiency ratings throughout the entire service in the District of Columbia. Every single thing that could be accomplished under the pending bill can be accomplished by this existing legislation. Through failure of the President to act, this legislation has lain practically dormant for a number of years, but President Harding has put life into it by his recent Executive order. A uniform efficiency-rating system will be in operation within a few months at the latest, under the superintendence of the Bureau of Efficiency, which not only has the experience and the force and the funds required to do the work but has also the active backing and support of the President. While on the subject of existing efficiency-rating legislation, I want to mention one point, at least, wherein the present law is distinctly superior to this bill which we are now considering. The act of August 23, 1912, as amended, requires that preference be given to honorably discharged ex-service men who have good ratings when reductions are being made in the force of any office. This provision is reiterated in the Executive order of October 24. Every ex-service man in the country will be resentful of any legislation designed to upset the present arrangement for efficiency ratings which fails to protect discharged soldiers and sailors and to give them the preference to which they are entitled under existing law.

So far I have been speaking with more particular reference to the provisions of this bill relating to matters of administration—the transfer of administrative authority over employees from the heads of the various departments and establishments to the inexperienced Bureau of the Budget, to the untrained Civil Service Commission, and to this proposed new wage board; the transfer of the functions of standardizing departmental efficiency ratings from the Bureau of Efficiency to the Civil Service Commission, with the substitution of new law for provisions already on the statute books which are in fact superior to those which are proposed in this bill. I now want to take up the more important question of the reclassification itself. In the first place, when is it to become effective under this bill? Section 13 provides:

That the estimates of the expenditures and appropriations set forth in the budget transmitted by the President to Congress on the first day of the next ensuing regular session shall conform to the classification herein provided, and that the rates of salary in the compensation schedules shall not become effective until the first day of the fiscal year estimated for in such budget.

In plain terms, Mr. Chairman, section 13 means this: If we pass this bill, and it is accepted by the Senate and approved by the President within the next three weeks, it will be necessary for the Bureau of the Budget to revise completely the Book of Estimates so that all salary rates for Government employees in the District of Columbia will conform to the compensation schedule contained in this bill. This is the work of reclassification. The Book of Estimates contains usually something more than 1,000 printed pages. It must be presented to Congress on the 5th day of next month. Gen. Dawes is an able and an industrious man, and he has able and industrious assistants, but no group of men in the world could apply the classification schedules contained in this bill to the employees in the District of Columbia within the period now remaining before the budget is to be presented to Congress in December, and the Members advocating this bill know it. If this legislation is adopted and approved before December 5 next, we are legislating the impossible; we are making a joke of salary standardization in the Government service.

But suppose we pass this bill and it is approved after the budget for the fiscal year 1923 has been submitted on December 5 next. What then? Why, then, Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of this section 13 the budget, or the Book of Estimates, to be submitted on the first day of the following regular session—that is, the budget to be presented the first Monday in December, 1922—will be the first budget to conform to the classification provided in this bill, and under the provisions of section 13 the rates of pay in the proposed classification schedules will then not be effective until the 1st day of July, 1923.

Considering the size of the job to be done, the provisions of the bill relating to the field service are even more absurd. Section 5 provides:

That the Bureau of the Budget shall report to Congress at the beginning of the session following the passage of this act schedules of positions, grades, and salaries for the field services, which shall follow the principles and rules of the compensation schedules in so far as these are applicable to the field services. This report shall include a list prepared by the head of each department allocating all of the field positions in his department to their appropriate grades in said schedules and fixing the proposed rate of compensation of each employee thereunder in accordance with the rules prescribed in section 6 herein.

Suppose that this bill should become a law within the next few days. Is there any Member here so enthusiastic about the talents of the Budget Bureau that he believes that Gen. Dawes and his assistants and the heads of the executive departments could comply with these provisions before the 5th day of next month? The thing is impossible, Mr. Chairman, and the proponents of this legislation know it. As a matter of actual fact, this bill contemplates no positive action whatever on the question of reclassification until the regular session of Congress convening in December of next year. No reasonable person will assert that reclassification under this legislation, whether relating to employees in the District of Columbia or to employees in field services, could be made an accomplished fact before the fiscal year 1924; that is, before the 1st day of July, 1923.

What do the gentlemen mean? Are we to be called upon to appropriate the $240 bonus for another year—with everyone marking time and waiting for the Bureau of the Budget and the Civil Service Commission and a new wage board to experiment with this reclassification business? Or, do the proponents of this measure expect to deprive the employees of their bonus—to require them to exist as best they can on their basic salaries for the next fiscal year? Mr. Chairman, I am absolutely and irreconcilably opposed to the continuation of the $240 bonus beyond the present fiscal year, and in this I believe that I am in agreement with the majority of the House. But at the same time I am in favor of a reclassification of Government salaries to be effective on the 1st day of next July, without any dodging and without any legislative phillandering whatsoever. I favor a reclassification by the heads of the departments, with only such outside supervision or intervention as is absolutely essential to the maintenance of uniform rates of pay between different offices.

I favor intrusting all these supervisory functions, which this bill would divide up among three inexperienced offices, to a single agency, an agency which for years has been cooperating with the departments in the establishment of efficiency rating systems, which for a considerable period has been engaged in the classification of employments throughout the service, and which has built up an adequate staff of specialists trained and experienced in these fields.

Mr. Chairman, on April 12, 1921, I introduced a bill to provide an equitable system for the valuation of the services of civil employees of the Government and making an appropriation of $20,000,000, to be apportioned by the President during the fiscal year 1922—this present fiscal year—for the payment of the increases in the compensation of employees resulting from the operation of the system. This bill, like the bill now under consideration, contained so-called compensation schedules to be used as a basis for classifying the employees in all departments. Under these schedules the Bureau of Efficiency, in cooperation with the heads of all executive departments and establishments, has classified every Government position in the District of Columbia. This has involved a minute examination and appraisal of all positions. The Bureau of Efficiency has prepared statistical tabulations showing by offices what the classification would cost in increased compensation. These tabulations are now being brought up to date and revised to correspond with the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1923, so that the Committees on Appropriations and the two Houses of Congress when they consider the estimates will be in possession of information which will make it possible to reclassify the service in the District of Columbia, effective July 1 next. Not only that, the Bureau of Efficiency, with the cooperation of the heads of the departments, is making a similar classification of positions in field services, so that the salary adjustment may be applied also to Government employees outside the District of Columbia and at the same time. These are operations, Mr. Chairman, which have either been concluded or else are well under way. Mind you, I am not asking you to take up the bill which I introduced as a substitute for the measure now under consideration. The only legislation necessary to obtain the full benefit of the reclassification work which has already been done by the Bureau of Efficiency, with the cooperation of the heads of the departments, is legislation appropriating for the compensation of Federal employees on the basis of the appraisals made.

Legislation of this kind the Committees on Appropriations will have an adequate opportunity to consider, and there is every reason to believe that just as a uniform efficiency rating system is being worked out and installed without further general legislation, so can the reclassification of salaries be effected without general legislation of any character. More than that, under the present plan now going forward with the support of the President, reclassification can be made a certainty on the 1st day of next July, one full year earlier than is contemplated by the bill which we are now considering. I can not believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is the wish of this House that all the work done in the practical phases of reclassification by the Bureau of Efficiency and by the administrative officers in the departments be thrown aside, junked, scrapped. I can not believe that it is the desire of Congress to require the heads of the departments to begin again where they were a year ago—to turn at this late date to new and strange compensation schedules, and, under the instructions of inexperienced agencies, to undertake anew the immense task of allocating the positions under their jurisdiction to classification grades. I can not believe, Mr. Chairman, that this House will consent to the perpetuation of compensation schedules in permanent legislation without first ascertaining the aggregate amount of the annual pay roll increase which would follow such action. If we pass this bill we buy a pig in a poke. Until the Budget Bureau should submit its estimates a year from next December no one could tell the amount which Congress in adopting this legislation would be morally obligated to appropriate in salary increases throughout the service for the fiscal year 1924. The proponents of this bill may talk of the percentage of the increase in this department and in that department, but these percentages are mere guesses, which could be verified only by the actual application of the classification, which the bill itself provides is to be done by the Bureau of the Budget after the compensation schedules have been indelibly written in the statute books.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed on principle to the adoption of this bill. On principle I am opposed to the adoption of any measure which will result in the interruption and the abandonment of the work which has been done by the Bureau of Efficiency both in the matter of the reclassification and standardization of salaries and in the matter of efficiency ratings. But this bill seems to me to be particularly defective in detail, just as it is unsound in its fundamentals. For instance it purports to follow the principle of equal compensation for equal work. But, in the rules prescribed in section 6, I fail to find any provision for reducing the pay of an employee—and there are many such employees—who now receives a salary in excess of the maximum salary of the grade to which his position is allocated. Is this equal pay for equal work? We find provisions for increasing the compensation of the underpaid. Why the omission of any provision for reducing the wages of the overpaid? Again, we find that no employee—whatever the degree of his proficiency—can be promoted oftener than once each year; and further, that no employee may receive a promotion greater than to the salary rate next higher than his present salary. Does this conform with the principle speciously put forward that promotions are to be made strictly on the basis of merit? An effective efficiency rating system will disclose cases of employees whose work is of such a character as to entitle them to more rapid promotion than one small advance each year. This vicious provision, Mr. Chairman, would make it impossible to grant sufficient reward for unusually meritorious service to create the incentive that the Government must hold out to its employees if standards of output are to be raised in Government offices and the numbers of workers reduced.

I shall not abuse your patience to catalogue the imperfections of the so-called compensation schedules included in the bill. I can not, however, pass over this feature of the measure without offering the suggestion that each Member make it his business to study these schedules carefully and to conclude for himself whether or not the terms are sufficiently clear, and the classes and subclasses sufficiently definite, to make possible the accurate and certain classification of even the larger part of the employees in the service of the Government in the District of Columbia.

Consider for a moment the schedule applying to the "professional service." Consider the skill with which this schedule was drawn:

The professional service shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform apprentice, routine, advisory, administrative, or research work which is based upon the established principles of, and which require training in, a recognized profession.

Well and good, you say; but listen:

Positions in the following callings, when requiring professional training equivalent to that represented by graduation from a college or university of recognized standing, shall be regarded as in the professional service: Accountancy, agricultural economics and marketing, architecture, astronomy, bacteriology, biology, chaplaincy, chemistry, child hygiene, civil-service examining, dentistry, dietetics, economics, education, engineering, forestry, geology, history, law, library science, mathematics, medicine, metallurgy, meteorology, patent examining, pathology, pharmacology, physics, political science, social economics, statistics, therapeutics, translating, and veterinary science.

In this, the highest paid of all services covered in the bill, we find strange yokemates—the learned and ancient profession of the law and library science, the medical profession and the profession of civil-service examining, engineering and the profession of social economics. The biologist ranks with the chaplain, the chemist with the dietist. And the specific mention of these callings is not to be construed to exclude other callings which are to an equal degree professional. Mr. Chairman, is this body expected to subscribe to the thesis that everyone who has a college degree is a professional man? Are we expected so to characterize every whippersnapper engaged in the pro-forma examination of income-tax returns in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, or each desk clerk in the public library, or every statistical clerk in the Census Office? Certain callings under the terms of this bill are recognized professions. But many others shall be regarded as professions, evidently for the purposes of this legislation only. The inclusion of these unrecognized professions—which we are asked temporarily to regard as professions—is a perfect illustration of the effrontery which characterizes the organization which is lending its support to this measure. If this House were to be a party to any such mockery, if it should consent to this classification of clerical and other routine positions requiring a modicum of specialized knowledge on the part of the incumbents, it would be deserving of the scorn of every scientist and every bona fide technical and professional man in the country.

I wish to say in addition that this is the worst time of all times to pass a fast and fixed statutory reclassification measure, and that is exactly what this thing is. When it is once passed we are surrendering, except by repeal or amendment, our right through legislation or through the Committee on Appropriations to fix or modify these salaries at any time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Speaking of the fact that this is an inopportune time to reclassify these Government employees, the gentleman recalls that in June, 1920, we passed a bill reclassifying all of the 250,000 postal employees, at a time when the cost of living was right at its peak, and, if I recall correctly, the gentleman supported the bill, as I did, and I think the bill passed unanimously in the House.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I admit that I did, but we did a great many things during the war, by reason of the abnormalcy of that situation, that we would not be justified in doing now. The fact is that we are far afield with reference to normalcy at the present time. There is not a man in this House who thinks as normally to-day as he did before the war. To illustrate by a concrete case, one of the prominent lawyers of Ohio told me that the greatest expert stenographer they have in the State of Ohio told him that men are now speaking faster on the witness stand by 15 per cent than they did before the war. Yet we are now undertaking to fix a statutory list of salaries, if this bill be passed; and those of you who have been here some time know how difficult it is ever to reduce a salary. It is quite another thing to increase it, but once having increased it we can never reduce it. At this one stroke, in my opinion, if we pass this bill, according to the experts who have been figuring upon it, we will increase immediately the expense of the salary list of the United States in this District by more than $8,000,000, and if we include those in the field—200,000 in all—$20,000,000. Therefore I say we should go slow in doing this thing. We should content ourselves by putting into force the Executive order of the President of the United States, who has asked every head of every department for an efficiency rating from his establishment, so that those might be promoted or receive additional salaries that are entitled to them, and whereby those who are now receiving excess salaries may be reduced. Through very little legislation attached to an appropriation bill a sufficient sum of money could be appropriated for these Departments so that with the present statutory salaries these people could be compensated for the still high rate of living until such time as we can write a reclassification bill, which, I admit, is badly needed, but one which does not surrender the right of Congress to some new board, one which does not surrender the right of Congress to the Civil Service Commission or the Bureau of the Budget or to this so-called wage-fixing board.

Here we are each day—perhaps not each day, but each week—creating some new bureau, adding new machinery with new expenditures. We are now considering a deficiency bill where we have the result of two bills which we passed during this Congress that many of us were led to believe would not incur much additional expense, that the machinery and personnel already established would take care of them. We find, however, they are to have a complete bureau, with a new chief, with an assistant chief, with a subchief, with new examiners, with fancy salaries going into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. Now, here is another new bureau provided for. There is no legislation of consequence passing this Congress any more but what provides for a bureau. Two hundred and fifty of these bureaus now legislating for and regulating the business and industries of the country. We no longer have a republican form of government. Ours, in fact, has degenerated or is rapidly degenerating into a bureaucratic government. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I notice this proviso in the bill, and I read it for the purpose of the question:

Reductions in compensation and dismissals shall be made by heads of departments in all cases wherever the efficiency ratings warrant, as provided in section 9 herein, subject to the approval of the Civil Service Commission.

How will this provision effect the reduction of employees in the different departments?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It will not effect the reduction of employees in the departments, and under it, instead, the head of the bureau, who is responsible under the law and under the direction, if you please, of the President of the United States for its enforcement, is absolutely shorn of his authority. He can not take and dismiss anybody, no matter how well such dismissal might be deserved, unless he secures the approval of the Civil Service Commission. What does that commission know about the conduct of an employee? He is not under their observation. Neither the Civil Service Commission nor any member of it has him under observation, but he is under the observation of the head of the department. He is in authority; he is responsible for his conduct. No business concern in this country would like to have a club held over them whereby some agent, far removed, clear outside the conduct of the business, could say whether or not a recalcitrant or an utterly inefficient employee shall be removed. It is unbusinesslike. There is no one with any business sense who will subscribe to that kind of doctrine for a minute. Aside from that, the Civil Service Commission is the last authority on earth that ought to have anything to do with determining whether the men are efficient or inefficient. [Applause.]

They are the ones who put these men in, and before they give a man employment that commission ought to inquire into the efficiency of that man through his examination, and it would be asking them in many cases to take and reverse their first judgment. [Applause.] So, gentlemen, as I said at the outset, this is the most important piece of legislation that will come before us. It is one that is most far-reaching in its effect, and if it is passed as it is written, this Congress is going to surrender the right that it has always jealously guarded, the right, if you please, of appropriating. You will have nothing to do with that business any more except to make the appropriation as submitted by these various departments. It is the last thing that the Congress ought to do—that is, to surrender its right to hold on to the purse strings of the Treasury of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have said all I desire to say on this subject. [Applause.]

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the following occurred:

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8928 and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, when by unanimous consent the time for general debate was fixed upon the pending measure, there were comparatively few requests on either side for time. It was not anticipated that as the debate progressed more such requests would be received. The bill is an important bill and is entitled to be thoroughly discussed. The committee welcomes the discussion. For that reason, in order that time may be accorded to those who are interested but who by reason of the limitation of time heretofore fixed are unable to be granted any, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be extended for 30 minutes, one-half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate upon the bill H. R. 8928, in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, be extended for 30 minutes, one-half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] and one-half by the gentleman from New Jersey. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am sure that many Members of the House will join in the sentiment I am about to express, and that is that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] should have an opportunity of concluding his remarks. Is it the intention of the gentleman from New Jersey to yield further time to the gentleman from Indiana out of this time now being added?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It was my intention to yield the gentleman further time, but in order to insure adequate discussion I shall change the request and make it 50 minutes instead of 30.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suggest that the gentleman make it one hour.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Very well, I make it one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey withdraws the request previously submitted and asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill be extended for one hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] and one-half by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH]. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May 15 minutes of that time be yielded to the gentleman from Indiana to give him an opportunity to conclude his remarks?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I have requests for much more than 15 minutes which can not be granted now. Possibly the gentleman from Texas will help me out. I would be glad to yield the gentleman some time.

Mr. BLACK. I can not yield more than five minutes, but I should be very glad to do that.

Mr. LEHLBACH. How much more time does the gentleman from Indiana desire?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think I can conclude my remarks in 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Very well. The gentleman from Texas will yield the gentleman 5 minutes and I shall yield him 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8928.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8928, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana then concluded his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back five minutes. To whom does the gentleman from Indiana yield it back?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey and two to the gentleman from Texas. [Applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 63 minutes remaining.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman from New Jersey intend to use some time now?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, take this bill up item for item and compare it with the existing scale of salaries paid to the various employees in the Government and in every instance you will find an increase, and in some instances the increases range as high as 100 per cent. In the professional service, in particular instances, salaries are raised from $2,200 to $5,000.

This is not the first time that the heads of departments and heads of bureaus have come before the legislative appropriating committee asking for increases, which have been denied by the Congress and for good reasons.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. CRISP. What is the average increase?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman reporting the bill stated he could not give any information on that subject. He did not have any data. His report is very vapid in information so far as to what the bill really does. There is nothing here, no line, nothing in the report giving any data along that line. I just happened to turn this minute to the scale of wages paid to every person in the District of Columbia under the District appropriation law, and I find here the superintendent of the bathing beach receives $720. Under the estimate for 1923 he would receive $720 and the bonus, if granted. Under this bill he would receive $1,500. They have comfort stations about the District in charge of colored people. You and I have had occasion to visit them on occasions of emergency. These men receive about $900. It is proposed that they receive, under this bill, $30 a week. These are instances culled at random from the bill showing the proposed increase. When we come under the five-minute rule I intend to take up seriatim and compare the increases with existing salaries paid and show what an outlandish proposal is being made to raid the Treasury. We are strong in our promises for economy, and yet to-day on this bill and to-morrow on the mining bill, when another raid of $12,000,000 on the Treasury is being attempted, you will decide whether this House is going to have a record of economy based only upon that rare event of this session of yesterday, when the House defeated an appropriation for less than $10,000 for a most meritorious purpose of improving the health of delinquents brought before the juvenile court of this District.

That is the record up to this day of economy at this session of Congress, $10,000. We come in here strong at the close of the session and say, "We stand for economy." But to-morrow we will vote perhaps—I hope not—$12,000,000 to persons who have no right to it under any circumstances, under a bill changing the law under which those mining claims were originally presented, changing it directly and positively from that which Congress intended. We will have an opportunity to defeat that, and we will have an opportunity before this bill is concluded to defeat this bill, which I estimate in three years will aggregate in increases of salary $15,000,000 to $25,000,000.

It is a rash estimate, it is true. Some years back, before that interregnum which has been so frequent in my legislative experience, I served on the legislative subcommittee, a position now held by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] who has just preceded me. I had occasion to go over for two months each session the bill providing salaries, item by item—the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Under existing law we are appropriating around $150,000,000 for salaries, of which $69,000,000 goes for bonus. In response to an inquiry directed by me to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], reporting this bill, he stated that this bill is predicated upon the hypothesis of including the bonuses and, in many cases, an increase upon that.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I said for the purposes of comparison with present salaries the bonus was included in the present salaries.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is substantially as I stated. With every individual and employee of the Government, in this era when in private employment they are seeking to scale wages down, you are attempting to fasten for all time the wage that was adopted during the emergency of the war. That $240 in many instances was merited and in many instances it was not, as it was paid to many clerks coming into the District who were receiving only half of that salary at home and are now desirous of holding on. And now when there is such an effort to hold on to Government positions we propose to make permanent these high salaries and surrender, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] says, all control over the salaries paid to the officials in the executive departments.

Why, if you pass this law Congress will have no further control. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], the chairman of the committee, says there is going to be economy in allocation; that it does not rest upon the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate as many of these higher salaries as they are appropriating to-day. I stated in reply to him then, and I state now without fear of contradiction, from my acquaintance with the subject that the Bureau of Standards, with the great work it is undertaking, must be maintained. Are you going to pay the present salaries under existing law or give them an increase of from 25 to 50 per cent and in many instances still higher?

Take, for instance, private secretaries—a concrete case. I do not care where you look. Mention any item and I will show you there is an increase. Take, for instance, private secretaries to the department heads. Under the existing law they get $2,500; under this bill they are privileged to receive over $5,000.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman suggest to me where he can find that in the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be very glad to do it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Very well. Take your time.

Mr. BEGG. It is $4,000 instead of $5,000.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Thirty-three hundred dollars is the salary which they can get until they have shown superior merit.

Mr. STAFFORD. Superior merit? Of course my good friend has not had any experience with hearings of executive and bureau officials. If he had, he knows that what we have had to contend with in the inner committee rooms of the Committee on Appropriations has been to prevent these bureau chiefs from always raising the salaries up to the highest notch. You gentlemen know that when these salaries are provided here, ranging from the lower to the higher, it will be only a little while before they reach the top notch.

Why, gentlemen, during the war, when we were all concerned with winning the war, we had heads of the engineering force come before us and say that there were men needed in the Government service who could get $10,000 a year in private employment, but were only receiving $3,000 or $4,000, and they asked us to increase their salary. Did we do it? No. We felt if those men had the proper patriotic feeling for the Government they would continue in the service and not make the dollar mark the issue of their patriotism.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the bill provide that all of these proposed increases shall be approved by the Director of the Budget, and does the gentleman think Gen. Dawes will stand for it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Without overburdening a present overburdened official to determine these niceties, the gentleman knows that this work will not even be supervised, much less reviewed, by the Director of the Budget, even though you may say so in the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The bill provides that they can not become effective until they are approved by the Director of the Budget.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman knows there will be some subordinate official that will submit it, and the Director of the Budget will necessarily be obliged to O. K. the recommendation.

This is a surrender, even if it can not be performed until the Director of the Budget approves, of our congressional duties. For over a hundred years we have been legislating the amount of salaries and the number of positions, detailed work that I would be glad to escape from, but it has been my duty, and there will always be Members found willing to do this detailed work in order to protect the Government, and why should we now surrender all control over the administration of the salaries of these respective clerks and officials within the range prescribed in this bill?

Mr. LONDON. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin spoke of the Director of the Budget leaving the work to subordinates. Under this bill the initial work must be done by the Bureau of the Budget. At the very start of the report, at the very beginning, the Bureau of the Budget is to readjust the rates and fix the rate of compensation. Now, the gentleman will credit the Chief of the Bureau of the Budget with honesty?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not going to be diverted by placing the Chief of the Bureau of the Budget on such a high pedestal as to do work that he can not accomplish. The gentleman knows he can not, if he knows about this work. As pointed out by the gentleman from Indiana, there is an existing organization that is passing upon the efficiency of the respective clerks and officials. I hold in my hand a prepared report of all the employees in the District of Columbia, to be considered by the Congress and the Appropriations Committee, revised and submitted by the Bureau of Efficiency. This report covers the estimated salary of each employee of the District, and an appraisal as to the amount of salary he should receive made by the Bureau of Efficiency. This is feasible, leaving to Congress, with changing conditions, the amount to be paid. The proposal is fixed without any leeway to Congress except between the stated minimum and maximum salaries. A great economy was accomplished about six years ago by the former Postmaster General, Mr. Burleson.

Mr. KING. What was that?

Mr. STAFFORD. In having efficiency ratings to determine promotions to the respective grades in the Post Office Department. It was extended to one division in the Treasury Department, and the Bureau of Efficiency is now equipped for the work; equipped to do that work in a well-qualified manner in all the departments of the Government.

But I dissent from this overscientific scheme of paying all these scientific professional men the same salary, based upon the certificate of graduation from a college, whether they are engaged in accountancy, in agriculture, in economics, in dietetics, in education, in metallurgy, or in meteorology, and so forth. It is not practicable to have the same salary applied to chemists and assistant chemists in the Bureau of Standards with those of chemists and assistant chemists in the Department of Agriculture, and why?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. In a moment. And why? Because in the Bureau of Standards young men fresh from college enter there as probationary workers to qualify them for higher positions in the outer world. They come there from high schools and they come there from colleges, willing to take positions at a low salary in order to get the experience. It is a large university out there; in one sense a scientific educational institution. We are asked to prescribe the same salary for assistant chemists or associates in the Bureau of Standards, where they have one end in view, with those down here in the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture, where they intend to make a life career in the Government service. Or take the Bureau of Patents. I could go on and on and cite illustrations.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Texas yield me some time?

Mr. BLACK. I will yield the gentleman time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Permit me to make this statement: In the Bureau of Patents young lawyers take up the work of examination of patents with the idea of equipping and preparing themselves to become patent attorneys out in the field. You can not under this system fix the same standard salary for the various scientific activities of the Government. It is a beautiful theory, but unworkable in private enterprise, and no large corporation in the country, with vast industries, and the Government with its diverse interests, should think of having such an unworkable scheme as the basis of compensation for the personnel in their respective employments.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman from Wisconsin was formerly a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and he knows that when he was a Member of Congress we divided up the postal clerks and carriers into nine grades as to railway mail clerks, and prescribed the compensation in each grade. Now, can the gentleman tell me where Congress loses any more control over the compensation of an employee in providing for these grades and compensations than it did when we prescribed that there shall be nine grades, or ten grades, I believe, in the Railway Mail Service and six in the postal clerks and employees?

Mr. STAFFORD. We lost control by the very reason of that classification, because when that first went into effect the system of compulsory promotions stopped at $1,000, and it rested with the Congress to control the administration officials in determining how many should be promoted to the $1,100 and $1,200 grades. But the pressure became so great that Congress had to surrender its prerogatives and promote all to the higher grades. They were all promoted to the higher grades. We surrendered our authority then. We surrender it here.

But, speaking of the post-office classification, there is work of a kindred character. Those men are engaged in similar work. The railway postal clerks, with a greater hazard, receive a higher salary. The post-office clerks differ considerably in their work from the letter carriers, although they are receiving the same salary. I have always felt that the postal clerk ought to receive a higher salary than the carrier because of the work he performs, but their work is practically made one under political exigencies. However, that is one identic work. This is not identic.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Has the Bureau of Efficiency established any rule of efficiency that affects the employees covered by this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; it has. I hold their report in my hand, and every member of the committee is privileged to examine it. It covers all the employees of the District of Columbia under the District government. It shows what the estimate is, what their recommendation is to the Appropriations Committee as to the salary that should be paid, based upon their investigation and acquaintance with existing commercial and industrial conditions.

Following this system, as you will see, Congress will always be able to hold its control as to what salary the incumbents of the respective positions shall receive. Congress will always be able to control, but if we pass this act we surrender our authority.

Oh, the gentleman says it is within our control at any time to change it. But remember, gentlemen, there is such a thing as legislative inertia, and when once a statute is on the books it is mighty hard ever to repeal or modify it.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman from Wisconsin, as well as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] spoke of the exaggerated importance of the professional service in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. It seems to me both the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Indiana have overlooked the schedule providing for subprofessional service, and also that they have overlooked the junior grade of professional service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I have not only not overlooked that, but I have considered that, and also the inspectional force, and in the debate under the five-minute rule I will point out where it is proposed to increase salaries from in many instances 25 to 50 per cent, and in some still higher percentages. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I am seeking information and do not wish to answer any questions. I want to inquire, first, whether or not this bill, if administered according to the plan contemplated by the committee, does not as thus administered increase salaries and materially increase expenditures. A number of gentlemen who have spoken concerning the bill have said that it very greatly increases salaries on the average. I have not heard anybody deny that it will materially increase expenses even if it is administered according to the idea of those who wrote the bill.

Then I ask the question whether or not it does not place with the heads of departments, bureau chiefs, and heads of divisions the power to greatly increase salaries by their allocations. Since I came here there has been no general appropriation bill discussed involving salaries and compensation of employees and questions of economy in which there has not been uniform complaint that the heads of departments, the bureau chiefs, and others do not cooperate in measures of economy. It is always said that they do everything they can to increase salaries and expenditures. This complaint has been made against men of both political parties. It applies to no one party exclusively. If that is so, then is the check provided against it in this bill effective? That is, will the Bureau of the Budget have in actual practice sufficient opportunity to control and correct that evil?

I understand that it is admitted that the heads of departments and bureau chiefs are to make the initial allocation because the Bureau of the Budget has not sufficient information to enable it to make the allocations which will determine the salaries. If it is without information it must seek it, and in order to secure the information it will have to investigate the work and compensation of a great number of employees. The Joint Committee on Reclassification have had hearings, voluminous hearings, the reports of which are voluminous, filling two or three volumes. They have made a report, filling more than 800 pages. I seriously doubt that the Bureau of the Budget will be able to go into details and secure information which it is admitted they have not now, so as to effectually revise the work done by the much criticized heads of departments and bureaus, who are to make the allocations in the first instance. Does this not mean that the allocations will in actual practice usually be made and therefore salaries largely determined by the heads of departments and bureaus?

In the discussion by those who are familiar with the terms of the bill I would like to have these two questions answered: First, does not the bill even if fairly administered materially increase the Government expenditures? Second, is there any assurance that this tendency to be reckless in creating Government expense which is constantly charged against bureau chiefs and heads of departments is properly guarded? Is there anything to effectually prevent them from doing the things which my colleagues say they uniformly do; that is, to increase expenditures, raise salaries, and constantly oppose the efforts on the part of Congress to reduce expenditures? [Applause.]

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we will get clear and explicit answers so that Members of the House can see their way clear in regard to this measure. I do not.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it has long been recognized by those familiar with the Government service that the Congress should take action providing for a general reclassification of the salaries in the bureaus and departments of the Government. The situation was sufficiently unsatisfactory at the beginning of the war, when there were many inequalities in compensations. The conditions became very much worse during the war period, with the creation of new bureaus and administrative agencies. Most of the new bureaus were organized largely under lump-sum appropriations, and in the fixing of salaries under those appropriations they were in the majority of cases increased above those being paid in the old bureaus and departments for the same class of service.

The increased cost of living from war conditions rendered it necessary for us to make some provision to meet, partially at least, the situation as affecting those in the Government service. We did it rather lamely and inadequately, but the best we could under the circumstances, by granting a bonus, first of $120 and second of $240 per annum, to Government employees in departmental and the field services who received a salary less than $2,500. We have been limping along under the bonus plan. It never was an entirely logical and scientific plan, and we have all realized that eventually we must eliminate the bonus and provide some sound, sensible, and reasonable basis of compensation.

A general commission on classification was appointed and in due time made its report. From time to time since the report was made committees having jurisdiction over these matters have considered reclassification bills. The bill before us is the latest suggestion and recommendation which has been made to Congress. It is the most moderate and carries the lowest salaries of any of the various bills that have been presented, so far as I now have in mind.

In presenting this bill the committee has very wisely, I think, made provision for the taking effect of this modified and classified salary in a very practical way. If this bill shall become a law any time after the 5th of December or the meeting of the next session, it would become the duty of each departmental chief in presenting his estimates to the Bureau of the Budget next summer or fall to present those estimates with salaries based on allocations under the new law. It would then become the duty of the Director of the Budget to review and revise the allocations of the departments, and independent agencies of the Government, and make such changes in the allocations as he deemed wise, proper, and fair, and to transmit to Congress a year from the coming December estimates based on the new classification and on the allocations under it. It would then become the duty of the Committee on Appropriations in considering these estimates to take into consideration whether or not the allocations made by the bureaus as modified by the Bureau of the Budget were fair, reasonable, and just under the law.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Would the Committee on Appropriations have authority to go back of the salaries fixed by the authority given in this bill in making their appropriations?

Mr. MONDELL. The Committee on Appropriations would have authority to reduce the appropriations, and a reduction of the appropriations would compel either a reduction of the personnel or a change in the allocation of the personnel—one or both.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I think this is a very important portion of this bill, and I invite the gentleman's attention to it and would like to have his opinion upon it. After these men have been assigned to the particular class or grade under the bill, and they are then acting within the powers granted to them, would not the salary of each man then be fixed by that act under this law, and if we fail to make the appropriation would not each man have the right to go into court and claim that he is entitled to additional pay?

Mr. MONDELL. I think not. Practically every one of the classifications—I think every one—has from three to five salary grades, and the question is into which salary grade is a clerk entitled to go? That is a matter of opinion. Gentlemen will realize that while the question of how much this change is to cost is important, and it is to a certain extent a question of the basic salary, yet of even greater importance is the matter of the allocation in the service.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it not much easier, more practical, for Congress to exercise its authority over these positions and over these expenditures now than it would be after we pass this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has been here a long time. He is a very valuable and efficient Member of Congress. He knows perfectly well that the Congress can not, never has, and never will in the passage of an appropriation bill properly classify, allocate, and adjust salaries. It must be done in the first instance by the departments. It is altogether too much of an undertaking for the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is exactly what I intended in my question, and this is the time to keep down expenses rather than to turn this bill loose.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, that is upon the theory that the bill does largely increase expenses. As to that there is a considerable difference of opinion. Frankly I do not pretend to know, as many gentlemen do pretend to know who have not studied the matter, I fear, more than I, just how much it is going to cost. I am compelled to take the opinion of men in whose judgment I have confidence, who I know have carefully considered the matter, and their opinion is that this law, properly administered—and we must assume that having gone through the hands of the budget for revision, having then had the scrutiny of the Appropriation Committee, it is to be fairly administered—will slightly increase the present cost of the Government service, with the same number of employees. There should be fewer employees under a proper classification. We all know this. It would be very difficult under any conditions to readjust salaries and decrease them. That would be a very difficult thing to do at any time in a general readjustment, and it is doubtful if we should attempt it. We all know that, as a matter of fact, there are bureaus and departments of the Government where employees, particularly those doing work requiring professional and scientific knowledge, are not properly paid or even reasonably paid. The Department of the Interior is one of the shining examples of a department which in many of its bureaus requires professional and scientific knowledge of the highest character—

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment—where the salaries are not what they ought to be. I should expect under any reclassification that in a bureau of that sort there would be some increase in the cost. On the other hand, in some of the new bureaus and departments or establishments, unquestionably a fair classification under this act would reduce the present cost.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield first to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. I just wondered if the gentleman knew of any Government positions that did not have somebody now filling them or ready to fill them. I have a good many competent fellows that I would like to place in such a job.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, if the gentleman from Ohio will permit, that is a very smart thing to say, but it does not do the gentleman credit to say it. Because you may be able to get a man or hold a man down to a miserable wage, to say that therefore you must not ever give him another dollar, I think would not do anyone credit.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it not a fact that in the Patent Office they have been stripped of their best men because they were underpaid, and that they are 50,000 applications behind now?

Mr. MONDELL. While we are talking about the Patent Office I am reminded that some gentlemen who are most disturbed about this bill were very earnest and very active in their efforts to bring before the House in the last Congress—pass through the House—a bill which increases the salaries in the Patent Office from 25 to 30 per cent above what they would be increased under this reclassification. They are very urgent upon me now and have been for months to bring up that bill for consideration in the present Congress. The bill is now upon the calendar, reported. It has once passed this body under a special rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. I have not thought that that bill ought to be passed, because, in my opinion, the salaries are out of proportion to other Government salaries. It is not a question of whether they are too high or too low. They are out of proportion, and to pass it would make the inequalities greater than they are now. What we ought to do is to try to iron out the inequalities, not by a general increase of salaries but by such reasonable arrangement of salaries as will be fair and just.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Suppose the gentleman is convinced that this bill, if enacted into law, would increase salaries in the District of Columbia $8,000,000 and in the entire field, including the District of Columbia, $20,000,000, does the gentleman think this is a good time to pass it?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman from Indiana can prove that any of these basic salaries are too high, I hope he and all the other gentlemen will do the reasonable thing of analyzing those salaries and offering amendments reducing them to a point where they think they ought to be reduced. That is the way to treat this bill. The gentleman from New Jersey himself will be willing to admit, I assume, that there is ground for difference of opinion as to these various salaries, and if gentlemen think they are too high I hope they will offer amendments as we go through adjusting them, as they think they ought to be adjusted. It is one thing to amend a bill as gentlemen may think it ought to be amended, and another thing just blindly to be against it [applause] and against a proper and reasonable and legitimate classification of Government salaries.

Now, gentlemen certainly can not take the position that we can go on forever as we now are. Some salaries are high, some salaries are low, unquestionably and indefensibly, with a bonus going along applying to some to a greater extent than it ought to and not applying at all to many employments in the service. We can not continue that way. Gentlemen know that the Committee on Appropriations can not go through the whole list and fix these salaries. If there is any other way under heaven whereby you can cure the situation and get down to something reasonable and equitable other than this, some gentleman ought to propose it. If the salaries are too high, some one ought to propose an amendment. They should try to reduce them to the proper level; and I am sure if the House or the committee is convinced that any of these levels are too high it will be glad to join in reducing them; but it is certain we must legislate on this subject. We can not avoid it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman spoke of the Patent Office, and in that connection the gentleman from Indiana asked whether the rates in the bill under discussion were high. The gentleman embodied his views, which he expressed this afternoon, in a bill which was introduced, and I call attention to the fact that the Solicitor of the Patent Office under the bill under discussion would get a salary of $3,120 and under the bill which the gentleman from Indiana introduced he would get anywhere from $4,500 to $5,700, to be fixed by the head of the department without provision of review.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, gentlemen, this is work that can not be avoided. It is the duty of the Congress to begin to make some provision, and it has been my purpose to begin now, and it will be nearly a year and a half before these salaries go into effect, during which period they are going to be before the department for six months—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. And before the Bureau of the Budget for several months, and finally for consideration by the Committee on Appropriations of this House. Now, if any gentleman can propose any better plan than that I am sure we will be glad to hear it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Would not it be a simple method of meeting a great deal of the adverse criticism to place a provision in this bill to reserve to the Congress the approval of the report made showing the allocation, showing the salaries that are to be paid, and therefore showing the number of increases that will be made?

Mr. MONDELL. The Committee on Appropriations will have full authority, as it has now, to increase or decrease the appropriation, and the control is there. Besides, the Bureau of the Budget passes upon it after the allocations are made. If the gentleman has any amendment he can offer along the line he suggests, I am sure it will be very gladly considered; but what I want to emphasize is this fact, that it is one thing not to agree with certain details in a bill—

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How long has it been since the salaries were fixed this way before?

Mr. MONDELL. There are many salaries which were fixed 60, 50, and 40 years ago. They are all out of harmony one with the other. We all know that, and are we going to continue indefinitely in that way or are we to meet the problem squarely? It does not settle a thing, it does not get anywhere, to say there is some provision in a bill I do not like. The way to cure that is to offer an amendment curing or reducing it, and let us discuss it and settle it here according to our best judgment; but the Congress must do something in this matter of reclassification or it is failing utterly in its duty with regard to a tremendously important matter. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 46 minutes remaining.

Mr. BLACK. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson].

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just taken his seat, the minority leader—

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Majority.

Mr. Sisson. Majority leader—it will not be long before it will be the minority, and if we pass many bills like this it is certain to be a minority—but what I started to say was I think he takes the wrong position. I do not think it is incumbent upon anybody opposed to the bill to try to clarify anything; I think it is the duty of the proponents of the bill to make it perfectly clear that they have a good and proper bill.

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman understand the bill? Has he read it? I mean it frankly.

Mr. Sisson. I have done the best I could to understand it. I will tell you frankly I do not understand every clause of it. Does the gentleman understand it?

Mr. LONDON. I think I do. Does the gentleman understand that the primary object of the bill is to eliminate duplication and thus promote economy?

Mr. Sisson. If it is, then it is far from the mark, and the gentleman's view, like the view he takes of politics generally, is all wrong. I did not know that the gentleman got up for the purpose of catechising me. If he has any light to offer, let him get the time and offer it to the committee. But this much you do know, that in the clerical service the present law provides that the classified service begins at $900 a year, and the highest salary paid in the clerical service is $1,800, except where it is specifically provided for some meritorious service, and that goes to about $2,000, and I do not know of any man in it that gets over $2,250. This bill starts the clerical service at $1,080 and winds up at $5,200.

I have been connected for several years with the committee that has to deal with the various departments of Government in regard to salaries, and it is the most terrific undertaking to keep salaries down under the present law. And I see the chairman who made up the last bill sitting before me, whose courage and patriotism and industry is not excelled by anybody in this House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood], and he bears testimony that this statement is true. It is with the most terrific sort of pressure that we are able to keep down top-heavy salaries by crowding them all in the highest classification in the civil-service classification as it now exists. And just as certain as you pass this bill, just so certain will it be that in a very few years you are going to have all of these clerical forces crowded into these high salaries. What is the limit? The limit under this bill for clerical forces is $5,200. Who is to determine what is going to be done under the bill? The bureau chief. The Secretary of the Treasury could no more attend to this than he could fly to the moon, because if he undertook to do it he could not be Secretary of the Treasury. Therefore he would have to delegate the power to the bureau chiefs of the various departments. This is equally true of all Cabinet officers. The chiefs in fixing the salaries of those under them will have the men above them to fix their salaries, so it will be tickle me and I will tickle you. I am talking about a practical proposition, not a theory. There will be men clamoring, as there are always, that they are not getting enough money. And you can not blame them. You do not blame a man for wanting to increase his salary, and when the limit is $5,200 you are going to have men ambitiously crowding to get into the higher grade. Under the present law, if the Appropriations Committee should decide to raise a salary too high, it is subject to a point of order, but under this particular clause if your Appropriations Committee—

Mr. ROSSDALE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. Sisson. For a question.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Does the gentleman think that the employees in the Patent Office ought to have their salaries revised?

Mr. Sisson. Some of them, perhaps, and some of them not. I want to say that if I thought you could always find the meritorious clerk and give him an increase in salary it would be all right. I know many of them are paid too low a salary. That is one of the evils that exists and will always exist. It is one of the evils of the civil service that merit is not always rewarded under it.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Will the gentleman permit one more question? If that is so, and this evil admittedly exists, then ought we to keep all of these employees at the lowest possible salary, because, forsooth, some employee who is not worth it may possibly get an increase under this bill?

Mr. Sisson. The gentleman ought to get time on the other side of the question. If you want to ask a question, ask it, because I do not intend to yield to the gentleman to make a speech in my time. There is nothing in my remarks or in my career in Congress that will warrant such an insinuation. The insinuation is far from the truth, because I believe every man is entitled to what he honestly earns, and I think that Congress ought to fix it. But I do not agree to the gentleman's position which would seem that he would pay every incompetent a big salary solely because a very few good people ought to get a better salary.

Now, when you get to fixing salaries in the Appropriations Committee you are going to find, if you try to economize, there is going to be some fellow get up and make a motion to increase a certain salary. Under the present law a point of order will lie. But under this bill a point of order on a clerical raise will not lie until you try to make his salary above $5,200, because they will say, "We have got the law for it." Now, gentlemen, I do not know who you are legislating for. I presume for the employees in the Government, certainly not for your constituents and the overburdened taxpayers.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then, as I gather it, here is a range from $1,080 to $5,200. A man is getting $3,300 and a motion is made to increase it to $4,500, and you can not make a point of order against it, because it is a part of the law that you can go up to that.

Mr. Sisson. Absolutely. Everything is now on a rising scale. These salaries have been increased from 20 to 100 per cent in the last five years.

Mr. BLACK. A particular employee to receive a particular salary would have to be allocated into a particular grade or else he would not be entitled to receive that salary.

Mr. Sisson. Do you mean to tell me, then, that Congress has abdicated its functions to not increase the salary of a little clerk, when we can change the law and increase his salary here?

Mr. BLACK. Of course, Congress could do it after you make it in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. Sisson. It is in order, because it is the law.

Mr. BLACK. Unless the employee is allocated into the particular grade it would not be lawful to pay him that salary.

Mr. STEVENSON. On page 27, line 15, it says:

The annual rates of compensation for classes of positions in this grade shall be $2,200, $2,400, $2,580, $2,760, and $2,940.

Now, you can take a man at $2,200 and you can increase him to $2,940 without a point of order being made?

Mr. Sisson. There is no doubt about that, because it is the same grade. But in this bill, if I have read it correctly, and I do not want you to follow me unless my reading of it will warrant what I am saying—I say that if a man should offer an amendment to increase the grade of an employee, there is nothing in this bill that would prevent it, because if you could convince Congress that he is a man that falls within this grade, the law provides for him. I may be wrong about it, but, at any rate, I do not think there is anything that is a better teacher than practical experience, and when you consult those men who have been dealing with the fixing of salaries you will find that the pressure is enormous all the time to go to the higher grade, and our only defense heretofore has been that you can not do it because the $1,800 salary is the maximum.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. How much higher are the salaries that are paid from lump-sum appropriations than those on the statutory roll?

Mr. Sisson. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that. The greatest evil occurring in the executive departments of this Government in the last few years has been the lump-sum appropriation, which reached its maximum during the war. The result has been that the very evils complained of by the advocates of this bill have been brought about by the expenditure of these lump-sum appropriations, where they increased the salaries far beyond those of the other employees who are on the old statutory roll. The result has been that we have had to go back again, time after time, and increase the salaries for services in all the departments of the Government. Why? Because they will show you that in a certain bureau of the War Department, for example, which is paid out of a lump-sum appropriation, the employees' salaries are higher than are the salaries of those sitting at the same desk who are on the regular pay roll, so that in that way they have gradually increased the salaries until they are now not only $240 higher but in many instances higher by many times $240.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] called attention to a feature of this bill which I wish to speak of, and I am glad he did it. It is an important thing to consider that every one of these salaries will be at least $240 higher than the present statutory salary provided for each position, and in many instances they will be very much more than that. Therefore this bill writes the $240 bonus into permanent law.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. As I understand, section 1 and section 6 fix that bonus on us perpetually.

Mr. Sisson. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It has been stated on this side that it is conceded that some clerks are paid too much and some too little. Does the gentleman know any way under section 6 whereby anybody who is paid too much could be reduced?

Mr. Sisson. No. I am very glad the gentleman mentioned that. If there are any inequalities existing in the Government service at the present time you will not get any of them remedied by this law, because those men who are the chief clerks and who administer the law are not going to reduce anybody's salary. Who is it that has served in Congress longer than any of the rest of us? I see before me one of the most distinguished Americans, the ex-Speaker of the House, who for many years was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He has been a Member here as long as many of us are old, and may God spare him to be here much longer! Ask Uncle JOE CANNON how many times during all the time he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations he has seen a bureau chief or the head of a department come before Congress and ask that anybody's salary be reduced. Never! A man making such a request is an animal that never grew up in Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. For that reason this bill makes reductions mandatory upon the heads of departments.

Mr. Sisson. Oh, I think there is nothing in this bill that makes reductions of salary mandatory. As a matter of fact, it is practically mandatory that there shall be no reductions unless the bureau chief or the man appointed to perform this duty shall arbitrarily reduce an employee, and he is not going to do it. I have been here too long to believe such a thing as that. Men who say that never served on the subcommittee on the legislative, executive, and judicial bill. If they had had that service they would never say that, because I say to you, Brother REED, that that animal does not grow, and he is not going to be produced by reason of this bill.

In some of these places the limit goes as high as $7,200. Let us suppose for a moment that our friend here, Judge HARDY of Texas, is a chief of bureau or the head of a department, and I go to him, knowing him well, and say to him, "Judge HARDY, I am getting only $5,000 a year. I think you think that I am a most valuable man, and I have a big family. Give me $7,200, which is permitted under the law." The judge and I know each other well, we talk together every day, and we are engaged in the same kind of work. Our friendship, our association is a very close tie, a very close relationship. I get the raise, of course. I am not blaming the man who does it, but I blame the Congressman who puts it in the law so that a hand may be placed in the Treasury in that way, and that without the consent of Congress.

Now, gentlemen, if you gentlemen on this side of the House want to take the bars down and turn these men loose on the Treasury, you can pass this bill, but within from three to five years, as surely as I stand here, you are going to find the salaries of all these people doubled, while wages elsewhere in this country, all over the United States, may be cut in two.

I believe in reasonable salaries, but I want to remind you that these people in the departments here work a less number of hours than people outside in private employment. These people in the departments get 30 days' leave with pay, and they get 30 days' sick leave with pay, and they get more holidays than anybody else, and they get during the summer time a half holiday on Saturday.

Representing, as you do, your constituents, who work—and I do not suppose there is one of you whose constituents do not work—your thoughts should be for those people. The people never have a voice around here. The great public, whom we might style "Old Man People," is not a member here, and has no voice here. You will find organized labor and organized capital represented here on the one side or the other, and you will find people trying to get money for themselves, but it is rare that "Old Man People" has anybody to speak for him. If somebody does, he comes from some organization of some kind that pays his salary to come here. That is because the public is an inarticulate mass. They can only speak here through you. You should think of the people of whom and to whom you speak in such endearing terms when you solicit their votes. Do not lose your intellectual and mental integrity. Keep constantly in mind what a bookkeeper receives as his compensation at home. Keep constantly in mind what the ordinary laborer is getting at home; keep constantly in mind what the ordinary man is paid and what the ordinary Government clerk is paid. Keep their salaries in mind and when you do compare the salaries the men get at home with what the men working for the Government get, do not make it too attractive for some of them might lose their jobs. Increase the salary of Brother Smith, and some good man will be reaching up for his office here. [Laughter.] If a man wants to serve his country, if he wants to serve his people, here is a good opportunity, vote against this bill. The complaint is not that the salaries are not high enough; with the platform you supported in the last election, under the Democratic platform that we ran on in the last election, no man is going to get up here and say "I am going to increase salaries wholesale." Why? Because you are not only bound to vote for economy in one instance, but you are bound to vote for economy all along the line.

The only reason for all of these bills has been on account of the so-called inequalities in salaries, and this bill will not, in my judgment, eradicate a single inequality. Why? Because the salaries that are now paid plus the bonus is going to be the base that the bureau chiefs and heads of departments are going to act upon. Are they different men than they were yesterday? They are the same people that have been here under a Democratic administration and under a Republican administration. When did they get the courage to reduce a salary? Will the passage of the bill change the leopard's spots? No. They are going to be just as tender toward these salaries as they were before. All they have to do now is to come before the Appropriations Committee and recommend the reduction of a salary, and the Appropriations Committee would jump at it like a duck would jump at a June bug. I would like to hear one man come before the Appropriations Committee and advocate the reduction of a salary. I would vote to promote him to the highest office possible under the Civil Service Commission. He would be a rara avis, he would be unique, a man that never was born, or if born never visited the city of Washington. I would like to have a photograph of him and have it exhibited as one of the wonders of the world—a bureau chief recommending that a man's salary be reduced. [Applause.] Yet that is what has got to be done under this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi two minutes more.

Mr. SISSON. Gentlemen, vote for this bill if you want to; it is every man's right; but when you do, do not vote for it blindly. The gentleman from Wyoming says do not vote against it blindly. I tell you when I do not see clearly I will vote "no," until they make me see clearly, until they resolve the doubt in favor of the taxpayer. You resolve the doubt in favor of the people. Shakespeare says:

Suffer those ills thou hast rather than fly to others you know not of.

Let us not hasten to vote for those bills we know not of. Let us not vote until they make it clear as noonday that we are not going to increase these salaries wholesale and build up a pay roll that will further greatly burden the overtaxed people. I am of the opinion, as is the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood], that it will cost at least $8,000,000 in the District of Columbia, and throughout the country the cost will run up to $20,000,000, and we will be extremely fortunate in three years from now if you are not paying much more than $20,000,000 to these people. Look and see clearly before you vote. I will reverse the proposition of the gentleman from Wyoming and ask you to see clearly before you take affirmative action. Be sure you are right before you go ahead. The best vote on earth, until you do see clearly, is the good, old honest "no," and that will do nobody any harm. [Applause.]

In conclusion, when you vote for this bill you abrogate your control of the salaries unless you amend this bill, for under its present terms the power to fix the employees' grade is in the department and that automatically fixes the salary. If Congress does not appropriate for it such employee would have a claim against the Government. Are you willing to do this, gentlemen of the House? I do not think so yet. If so, let us abolish Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am in entire sympathy with the purpose sought to be attained by this bill. I think the committee, in working it out, deserves credit for the accomplishment thus far. I am sorry that they did not do in this bill just exactly what the Senate has done with the bill known as the tariff bill that we passed in a hurry—secure definite information as to exactly what we are doing—instead of acting blindly, as we will be compelled to do in this bill. The only thing I am fearful of in this measure, and the only hesitancy I have at all, is that we will ignorantly and unreasonably increase a lot of salaries. Now, if I had any guaranty that that would not happen I would be enthusiastically in favor of the proposition; and I suggest that it would not have been impossible to have secured that information. If the committee, after preparing the bill, had called on the chiefs of the departments and said, "Allocate these employees according to the bill and let us know what the Government pay roll will be under that allocation," then they could go before the House and with certainty told the House the resultant of its action instead of asking us to take it on faith and the guessing ability of those responsible for it, and if we find we have pulled a boner we can then repeal it. That is surely real statesmanship. However, the gentlemen on both sides of the House said that very thing could be done. If we pass this bill, no one knows whether it will increase the cost of government one million or twenty million.

I want to call attention to this fact, that either this bill is going to pay too high salaries in some departments or else we are not going to pay high enough salaries in other departments.

Now, the first classification of employees are those whose qualifications must be equivalent to a college graduate; in other words, known as the professional class. Their salaries range from $1,800 to $7,200 per annum. Not that I think $7,200 per annum is too much for a man with a college education well trained scientifically for any particular work, but I want to call attention to the fact that teachers in the high schools in the city of Washington whose requirements for entrance into the job are that they be college graduates in one of the best universities in the United States, and if teaching special subjects must have diplomas in that special feature on top of the fundamental basic education. You are not paying them in this high school to start with but $1,440, including the bonus, and the basic salary is $1,200. They can increase that until they get to $2,240, and there is not a single teacher in the high school who can survive unless he or she continues to go to college to some special summer school during the time of vacation when climbing from a salary of $1,400 to a salary of $2,240 a year. In class B the minimum salary is $2,200 and the maximum $2,500. Let us take the office of the principal, whether man or woman. The salary ranges from $2,500 to $3,500. In other words, they get a basic teacher's pay plus $30 per added teacher under their jurisdiction. The superintendent of the big high schools starts in at $3,500, and by effort, by constantly spending money to go to school, by supervising over 100 people, by supervising over 3,500 boys and girls, may attain the magnificent sum of $5,000 a year; but down here in some Government department they are willing to pay $7,200 a year, and men there may not be in charge of more than 5 or 6 or 7 or 10 men or women.

Let us go now to the subprofessional departments. My figures would not be so bad in contrast probably if that was the single item. What is the subprofessional department? When I read through it means these people who are playground directors, recreation activity people, different jurisdictional people in minor positions, as, for instance, a subordinate draftsman or something of that kind. Their salaries range from $1,080 to $5,200 a year, or within $800 as much as the superintendent of your fifty or sixty thousand boys and girls in this city gets. When we put this over let us either pay a decent wage to the men and women who have charge of the direction of education in the city or else let us cut down these to a par with brains. Why, there is provided in here for the man who is responsible for bringing the children to school—the truant officer—a salary of $2,340 under this classification, which is more than the woman gets who teaches 40 or 50 boys all day. We find another man or woman who sweeps out at the morgue, who cleans up the garbage around the market place, who is classified higher than your school-teacher in the city of Washington. Either cut down the one or raise the other.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman desires to be fair?

Mr. BEGG. Certainly; I do.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Those people do not get any more than $1,080. The gentleman knows that the minimum of the school-teacher is $1,200. I suggest the gentleman look at the top of page 21.

Mr. BEGG. There it is, from $1,040 to $1,260. I was not far wrong.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman has read the bill, he knows that these grades are subdivided, and that the street sweeper would never get such a maximum, that he would be kept at $1,080 until he did something else. The grades are susceptible of being divided into subdivisions by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

Mr. BEGG. I can not yield any further. I simply wanted to forcibly impress on this House that these salaries we are recommending for Government employees are out of all comparison with the salaries we are paying to our school-teachers.

I want now to call attention to something else. The leader of the House rather resented the question that I put to him. I put it in all seriousness. He said it was smart to ask the question, but that it did not mean anything. I want to ask the leader now, seriously, is there a Government departmental vacancy in Washington now because you can not find a man qualified to fill it at the price you are paying, which is 25 per cent more than one can get on the outside for similar work? Are there vacancies in the governmental departments, or are there two applicants for every position? It is all tommyrot to say the Government can not get help because it does not pay salaries big enough. There is a young lady in the telephone service downtown in commercial life who gets $75 a month. She asked me if there was any chance to get on the Government pay roll. I asked her why she wanted to get in on the Government pay roll and she said it was because we paid $35 a month more than she could get in the city of Washington. I can hire a stenographer as good as any on the Government pay roll for $6 a week less than the Government pays. The same is true of the typists or most any employee of the Government save the technically trained.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BLACK. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I want to call the gentleman's attention, in connection with his remarks about the vacancies in the Government service, to an interview which appeared in one of the daily newspapers, in which a member of another body ascribed the late election returns to the fact that the dominant party had not been making any places for the faithful.

Mr. BEGG. When I spoke on the platform I said that if I had the power I would fire 25 per cent of the people on the Government pay roll, and it always was applauded, and I say to you now that if I ever get a chance to vote for that I will do it. I or anyone can run any business of the Government with 25 per cent less help than we now have if it were private business. [Applause.] I shall not increase the salaries until we can not get competent men and women to fill them properly at the present pay, especially when that pay is higher than those in outside life get for doing the same work.

I want to say in fairness to the gentleman in charge of this bill that I am going to make an effort to cut these schedules, and I am going to vote for the bill if I can cut them within any kind of basis where I can at all sanction them, because I believe the plan is in the right direction. I do not know what attitude the committee will take on cutting any of these schedules. I will go further than that and say to the chairman of the committee that if he can produce any figures here to convince me that it will not increase the salaries unreasonably, I would be willing to vote for the bill. Where will we stand if we raise salaries when the railroad employees are threatening a strike? Nearly every one of us were in sympathy with the cut of 12 per cent in wages for the railroad man, but I say to you I would rather pay a railroad conductor or a railroad engineer $3,000 a year than some of the people who are getting it under these schedules in the Government service. These people under Government pay roll get 365 days of salary. They work with 30 days' vacation and their sick leave. They have a permanent position, while the man out in daily life must take his leave when the shop closes down, and if he gets sick he loses his place. He also has governmental retirement insurance. To work for the Government is a preferred job, and the man who does that ought to be willing to work for a little less salary, to pay for the privilege, instead of expecting more. He has the best job of any class of employees in this country.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, we have just heard a very eloquent oration from the gentleman who says he was sent here to represent "Old Man People" and to explain his wishes. I have a certificate myself from him, too, and shall make a little talk for him. Turning to page 18 I find a list of employees working for $420, $480 per annum, and so on. So far as one can judge they are getting little enough so they can not be included in the list of high salaries. That is where they begin, $420. All this talk on this bill about high salaries is sheer talk. There is comparatively a small number of these people who get high salaries. The distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations who spoke here so eloquently a moment ago some years ago wanted us to increase the salary of the District Commissioners to $6,000. I objected to it at the time, because it was to raise the salary of a man who was then receiving $5,000. That was not a reclassification; that was a pure raise of salary. He was just as earnest for that then as he is now against reclassification. Except in the Post Office Department we have no method of practically comparing work accomplished by various employees, of fixing their comparative value. There is no such thing; there is no classification. Salaries are not founded upon any principle of equity, common sense, or economy. This bill is not an attempt to raise salaries; it is an attempt, after a long and careful study, to classify clerks so their rewards will be in keeping with the results achieved, governed by common sense, which means economy in the long run. They say there are salaries here going to be raised. What salary is this going to raise? The gentlemen have not fixed one instance in which there will be an increase. You can get a $10,000 Shipping Board salary raised here without batting an eye, for a smart man, and you know he is able, because he can draw down $10,000 a year without accomplishing anything else. But when you wish to raise a small salary you turn loose the high tide of oratory and parsimony.

The gentlemen gravely say that they can not understand the bill and that therefore they must not vote for it; that it is the safe thing to vote "no" whenever you do not just comprehend what has been done by the committee. If that were the proper rule, the Appropriations Committee never would get a bill through in the world. The fact is that the department and field service of the United States is such an absolute babel of confusion that careful men have spent months in devising this plan to systematize the work and coordinate the industry, and they have submitted this bill to you because it is absolutely essential that something be done in the matter.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I regret to say that I only have five minutes. These good sensible men have prepared this tendered system of classification. If the gentlemen can not give us a better one, they should vote for this. It has cost considerable money to formulate this method. The gentlemen could not prepare and submit another one to take its place without months of work, and yet they want to throw all that has been done so far into the discard. They suggest no flaw in it except the possibility that some men of small salaries may get larger salaries. That is not the purpose of the bill, and there is no plan like that in it. On the contrary, if you turn to page 6 you will see that reductions in pay and discharges must be made by the heads of departments whenever a clerk's efficiency ratings indicate that he is not earning his salary. You can not get that done now with any degree of equity or fairness or reason, and this is a tremendous step forward. It will remedy one of the greatest evils of our present system. I could find instances where heads of bureaus cut down the wages of clerks, but it is not done with any application of any rule, but simply by the feeling of the head of the bureau or the chief clerk. An instance like that was called to my attention just the other day. If this bill becomes a law, hereafter efficiency will govern the salaries, and there will be equal pay for equal work, and the chiefs of the work become personally responsible for getting all that the taxpayers pay for. If there are to be some occasional slight increases of salaries here and there because of efficiency, much more will be saved by the coordination accomplished, by the duplication disposed of, by the substitution of united and logical labor toward a definite end, for a continual jumble of useless clerks tramping over each other in order to get in enough hours a day to be remembered at the end of the month.

Gentlemen on this floor actually advance it as an argument against this bill that other people would like to have these jobs. Yes; the army of the unemployed treads forever on the heels of the workers. The cohorts of the ambitious seek to climb on the shoulders of their brothers in the great strife for a foothold in the world. There is somebody ready to fill every job in the world whenever it becomes vacant. No lawyer ever took a suit in court but some other attorney craved the opportunity to do so. No doctor ever rode to a patient but some other physician wished he had been called. No groceryman ever sold a pound of sugar but his rival was seeking to divert the customer to his place of business. That is the way the world is made, gentlemen, and it does seem to me that a man must be lacking in love for his fellow man who taunts the poor struggler with the fact that somebody else would like to have his job. There is somebody ready to take your job, gentlemen, each one of you. But a man's rewards do not depend upon that condition but upon his efficiency in securing results by his labors, and this bill makes that the test for these people hereafter, the test of efficiency.

Are these people paid too much? Two-thirds of them ride forever on the ragged edge of want. Not 5 per cent of them ever accumulate a competence. Which of them ever amassed a fortune? That is no argument, gentlemen, against classifying these people. This is not an occasion for eloquence, but simply an opportunity for the exercise of good, sound common sense in the treatment of our fellow citizens that are bound for life to this particular business as soon as they get into it. These people do not draw the salaries given officers in the Army, where you have thousands of commissioned officers more than you need. The committee's report shows that assigning the clerks to their proper grades is done subject to the careful supervision by the Budget Bureau itself, which is given ample latitude to make necessary adjustments and to protect the interests of the taxpayers.

"Old Man People," my friends, is not so stingy as some people seem to think he is. These employees who work down here for $420 a year and up are his sons and his daughters and they are entitled to have a definite understanding as to what service they are in, where they belong, and what their salary is to be, and that they have some chance to rise higher in the service by hard work. This idea is founded upon a principle. The committee has figured it out. These people after long service and hard work have presented a direct plan under which we can not only bring out the best work but secure economy of effort and expenditure. Others say that they do not understand it, and so they will vote against it. If gentlemen do not like it, give us a better plan, show us some other way to do it. It is time, gentlemen, that we have some specifications and plans upon which to work. The Post Office Department has. They know what they are doing there. What if our citizens do like to work for their Government? The United States Government ought to be the best employer of labor in the United States. The United States should give to its workers the best treatment and the best pay that is given anywhere in the world for the same labor. This Government must set an example to all those great corporations who do business merely for profit. Those of our citizens who enter its employ in our civil service waive every other opportunity in life and each of them should have absolute assurance that by industry he secures better employment and that by efficiency he gets higher pay. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I hope my support of the bill will not defeat it. [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson], imitating the German statesman Bismarck, left the floor after he had delivered his address. Of course, nobody had anything to say after Bismarck would get through, and nobody can question anything after the gentleman from Mississippi has poured forth his wisdom. [Laughter.] I have a great deal of admiration for many Democratic Members coming from the South. They are splendid men; personally they are likable men. I think it was James G. Blaine who said, "They are the true defenders of real economy; they are always for economy," but altogether too many of them believe in the economy of the corner grocer.

That is as far as their mental flight takes them. They have no conception of modern needs or modern demands or modern conditions. In politics they live in Jefferson's day. He was undoubtedly a great man, but the trouble with Jefferson is that he is dead. [Laughter.] And the man who always relies on what is in the brain of Jefferson is likely to find himself in the position which a great French philosopher referred to when he said, "Many people who live with the brains of the past ages are nothing but worms living in old skulls."

We are dealing here with a great subject. Some of the attacks that have been made on the bill are extremely unfair. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] has a similar bill, except that it is worse. The problem of classifying the service, of presenting some plan, some method, by which one should be in a position to estimate the character and value and to determine the compensation of the thousands of employees of the Government, has been annoying the best minds employed in the study of governmental science, in the study of the attitude of the Government as an employer. It is an extremely difficult relation.

In industry wages are supposed to be governed by the law of supply and demand. Our professors of political economy, ignoramuses that they are, teach that it is very simple—the law of supply and demand. A large supply of potatoes, and potatoes are cheap; a large supply of cabbage and cabbage is cheap; a large supply of labor, and labor is cheap. That is the political economy of our colleges. There are 800 jobs and a thousand men ask for them, and you reduce wages to the minimum. But no Government can conduct itself as an employer on that ethical basis. No Government is worthy of support if it conducts its business on that brutal theory. We must repudiate that heartless, that cruel, unscrupulous doctrine, that doctrine of the dismal science, which is no science—the political economy of the conservatives. We repudiate that. And so it is not a proper question to ask whether there are men outside of the Government service, men who would be willing because of the presence of 5,000,000 unemployed, to take the position of a Government employee. That is not a proper question. If the gentleman from Ohio had asked me, I would have told him that although there might be a number of ward heelers in his district willing to take positions, there are many positions in Washington to-day that are not filled, particularly in the higher professional and scientific departments, because of low salaries. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] contended that we do not draw a proper distinction in this bill between scientific service and the service subsidiary and auxiliary to the scientific service. He is entirely incorrect.

The bill divides the professional service into three grades. And then we have a subprofessional service with the minimum grade extremely low. You will find, for instance, on page 12 the provision:

The annual rates of compensation for classes of positions in this grade shall be $240, $300, and $360, with maintenance or the cash value of such maintenance.

Here is the lowest grade of the subprofessional service. How much lower can anybody go? One can not sink below the bottom of the sea. They are at the bottom and could not be very much lower. I want to say that those who have made a study of the subject, the committee that you appointed in 1919, and that has given faithful, loyal, and intelligent service to the study of the subject, a committee that consisted of Members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, have reached definite conclusions, and their conclusions are now before us in printed form and in intelligent form. The difficulty with the great majority of the Members of the House is that they have not the time to read and study the things that have been prepared for them. I wish they would read that report of the committee. It appears to be a voluminous work, but it is not. It has something like 900 pages, but the first 187 pages give a summary of their findings and their conclusions. The rest is statistical data. It requires only a day or a day and a half of reading to get the full meaning of their work and study. Now, let us see. We have had hearings on this bill before a joint committee of the House and the Senate. No one appeared in opposition to it, except that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] appeared before the committee, and he proposed his own bill as a better one. But his bill in its structure is the same, except that it offers a larger number of classes and subdivisions. While we have in this bill 7 or 8 subdivisions of the service, he has 18 subdivisions, and I do not know whether his bill is an improvement.

I am inclined to think that the more the subdivisions the more confusion there is likely to be and the smaller the classification, the smaller the number of subdivisions, the safer is the legislation. But he did not oppose the legislation in principle. He brought his own remedy. And then there was another distinction between his bill and this one. While the bill as reported by the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service suggests the Civil Service Commission and the Bureau of the Budget as the two committees of the Government which are to initiate the work of classification and establish it on a suitable basis, the gentleman from Indiana suggests the Bureau of Efficiency.

There seems to be a quarrel between the Bureau of Efficiency and the Civil Service Commission. I am not interested in this controversy at all. Otherwise, there is no substantial difference between the bills. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] attacks it as if we had before us—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Can the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] or the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] give me some more time?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will give the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. LONDON. That may be enough.

I say, the gentleman from Indiana attacks us as if we had brought before the House a most absurd proposition, and he urges that we should do with this bill what has been done with a number of bills of late, namely, strike out the enacting clause.

By that method you would be throwing out something, and then you would think you have performed your full duty as legislators.

Read the testimony of the gentleman from Indiana before our committee. He points out here and there a defect, but he does not attack the bill in the merciless manner in which he indulged here on the floor.

Now, then, we have disposed of Mr. Wood's attack. So far as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is concerned, the difficulty with him is that he has spent too much of his intellectual power in studying parliamentary practice. [Laughter.]

He makes his old speech in favor of economy. What is economy? Anybody who has had any business experience knows—and if there is any consolation in the fact that a large number of Members of the House are lawyers it is that they have had some contact with practical business affairs and know that true economy does not necessarily involve a reduction of expenses—when you pay larger salaries to more competent men and have established a better system of compensation and a higher efficiency, when you have inspired among employees a desire to work, when you have inspired among them faith and zeal for their work and a belief that they are getting a square deal, then you have obtained real economy and real efficiency. [Applause.] That is what this bill aims at.

We have found during a number of years in various bureaus that many men perform similar services and receive salaries widely divergent. It is the object of the bill to prevent that. We have found in some branches of the public service duplication of work. It is the object of the bill to prevent that.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. There is one point I would like the gentleman to throw light on. The gentleman has evidently studied the bill carefully. What rule have you followed so that we may be sure you are not increasing the general wage too much?

Mr. LONDON. I shall come to that presently. We have had some 800 pages of hearings. No one has appeared in opposition. That is the thing that annoys me most. This bill has been before the country for months. Everybody with a suggestion was welcome.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman will allow me an interruption, I will ask for further time for him.

Mr. LONDON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK. I suppose the most prominent business organization from the business standpoint in the country is the United States Chamber of Commerce, but they have not only indorsed this bill, this plan, but have taken a referendum on it and indorsed it.

Mr. LONDON. I am glad the gentleman brought out that fact. I found out only this morning that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] was going to take up this bill today. I wanted to see the show in the Conference on the Limitation of Armament this morning and I did not get a chance to collect the material on the bill. Now, the Chamber of Commerce has supported this bill. The Civil Service Commission, both the Democratic members and the Republican members, have spoken of the necessity of it. Here is a Democratic commissioner, Mr. Morrison, who says:

The commission has long favored a reclassification, because it regards it as a necessity in the performance of our duty.

You have thus the Civil Service Commission approving the bill, as well as the United States Chamber of Commerce, and an almost unanimous report from the committee. Now, as to the possible increase of the cost to the Government, in dollars and cents; I have heard all sorts of estimates, varying from 1½ per cent to 8 per cent by one of the efficiency experts who testified in support of the bill; from 1½ to 8 per cent. But I have no data; I have not the items upon which these calculations are based.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. It is said that this is merely an employees' bill, and that we are simply passing something that the employees themselves have prepared for us.

Mr. LONDON. I know; but here is something that the Civil Service Commission has supported. Here is something that is supported by the United States Chamber of Commerce, which is an organization not particularly looking out for the interests of the employees. Here are the efficiency experts, who have received their training as agents of the employers, the so-called efficiency engineers, whose work is designed to save their employers as much as possible, and, if necessary, at the expense of employees. These efficiency experts have indorsed the bill and urged the necessity of it. The opposition comes from men who are unduly conservative, including among them myself. I am more conservative than I should be. Men who are too conservative live too much in the past; they do not want to depart from their fixed habits of thought.

There are nearly 1,800 terms used in appropriation laws to describe the various forms of service.

This bill purports to classify the various branches of the service, such as professional service, subprofessional, clerical, institutional, custodial, inspectional, police and criminal investigation, and fire service.

Now, in these classes you must allow some latitude for the various grades and subgrades and subdivisions. In my opinion, the only other thing the bill does is to fix minimum salaries. You are dealing with minimum salaries in eight branches, and it should be the easiest thing in the world to amend the bill on the floor if anybody has a reasonable amendment to offer.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. KING. The gentleman seems to be very well posted on the bill, and I would like to propound an interrogatory and get some information. I made a great mistake in my congressional career and voted for the budget bill. I do not propose, if I can help it, to extend the power of the budget any further. I would like to know if in the final disposition of a man's salary Congress or the Budget Commission will have the control of it?

Mr. LONDON. The final disposition will lie with that omnipotent Committee on Appropriations. Others have only the power to suggest, recommend, and advise, but the final power lies with the Congress and the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has seven minutes and the gentleman from New Jersey six minutes.

Mr. BLACK. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the bureau accomplish this? We have heard it said that in some of the Government service there are places where 15 men are accomplishing a certain amount of work where 8 men with a different system might get better salaries and better results. Will the bill accomplish that?

Mr. LONDON. The bill if honestly carried out ought to accomplish it. It should remove the dead wood and inefficiency. I might say that in every institution there is some dead wood.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman believe that there is any dead wood in private enterprises?

Mr. LONDON. Undoubtedly there is.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. You can not eliminate that.

Mr. LONDON. It is the duty of the supervisors to eliminate as much as possible. That goes without saying.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Is there no way of reducing the salary of an inefficient clerk?

Mr. LONDON. I think there is.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman point that out—I mean at the present time—and if this bill goes into effect will that be permitted or rectified?

Mr. LONDON. Under the bill he is to be placed in the grade where he properly belongs, and that is what allocation means.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. If he is now drawing a salary considerably higher than the grade in which he is placed, the law provides that he shall only receive the compensation of the grade in which he is placed, and therefore he loses the remainder of the salary in excess.

Mr. LONDON. Gentlemen, I am sorry that neither the chairman nor the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] has enough time left for me to go into the details of the bill. I should have liked particularly to demonstrate that the salaries are not only not excessive, but are hardly adequate. I do not want you to be misled by the false cry of economy. There is too much of that false economy. We should do the sensible thing. The country is rich enough and big enough and strong enough to increase the budget by 3, 4, or 5 per cent if that will improve the service, eliminate inefficiency, introduce system into the work, if it will make a Government employee feel that he is getting a square deal and is not, as in private industry, working under duress.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Do I understand that the three parties are all in agreement about the bill—Republicans, Democrats, and Socialists?

Mr. LONDON. Yes; and then I am a sort of a superior Democrat-Republican. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, in the very few minutes remaining I want to correct some of the amazing and misleading statements made in the course of the debate. It has been stated here that this creates additional bureaus, additional governmental agencies. Nothing of the sort. It does not create any additional agencies of the Government. In the first instance, a tentative allocation is made by the respective department heads. The Bureau of the Budget to-day has as its function the power to reduce, collate, compare, and submit, with its recommendations to the President to be transmitted to Congress, the various pay rolls of the departments, and in that way has the information to revise and approve the allocations. It not only provides for no additional governmental agency but it does not provide for any additional work or for any information that the Budget Bureau has not got. If it has not the information and the Bureau of Efficiency has it, they can put it at the disposal of the Bureau of the Budget. That is what it is for.

As to unifying the efficiency systems and supervising their application to individual cases, the Civil Service Commission is the commission that now studies qualifications of men who fill these jobs, and is, of course, possessed of the information which enables it to determine whether the job is being carried on properly and efficiently. They have already that information, and therefore we not only have no other Government agency but we have no Government agency that is to seek new information in order properly to function under this bill.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield for a question.

Mr. KINKAID. Is it correct that while the bill which the gentleman from New Jersey introduced and had pending about a year ago covering this same subject matter, which mentioned specifically the classes of employees that that bill covered, that this bill, while it does not specifically mention those same classes, does in its general terms cover and is intended to cover the same classes and to affect their salaries in the same way?

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is correct.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I have only two or three minutes to answer some of these things, and I wish the gentleman would excuse me.

Mr. LOWREY. I wanted to ask a question to bring out something to help us vote on this bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. It has been stated here that it is not possible to reduce the salary of an employee who, for some reason, favoritism or otherwise, is getting more pay than the character of work he does justifies. The bill provides that everyone must be allocated within his grade, and that means that he can not get more or less salary than his grade is entitled to, and it is superfluous to write any rule in section 6 which specifically says that when he is allocated to a grade he is allocated to that grade and to no other. That is as far as is necessary to go in any specific provision that a man must be reduced if he is getting a salary greater than his work entitles him to.

So far as the surrender of power by Congress is concerned, instead of the lump-sum appropriations, where the heads of the departments fix the salaries, instead of letting the Bureau of Efficiency classify the people and adjust their salaries, Congress proposes to do that itself and to retain control under this bill. That is the object of it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield—and I will yield him my time?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. One of the complaints that we had with the Shipping Board was that in the expenditure of the lump-sum appropriations they fixed salary schedules that were entirely too high. Under this bill every employee is provided for. He is classified and put into one of these respective grades.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Certainly.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will ask the gentleman to excuse me. With regard to these increases of 20 per cent and 100 per cent and 50 per cent that have been spoken of, I have this to say: It was said that the salaries of private secretaries were increased $2,500 to $5,000 under this bill. What is the fact? Private secretaries get from $2,500 under this bill to $2,540, an increase of $40, with the exception only of the private secretaries to the members of the Cabinet, who receive $3,300. With respect to the improbable and the incredible raises that we have heard about, all I can say is that Members should not believe that, or else they should read the bill and find out for themselves.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] criticizes the bill and says that no such animal is grown as a bureau chief who will reduce salaries, who will not endeavor to magnify the importance of his bureau by swelling the pay roll. The gentleman is describing present conditions, while the purpose of this bill is to end them. The very purpose of the bill is to say to them that if they have employees doing a certain grade of work they can not be paid more than that work is worth. The purpose of the bill is to say to them that if they have in their employ anyone who, through favoritism, is getting more money than the work he is doing entitles him to, the pay must be reduced. The bill provides that if a man does not maintain a certain standard of efficiency, it is mandatory on the bureau chief to get rid of him, or if his efficiency standing is of such a grade as to retain him but not sufficient to dismiss him, he then must be paid the minimum pay. It is not necessary to go to the Committee on Appropriations, but it is mandatory upon the bureau chief. The man must be demoted. We want some efficiency, and we will have economy. The bill is not a salary increase bill; it is not for that purpose at all. Such increases as are trifling are overbalanced by the good that will follow as a result of the reduction in the working forces of the Government. It is a bill to put order and organization into the civil service instead of the miserable hodgepodge which we have now. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as "The classification act of 1922."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suggest that the committee should now rise.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8928, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, some time ago I introduced the bill H. R. 6872, which has reference to matters pertaining to the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota. It was erroneously referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I ask unanimous consent that it be referred now to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 6872 may be referred from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by inserting therein a story of Theodore Tiller, Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, relating to the burial of the unknown soldier.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a very bad practice to incorporate in the Record these newspaper articles. Therefore I object.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record with respect to the Conference on Limitation of Armament.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, November 16, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. STEENERSON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8441) relating to special delivery of mail matter, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 468), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, November 16, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, day after day Thou dost give unto us the evidences of Thy goodness, and as the recipients of that goodness we bow reverently before Thee this morning, seeking from Thee aid in the duties of the day. May we be loyal to the highest principles and noblest obligations of patriotism and, in connection therewith, in our duties to Thee, our Father. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Church of Parsons, all in the State of West Virginia, favoring the limitation of armament and the fostering of world peace, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMERICAN MEMORIAL HIGHWAY.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I present a resolution in the nature of a petition which was adopted by the Ohio State Archaeological and Historical Society, of which former Gov. James E. Campbell is president, inviting the President of the United States to appoint an American memorial highway commission, to include the American ambassador to France and the American ambassador to Belgium, together with nine American citizens distinguished in civil or public life, to cooperate with the appropriate authorities in France and Belgium in laying out a memorial highway leading from Paris over the existing French and Belgian highways nearest to the positions held by American divisions in the various sectors along the battle line. I ask that, without reading, it may be incorporated in the RECORD and referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The trustees of the Ohio State Archaeological and Historical Society at the annual meeting of the society held at Columbus, October 12, 1921, adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to appoint an American Memorial Highway Commission to include the American Ambassador to France and the American Ambassador to Belgium, together with nine American citizens distinguished in civil or public life to cooperate with the appropriate authorities in France and Belgium in laying out a memorial highway leading from Paris over the existing French and Belgian highways nearest to the positions held by American divisions in the different sectors during the World War and passing the American military cemeteries in France and Belgium, one on the French highways nearest to the battle fronts between Paris, Chateau-Thierry, and Montfaucon, with an extension around the San Mihiel salient, and thence through Luxemburg on the route pursued to the Coblentz bridgehead by the American Army of Occupation under the terms of the armistice, and the other from Paris to Chateau-Thierry and thence northerly on the French and Belgian highways nearest to the positions held by the Twenty-seventh and Thirtieth American Divisions in the British sectors, and thence northerly past the American Cemetery at Boni to the positions held by the Thirty-seventh and Ninety-first American Divisions in Belgium, and thence on the line of advance with the Belgian Army under King Albert into Brussels after the armistice. Along these memorial highways simple roster and historical tablets to be erected giving the names of American and allied divisions engaged at the designated points and other simple memorial tablets indicative of the sacrifices and triumphs of the allied forces in the World War, to make the memorial highway interesting and instructive to the 2,000,000 American soldiers and their relatives and descendants who will visit the battle fields in increasing numbers annually to the end of time.

Yours, very truly,

THE OHIO STATE ARCHAEOLOGICAL AND HISTORICAL SOCIETY,
By JAMES E. CAMPBELL, President.

MICHIGAN SENATORIAL ELECTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from the previous day.

The Assistant Secretary read Senate resolution 172, submitted yesterday by Mr. SPENCER, as follows:

Resolved, (1) That the contest of Henry Ford against Truman H. Newberry be, and it is hereby, dismissed.

(2) That Truman H. Newberry is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator from the State of Michigan for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1919.

(3) That his qualification for a seat in the Senate of the United States, to which he has been elected, has been conclusively established, and the charges made against him in this proceeding, both as to his election and qualification, are not sustained.

The report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the views of the minority were subsequently ordered to be printed in the RECORD at this point, and they are as follows:

SEPTEMBER 26 (CALENDAR DAY, SEPTEMBER 29), 1921.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report. [Pursuant to S. Res. 11].

The Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate of the United States on the election contest brought by Henry Ford, contestant, against Truman H. Newberry, United States Senator from the State of Michigan, contestee, and on the investigation of the primary and general election of 1918 in the State of Michigan for United States Senator from Michigan report as follows:

The resolution adopted by the Senate on December 3, 1919, under which this investigation has proceeded, reads as follows:

"Whereas charges and countercharges of excessive and illegal expenditures of money and of unlawful practices have been made in connection with the primary nomination and election of a Senator from the State of Michigan, which election was held on the 5th day of November, 1918: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the said charges and countercharges of excessive and illegal expenditures of money and of unlawful practices in connection with the said election of a Senator from the State of Michigan, including the proceedings for the nomination of candidates at the primary theretofore held, and to take possession of the ballots, poll books, tally sheets, and all other documents and records relating to the said primary nomination and election; and the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, and his deputies and assistants, be, and they are hereby, instructed to carry out the directions of the said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, in that behalf; and that the said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, directed to proceed with all convenient speed to take all necessary steps for the preservation of the said ballots, poll books, tally sheets, and other documents, and to recount the said ballots, and to take and preserve all evidence as to the various matters alleged in the said charges and countercharges and any answers hereafter filed, and of any alleged fraud, irregularity, and excessive or illegal expenditures of money, and of any unlawful practices in the said election and primary, and as to the intimidation of voters, or other facts affecting the result of said election.

"Resolved further, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of the Congress, and to hold its sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; and to have full power to subpoena parties and witnesses, and to require the production of all papers, books, and documents, and other evidence relating to the said investigation, and to employ clerks and other necessary assistants and stenographers at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to take and make a record of all evidence taken and received by the committee, and to keep a record of its proceedings; and to have such evidence, records, and other matter required by the committee printed.

"Resolved further, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and his deputies and assistants are hereby required to attend the said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, and to execute its directions; that the chairman or any member of the committee be, and is hereby, empowered to administer oaths; that each of the parties to the said contest be entitled to representatives and attorneys at the recount and the taking of evidence; that all disputed ballots and records be preserved so that final action may be had thereon by the full committee and the Senate; that the committee may appoint subcommittees of one or more members to represent the committee at the various places in the making of the recount and the taking of evidence, and the committee may appoint such supervisors of the recount as it may deem best; and that the committee may adopt and enforce such rules and regulations for the conduct of the recount and the taking of evidence as it may deem wise not inconsistent with this resolution; and that the committee shall report to the Senate as early as may be, and from time to time, if it deems best, submit all the testimony and the result of the recount and of the investigation.

"Resolved further, That the expenses incurred in the carrying out of these resolutions shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers ordered by the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, and approved by the chairman of the committee."

The investigation was conducted by a subcommittee consisting of Senators WATSON (chairman), SPENCER (acting chairman), ENCE, POMERENE, and Wolcott. After the resignation of Senator Wolcott from the Senate, and after the hearings were ended, Senator ASHurst was appointed to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and became also a member of the subcommittee.

The findings and recommendations of the subcommittee were approved by the committee and constitute this report.

CHRONOLOGY.

On August 27, 1918, Truman H. Newberry was a candidate on the Republican ticket in the primary election to select a Republican candidate for United States Senator from the State of Michigan.

Henry Ford was a candidate on the Republican ticket at this primary election for the Republican nomination, and at the same time he was a candidate on the Democratic ticket for the Democratic nomination as candidate for United States Senator.

The primary election resulted in the selection of Truman H. Newberry as the Republican nominee for United States Senator and Henry Ford as the Democratic nominee.

At the general election held on November 5, 1918, Truman H. Newberry was declared elected United States Senator from the State of Michigan. He presented his credentials in due form to the Senate, took the oath of office as a Senator on May 19, 1919, and entered immediately upon the discharge of the duties of the office to which he had been declared elected.

On January 6, 1919, and again on May 20, 1919, there was filed in the Senate of the United States and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the petition of Henry Ford, contesting the election of Truman H. Newberry as a Senator from the State of Michigan, asking—

"For a recount of the ballots for the office of United States Senator cast at the election in Michigan held November 5, 1918, and for other relief."

The contestant asked:

(a) For a recount of the ballots.

(b) For—

"An investigation of the unlawful uses by said Truman H. Newberry, and in his behalf by his agents and representatives, of large sums of money to influence the primary and election."

Alleged undue influence and intimidation of voters at the said election, and further asked:

"That said Truman H. Newberry be declared not elected, and also disqualified, and not entitled to a seat, because of the aforesaid violations of law; and that petitioner (Henry Ford) may be declared elected and entitled to said seat."

Under this action of the Senate, above set out, the committee had to do with—

(a) The general election of November 5, 1918.

(b) The primary election of August 27, 1918, and the expenditure of money incident thereto.

(c) The qualifications of Truman H. Newberry to retain his seat in the Senate.

No countercharges were presented against the contestant for the consideration of your committee.

GENERAL ELECTION.

The contestant (Henry Ford) alleged in regard to the election—

"(a) That there are about 2,200 election precincts or districts in Michigan, and that nearly all of the election boards were composed wholly of Republicans, and great numbers of them were wholly composed of intense partisans of Mr. Newberry, and that only in a comparatively few of them were there at the said election any challengers or others acting in behalf of the Democratic candidates, and that every opportunity existed for election officials who were so inclined to miscount the ballots in favor of Mr. Newberry.

"(b) That a large number of ballots were unlawfully counted for said Newberry which in fact and in truth were cast for Henry Ford, namely, at least 10,000.

"(c) That large numbers of ballots lawfully cast for petitioner were not counted for him, but were unlawfully rejected by the various precinct election boards when making the counts, and they were not returned for petitioner, as in truth they ought to have been, namely, at least 10,000.

"(d) That in many election precincts or districts the count by the election officers and boards was illegal, in favor of Newberry, false and fraudulent, and in violation of the election laws governing the count.

"(e) Many of the ballots marked and cast for petitioner were counted and returned for the said Truman H. Newberry.

"(f) In many precincts (particularly in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan) the provisions of law enacted to protect the sanctity and secrecy of the ballots and to promote a true and honest vote and count were flagrantly violated, and many important and vital irregularities and departures from such provision occurred, thus vitiating under the law the vote of such precincts—as, for instance, the marking of ballots for voters by an unauthorized third person, the exposure of ballots by the voters, the overseeing of the voting by mine bosses and superintendents and the like, all of which were conducted in the interests of said Truman H. Newberry, and the votes of such precincts should be rejected and thrown out.

"(g) That many ballots in many precincts duly marked and cast for petitioner were rejected by the respective election boards and not counted at all.

"(h) That many ballots bearing unlawful distinguishing marks were illegally and unlawfully counted for the said Truman H. Newberry.

"(i) Many ballots duly marked and cast for your petitioner were wholly rejected and thrown out by many election boards on the unlawful and fraudulent pretext that they were not duly and properly marked for the petitioner, whereas in fact they were so marked and cast.

"(j) Many ballots duly and properly marked and cast for the petitioner were rejected and thrown out by many election boards on the unlawful and fraudulent pretext that they bore distinguishing marks, whereas in fact they did not bear any unlawful distinguishing marks and ought to have been counted for your petitioner.

"(k) Many ballots duly and lawfully marked and cast for petitioner were erroneously thrown out and not counted for petitioner by many of the said election boards under erroneous interpretations of their duties.

"(l) Many ballots for said Truman H. Newberry were corruptly and unlawfully procured to be cast and counted for him by the unlawful use of money on his behalf.

"(m) Large sums of money were unlawfully expended by and in behalf of said Truman H. Newberry to influence said election and cause votes to be cast for him that otherwise would not have been so cast.

"(n) Large numbers of lawful voters were intimidated and prevented from voting at the said election by partisans and supporters of said Newberry who otherwise would have voted at the election and cast their votes for the petitioner, to wit, 5,000 of such voters.

"(o) Large numbers of lawful voters, employers of certain large corporations, were intimidated and unlawfully coerced by employers and their representatives into voting for said Newberry against their wills and preferences who otherwise would have cast their ballots for the petitioner.

"(p) In a number of the counties the respective boards of county canvassers made and reported their canvasses without having or examining the poll books and tally sheets nor in any way verifying the number of original votes as cast or the number of voters voting at the respective precincts.

"(q) That careful investigation by petitioner's direction has been made by reliable men since the election to ascertain, as far as may be, the detailed facts pertaining to the above statements and as to the conduct of counting in said election and from such investigations and from other information reaching the petitioner and his representatives he avers the foregoing statements to be true, and he particularly specifies the following counties and election districts therein as the counties and districts where such irregularities, miscounting, and frauds were more flagrantly committed, namely:

"Kent, Bay, Kalamazoo, Wayne, Saginaw, Allegan, Antrim, Baraga, Barry, Benzie, Berrien, Calhoun, Cass, Charlevoix, Chippewa, Clare, Dickinson, Eaton, Emmet, Genesee, Gladwin, Gogebic, Gratiot, Hillsdale, Houghton, Huron, Ingham, Ionia, Isosco, Iron, Isabella, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Keweenaw, Lapeer, Lenawee, Macomb, Marquette, Mason, Mecosta, Midland, Monroe, Montcalm, Montmorency, Muskegon, Newaygo, Oakland, Oceana, Oscoda, Ottawa, Sanilac, St. Clair, St. Joseph, Tuscola, Van Buren, Washtenaw, Wexford,

"and that such irregularities and miscounts occurred in a more modified degree in nearly all the other counties of the State, and that mistakes, unfavorable to petitioner and in favor of the said Truman H. Newberry, occurred in all of the counties.

"(r) That upon a fair and lawful recount of the ballots cast at said election your petitioner would be decided to be duly and lawfully elected Senator from Michigan.

"(s) That upon such a fair and lawful recount, and due allowances being made for such frauds, intimidations, and prevention of votes, petitioner would be decided and declared by your honorable body to have been duly and lawfully elected Senator from Michigan."

RECOUNT OF THE BALLOTS.

The subcommittee caused the ballots cast at the said general election (with the exception of a few precincts where the ballots had been destroyed, in all of which cases by agreement of counsel the State official count was accepted as correct) to be gathered together and brought to Washington, where they were recounted in accordance with the rules agreed upon by counsel, and with the result fully set out in part 7 of the printed hearings had before the subcommittee.

The recount was commenced on January 4, 1921, and was concluded on February 2, 1921.

The total vote cast for the contestee (Truman H. Newberry) and for the contestant (Henry Ford), according to the official returns of the State of Michigan, was 432,541, of which Truman H. Newberry received 220,054 and Henry Ford received 212,487. This gave to Mr. Newberry a plurality of 7,567 votes.

Upon the recount a total of 429,836 ballots were examined, and the result of the recount (including the returns in the few precincts where the ballots were not available, and where, by agreement of counsel, the official count was accepted) gave to Mr. Newberry 217,085 and to Mr. Ford 212,751. Mr. Newberry's plurality was 4,334.

There were in Michigan at the said general election, 2,320 voting districts or precincts. In one of these (Turin, No. 2, Marquette County) no election was held.

The result of the recount shows conclusively that Truman H. Newberry was legally elected United States Senator, and there is no evidence to sustain any of the charges of the contestant with regard to the general election, as hereinbefore set out.

These charges were definitely made under oath and were vigorously insisted upon by contestant through his counsel before the recount of the ballots, and were all capable of specific proof if they were true.

All the submitted evidence was carefully examined, and at great expense of time and money all the ballots (429,836 in number) were reexamined, and with the result that every such charge of illegal voting or counting, or of fraudulent returns or bribery or intimidation was not alone unproven in fact but was so manifestly unsupported by evidence as to produce the irresistible conclusion that these charges were the result of a reckless attempt to make some impression by the seriousness of the charges when it must have been known that they were entirely unfounded.

In fact, so totally failing is the proof to sustain any of the said charges of the contestant with regard to the general election that there is not to be found even a reference to such charges in the briefs filed by the contestant.

No claim is made in the briefs of contestant that Henry Ford is entitled to a seat in the United States Senate.

No claim has ever been made at any time that an excessive amount of money was used at the general election, or that there was any improper use of money at the general election. The evidence does not give any support to sustain any charge of fraud or illegality, bribery or intimidation of voters in connection with the general election.

PRIMARY ELECTION.

The charge is made that there was an unlawful use by Truman H. Newberry, "and in his behalf by his supporters, agents, and representatives," of large sums of money to influence the primary and the election.

An investigation of both the primary and the general election has been made with a detail and perseverance and to an extent almost inconceivable. In the Federal court of the United States at Grand Rapids, Mich., at the instance of the Department of Justice of the United States, Truman H. Newberry and 134 other men were, in the fall of 1919, indicted on a charge of conspiring to have Truman H. Newberry pay and expend, or cause to be paid and expended, more than $3,750, the charge itself being a charge of conspiracy in violation of section 8 of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (ch. 392, 36 Stat., 822-824), as amended by act of Congress of August 19, 1911 (ch. 33, 37 Stat., 25-29).

As a result of this trial Truman H. Newberry and 16 others were convicted of conspiracy. On appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States the conviction was set aside and the case was reversed.

The record of this trial at Grand Rapids shows that every detail of expenditure, of conduct, and of plan in the campaign, and every activity in behalf of Mr. Truman H. Newberry in connection with both the primary and the general election was most minutely inquired into and carefully examined.

More than 4,800 pages of typewritten testimony were taken at the Grand Rapids trial. This testimony was all before your committee in the present hearings, and so much of this testimony as either side desired has been incorporated in the printed hearings of the committee. At the request of contestant the testimony and statements of 75 witnesses examined at Grand Rapids were inserted, and at the request of contestee the testimony and statements of 5 witnesses examined at Grand Rapids were inserted.

In addition the bill of exceptions presented to the Supreme Court of the United States in the Grand Rapids case, consisting of 956 printed pages, and which contains a summary of the testimony of over 300 witnesses who were heard at the Grand Rapids trial, has been printed and made a part of the testimony in the present investigation.

Forty-four witnesses were examined under oath by the committee in this hearing.

The inevitable conclusion of all the testimony is that there is no evidence whatever to sustain the charge of improper use of money at the primary or the general election.

There was expended in the primary election in the interest of Truman H. Newberry approximately $195,000, which was largely contributed by John S. Newberry, a brother, and other relatives and friends of Truman H. Newberry. Such contributions were not solicited by Truman H. Newberry, nor was the fact that they were given, or were to be given or used, known to him.

Truman H. Newberry was absent from the State of Michigan continuously during the entire campaign and until long after the election had been held. He took no part whatever either in the financial or other features of the primary campaign or its direction or control. Nor did he take any part in the general election.

Mr. Newberry was during all that time actively engaged in the service of the United States as a naval officer in New York.

He was kept fully informed from time to time as to the progress of the campaign in Michigan, but he had no knowledge of the financial management of the campaign; he did not know the amount of money being expended, nor by whom contributions were made, nor the purposes for which the money was used.

From his general knowledge of the character of the campaign that was being conducted in Michigan, and the extent of publicity given to his candidacy through the newspapers, it is presumed that he had a general idea that a large sum of money was necessarily being spent.

The evidence shows conclusively that the financial cost of the campaign was voluntarily borne by relatives and friends of Truman H. Newberry and was entirely without solicitation or knowledge upon his part.

The amount of money spent at the primary was large—too large—but there was no concealment whatever with regard to it, and it was spent entirely for legal and proper purposes. On September 6, and within the time prescribed by the laws of the State of Michigan, a full report, so far as it was then known, of the contributions and expenditures was filed and made public. It showed contributions of $178,856, and expenditures, $176,568.08, divided as follows:

For advertising and other publicity	$147,800.16
Office expenses, including rent, furniture, light, and clerk hire	9,070.13
Telephone, telegraph, and other charges	1,514.14
Traveling expenses	9,104.52
Copying of election registers and canvassing the voters	4,875.38
Salaries and compensation not otherwise charged	4,142.75
Total	176,568.08

Later on some bills, which had been delayed in presentation, mainly for advertising, amounting to between $10,000 and $15,000, were presented and were paid by the Newberry campaign committee, but the fact that approximately $195,000 was used in the primary was frankly and freely admitted and nothing in the testimony has materially changed this admission.

Whether the amount was approximately $195,000, as was fully reported or openly acknowledged, or whether there were some few thousand dollars in excess of that amount, as contestant alleges, is immaterial. It is, in either event, a larger sum than ought to have been expended.

It is significant that though under the law of Michigan it is expressly provided that any "voter" is empowered to "make complaint in writing that a statement does not conform to law or to the truth," and upon such a complaint being made the officer authorized to issue a certificate of nomination is required to at once act in the matter (sec. 3834), no such complaint was ever made by any voter in the State of Michigan complaining in any way of the statement as filed by the Newberry campaign committee, nor were the provisions of Michigan law which severely regulated every step of the primary campaign, including the report of receipts and expenditures in such campaign, ever invoked in the courts of the State of Michigan.

Your committee condemns the use of such a large sum of money in any primary campaign, but in the instant case there is not the slightest foundation upon which to connect Truman H. Newberry with its solicitation, its acquisition, or its use, nor to condemn him because of the amount. While the aggregate was large, it was not spent for any purposes that were in themselves illegal or improper, and its use was wholly managed by a campaign committee entirely free both in its selection and its action from Truman H. Newberry.

It is but fair to state that the evidence discloses a situation in regard to this primary which perhaps has no parallel in American history.

Henry Ford, who is the contestant here, and who was the opponent of Truman H. Newberry at the primary as well as the general election, was running at the primary election on the Democratic ticket for nomination for United States Senator on that ticket, and at the same time, in the same primary, he was running as a Republican on the Republican ticket for the Republican nomination for United States Senator.

Mr. Ford had back of him and his candidacy the tremendous power of the expressed approval of the then President of the United States, and according to Mr. Ford's own statement (record, pp. 637, 640) he had been drafted, and "he ran at the suggestion of the President."

The name of Henry Ford, because of his industrial relationship in connection with the automobile industry, was a familiar household name throughout the State of Michigan. Practically every hamlet in the State of Michigan had an agency of the corporation which bears his name and which in the public mind was identified with himself.

The name of Truman H. Newberry was practically unknown throughout the State, although he had been Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and for a very short time, the Secretary of the Navy of the United States.

The evidence shows that Mr. Newberry was himself out of the State of Michigan during the entire primary campaign. He was unable, therefore, to personally address or meet with the people. His constant service during this time in the Navy of the United States was not of such public interest as of itself to be either widely or constantly commented upon in the public press, particularly when so much more important war news was filling the columns of the daily press and eagerly read by the American people.

In these circumstances the friends of Truman H. Newberry regarded it as imperatively necessary to conduct a campaign of publicity and advertising of the very widest character, in order to present as fully as possible to every voter in the State of Michigan the claims of Truman H. Newberry to the office for which he was a candidate.

The evidence discloses that a most comprehensive and far-reaching campaign of publicity was vigorously conducted in a thorough and systematic manner through the newspapers of the State of Michigan. (Record, p. 639.)

That, with the exception of a few Democratic newspapers, advertising was placed in practically every newspaper, daily, weekly, and monthly, published in the State of Michigan. (Record, pp. 350, 356.)

That a series of 13 advertising announcements, covering the entire 13 weeks of the primary campaign, were carried in upward of 500 papers and publications, going into every portion of the State. (Record, pp. 422, 639.)

In addition to this, a very general and systematic plan of publicity was carried on through correspondence; thousands and thousands of form letters being sent into every county in the State; the names of persons to whom sent being alphabetically arranged and card indexed. (Record, p. 644.) This work necessitated the assistance of a large corps of clerks and helpers. The evidence discloses that at one time more than 50 stenographers alone were employed in the Newberry headquarters. (Record, p. 639.)

This program of publicity necessitated the expenditure of a large amount of money. More than 80 per cent of the money spent in the primary campaign was, according to the evidence, spent for advertising and other publicity.

The record discloses the fact that all these expenditures of money at the primary, of which complaint is so vigorously made here, were well known to the voters of the State of Michigan and to the people of that State even before the primary election took place. This was made an issue at the primary, precisely as it was made an issue at the general election. (Record, p. 645.)

The record shows that statements showing the amount of money spent in the primary were placarded "all over almost every fence and billboard in the State," and this expenditure was used generally as one of the reasons why Truman H. Newberry should not be elected. (Record, p. 645.) The majority of Mr. Newberry over Mr. Ford at the primary was 43,163.

QUALIFICATIONS OF TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

The Senate is jealous of its constitutional right to be "the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members."

No man, however qualified, can be admitted to a seat in the Senate who has not been legally elected in the State which he seeks to represent, and no man, on the other hand, however great his electoral majority may have been, can be either admitted or continued as a Member of the Senate whose conduct, either during the primary or general election or subsequent thereto, is such as to show him unworthy to assume the high office to which, by virtue of his election, he has been chosen.

The interest of the State which he seeks to represent and the welfare of the Nation alike demand that each Senator shall be one concerning whom there is no proven charge of disloyalty, dishonesty, or of conduct which would reasonably make his presence in the United States Senate a menace to the country, either because of the example which his conduct has produced or because it is reasonable to assume from established facts that he is unworthy of that trust and confidence which of necessity must be reposed in every Member of the United States Senate.

Your committee has therefore given particular and careful consideration to the charges which were made by the contestant here against the Junior Senator from the State of Michigan.

Two facts which are decisive of the present case stand out clearly in the record as entirely established:

First. That none of the money spent in the primary election, large as was the amount, was spent for corrupt, illegal, or improper purposes. It was spent without the knowledge or consent of Truman H. Newberry for publicity and for ordinary campaign purposes and expenditures which are perfectly familiar to every man who has ever been a candidate for office, and which are generally regarded as both necessary and proper.

Second. That Truman H. Newberry had no part whatever in the solicitation of the campaign fund, or in its acquisition, or in the expenditure of it. It came from sources entirely voluntary, and it was spent by a voluntary committee which was in no sense the agent of Mr. Newberry and which had complete control of it and entire responsibility for its use.

The contributions were all those of "the citizen," as Chief Justice White expressed it, and were not the contributions of Mr. Truman H. Newberry, "the candidate."

The Chief Justice well declared that—
"There can be no doubt when the limitations as to expenditures which the statute imposed are considered in the light of its context and its genesis that its prohibitions were intended, not to restrict the right of the citizen to contribute to a campaign, but to prohibit the candidate from contributing and expending, or causing to be contributed and expended, to secure his nomination and election a larger amount than the sum limited as provided in the statute."

The charge is made that—
"Hundreds and hundreds of workers hired all over the State, directly in violation of law, both the written statutes of Michigan and the common law."

The evidence entirely fails to sustain this charge, for it is clearly shown that those employed by the Newberry campaign committee—that is to say, clerks, stenographers, field men, and publicity men—are not in any sense within the prohibition of the Michigan statute prohibiting the hiring of workers on primary day and prior thereto to induce persons to support or oppose any candidate. The statute expressly indicates its intent to prohibit either the bribery of the voter himself or the hiring of men to induce voters either on primary day or prior thereto to vote for a certain candidate or to refrain from voting.

This statute can not be tortured into a construction that would prohibit an orderly, public, extensive program of publicity as was exhibited by the Newberry senatorial committee, and it is significant that with all the attempts to subject Mr. Newberry to every conceivable criminal prosecution there was not even an attempt, so far as the record shows, to invoke this State law which itself provides severe punishments for its violation against him.

Charges were made that—
"The entire press was subsidized by huge advertising;
"Payments to these workers concealed and never reported;
"False returns by county agents, under instructions from the managers, showing but a small part of their expenditures of the moneys handed by them;
"False books of account, manufactured after the conclusion of the primary;

"A doctored treasurer's report;
"The books of the Newberry estate and of the individual accounts stolen or disappearing when needed;

"The frightfully false oaths submitted to the Senate and the country by Mr. Newberry—and are illustrations of the bitter and exaggerated and baseless allegations found throughout this record. The evidence does not in any sense support them.

The situation can not be more clearly and properly described than in the words of Mr. Justice Pitney in his opinion when the Grand Rapids case came for final decision before the Supreme Court of the United States. Speaking of Mr. Newberry's alleged connection with the fund, he says:

"His mere participation in the activities of the campaign, even with knowledge that moneys spontaneously contributed and expended by others, without his agency, procurement, or assistance, were to be or were being expended, would not of itself amount to his causing such excessive expenditure."

Justice Pitney continued:
"A candidate can not be made a principal offender unless he directly commits the offense denounced. Spontaneous expenditures by others being without the scope of the prohibition, neither he nor anybody else can be held criminally responsible for merely abetting such expenditures.

"His remaining in the field and participating in the ordinary activities of the campaign, with knowledge that such activities furnish in a general sense the 'occasion' for the expenditure, is not to be regarded as a 'causing' by the candidate of such expenditure within the meaning of the statute."

The record of Truman H. Newberry during the primary campaign and during the campaign for the general election is one that merits commendation and approval. He was, himself, during the whole period devoting his time and energy to the service of his country. His campaign for United States Senator from Michigan was in the hands of his friends and supporters, who financed and conducted it according to their own plans out of their own money. His only connection with the campaign was such information as to its progress as was constantly transmitted to him by those having the matter in charge and such infrequent conferences as were possible with him while he was in the performance of his duty as commander in the United States Navy.

No man can read the record in this case and fairly come to any other conclusion.

The charges which have been bitterly made and vehemently urged are wholly unsubstantiated.

We are asked to brand practically every witness who appeared, and all of them on the summons of the contestant, as either a willful perjurer or a man unworthy of belief.

Every witness produced was called by the contestant, who, under the usual rules of procedure, is presumed to vouch for the credibility of the witnesses he produces.

Some of the witnesses were men of the highest standing and character in the industrial world and in official life.

There was nothing in their conduct or in their appearance or in their testimony to indicate that they were not fully and frankly telling the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth precisely as they remembered it to be.

The conclusions at which the contestant would have your committee arrive are those which the contestant bases entirely upon unwarranted inferences and upon the merest conjectures, and are without the testimony of a single witness to sustain them.

We are urged to disregard practically the entire testimony as produced by the witnesses of the contestant himself as being utterly lacking in credibility, if not willfully false, and to substitute for such testimony the baseless suspicions and unfounded charges which the contestant is pleased to make.

We are asked to arrive at false conclusions and to sustain intemperate charges which have nothing except their mere allegation to support them.

It is difficult to imagine a case more severely charged and more completely unsubstantiated than is presented in this proceeding.

Your committee recommends that the action of the Senate be as follows:

(1) That the contest of Henry Ford against Truman H. Newberry be, and it is hereby, dismissed.

(2) That Truman H. Newberry is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator from the State of Michigan for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1919.

(3) That his qualification for a seat in the Senate of the United States, to which he has been elected, has been conclusively established, and the charges made against him in this proceeding, both as to his election and qualification, are not sustained.

SEPTEMBER 26 (CALENDAR DAY, SEPTEMBER 29), 1921.

MR. POMERENE, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following views of the minority (pursuant to S. Res. 11):
The undersigned members of the committee dissent from the report of the majority for the following reasons:

In 1918 there were 83 counties in Michigan, containing 2,320 voting districts or precincts.

The primaries were held on August 27. Mr. Truman H. Newberry was nominated by the Republicans, Mr. Henry Ford by the Democrats.

At the November election, according to the official returns, 432,541 votes were cast. Of these Truman H. Newberry received 220,054 and Henry Ford 212,487. Mr. Newberry's plurality, according to the official returns, was 7,567.

Upon the recount a total of 429,836 ballots were examined, with the result (including the returns in the few precincts where the ballots were not available and where the official count was accepted) that Newberry received 217,085 votes and Mr. Ford 212,751 votes. Mr. Newberry's plurality being 4,334.

PRIMARY ELECTION.

The record shows the charges in detail, and it is not necessary to repeat them here. We desire to call attention specifically to the following assertions set forth in the report of the majority:

"First. The clear result of all the testimony is that there is no evidence whatever to sustain the charge of improper use of money at the primary or general election.

"Second. There was expended in the primary election in the interest of Truman H. Newberry approximately $195,000, which was largely contributed by John S. Newberry, a brother, and other relatives and friends of Truman H. Newberry. Such contributions were not solicited by Truman H. Newberry, nor was the fact that they were given or were to be given or used known to him.

"Third. Truman H. Newberry was absent from the State of Michigan continuously during the entire time from the early spring of 1918 until late in the fall of 1918, and long after the primary election had been held. He took no part whatever either in the financial or other features of the primary campaign or its direction or control.

"Fourth. He was kept fully informed from time to time as to the progress of the campaign in Michigan, but he had no knowledge of the financial management of the campaign. He did not know the amount of money being expended, nor by whom contributions were made, nor the purposes for which the money was used.

"Fifth. From his general knowledge of the character of the campaign that was being conducted in Michigan and the extent of publicity given to his candidacy through the newspapers, it is presumed that he had a general idea that a large sum of money was necessarily being spent.

"Sixth. The evidence shows conclusively that the financial cost of the campaign was voluntarily borne by relatives and friends of Truman H. Newberry, and was entirely without solicitation or knowledge upon his part.

"Seventh. The amount of money spent at the primary was large—too large—but there was no concealment whatever with regard to it."

The report filed by the Newberry senatorial committee showed contributions aggregating $178,856 and expenditures $176,568.08.

"Eighth. Later on some bills which had been delayed in presentation, mainly for advertising, amounting to between ten and fifteen thousand dollars, were presented and were paid by the Newberry campaign committee. But the fact that approximately $195,000 was used in the primary was frankly and freely admitted, and nothing in the testimony has materially changed this admission."

On the contrary, it is claimed by the contestant's attorneys, and we think with very great force, that the proved expenses totaled very much more, the exact amount of which can not be ascertained from the record because of the indefiniteness of much of the testimony and the incompleteness of the records kept by the Newberry campaign committee. The amount of proven expenditures as claimed by the attorneys for the contestant amount to $263,060.67. The various items embraced in this amount will be found on page 7 of the shorter brief filed on behalf of contestant.

"Ninth. Your committee (majority) condemns the use of such a large sum of money in any primary campaign, but there is not the slightest foundation to connect Truman H. Newberry with its solicitation, its acquisition, or its use, or to condemn him because of the amount. While the aggregate was large, it was not spent for any purposes that were in themselves illegal or improper, and its use was wholly managed by a campaign committee entirely free either in its selection or control from Truman H. Newberry.

"Tenth. That with the exception of a few Democratic newspapers advertising was placed in practically every newspaper—daily, weekly, and monthly—published in the State of Michigan. (Record, pp. 350, 356.) That a series of 13 advertising announcements covering the entire 13 weeks of the primary campaign were carried in upward of 500 papers and publications and going into every portion of the State. (Record, pp. 422, 639.)

"Eleventh. In addition to this a very general and systematic plan of publicity was carried on through correspondence, thousands and thousands of form letters being sent into every county in the State, the names of the persons to whom sent being alphabetically arranged in card indexes. (Record, p. 644.)

"Twelfth. More than 80 per cent of the money spent in the primary campaign was, according to the evidence, spent for advertising and other publicity."

The majority report further declares:

"Thirteenth. Two facts which are decisive of the present case stand out clearly in the record as entirely established:

"First. That none of the money spent in the primary election, large as was the amount, was spent for corrupt, illegal, or improper purposes. It was spent for publicity and for ordinary campaign purposes, and expenditures which are perfectly familiar to every man who has ever been a candidate for office, and which are generally regarded as necessary and proper.

"Second. That Truman H. Newberry had no part whatever in the solicitation of the campaign fund or in the expenditure of it."

If the testimony contained in the record sustained the facts as stated by the report of the majority we would be compelled to come to their conclusion touching the merits of this case.

CLAIMS OF MINORITY.

We affirm, however, that the conclusion of facts as stated by the majority is not sustained by the record.

On the contrary, it shows clearly:

First. That Mr. Truman H. Newberry participated in, if he did not dictate, the organization of his campaign committee.

Second. He knew in advance that this campaign would cost "his friends" at least $50,000.

Third. Reports almost daily were made to him by his campaign manager, Mr. Paul King, and others.

Fourth. Almost daily reports were made to him by his attorney in fact, Fred P. Smith, as to the business and financial affairs of himself, his brother, John S. Newberry, the chief contributor to the campaign fund, and of 10 other Newberry interests. He knew that Fred P. Smith, who was acting under his power of attorney, was checking money out of the bank accounts of Truman H. Newberry and other Newberry interests and depositing them to the credit of John S. Newberry, and then issuing checks on this fund payable to the Newberry campaign fund committee as its demands might require.

Fifth. He aided in the preparation of the publicity material, received constant reports concerning it, and regarded himself responsible to Mr. Templeton, Mr. King, and Mr. Oakman "for actual travel and publicity costs." (B. E., 652.)

Sixth. He knew for weeks in advance of the primary that the extravagant expenditure of money had gone to such an extent as to be a common scandal in the State, and that he was the beneficiary thereof.

Seventh. This extravagant expenditure of money was called to his attention not only by the public press of his State, but by letters written to him personally by some of Michigan's most honored citizens.

Eighth. A careful study of this record will show that the campaign committee was composed of his close personal and business friends, and that they were in fact his very "alter ego," or at least they were so closely allied with him, and he was in such close touch with every phase of the campaign that it does not lie in his mouth to claim the usufruct of their work and deny the responsibility for the way in which it was brought to his door.

Ninth. With all of this knowledge brought to him in the way disclosed by this record, we fail to see how Mr. Newberry could honorably say as he did in his affidavit of August 14, 1918, filed with the Secretary of the Senate:

"The campaign for my nomination for United States Senator has been voluntarily conducted by friends in Michigan. I have taken no part in it whatever, and no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent."

Tenth. Nor do we understand how in his further affidavit filed with the Secretary of the Senate on August 29, 1918, he could honorably say:

"The following is a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by me, or by my agent, representative, or other person for or in my behalf with my knowledge or consent."

"None with my knowledge or consent."

"I have read the general published statement of Paul H. King concerning expenditures by a volunteer committee of my friends, but these were made without my knowledge or consent."

Twelfth. Neither is the minority able to understand, when Mr. Newberry's title to a seat in the United States Senate is challenged and this challenge is supported by the evidence contained in this record, why he should fail to come before the committee of his colleagues to give them the knowledge which he possesses bearing upon this subject, but content himself with a general denial.

Thirteenth. After it was announced that Senator Newberry would not appear to testify the minority moved that he be invited to appear, and they are not able to understand why the majority of the committee refuse to honor this request and call him before it so that the Senate might have the benefit of any explanations he might see fit to make concerning his relations to his campaign.

Fourteenth. A careful reading of this record will convince fair-minded men that the Newberry senatorial committee was the agency through which Mr. Newberry conducted the campaign, sometimes directing, sometimes vetoing, but nearly always participating in and approving its acts. The acts of this committee were his acts, and for them he is responsible at the bar of the Senate.

MICHIGAN STATUTES.

We shall discuss the evidence more in detail in order to shed full light upon the findings of the majority of the committee and for the purpose of sustaining the conclusions reached by the minority. But before so doing and in order that Senators may be able to understand the relevancy of the testimony, permit us to cite the Michigan Statutes governing primary elections:

Under the Michigan Statutes all of the provisions of law relating to the nomination and election of a governor, so far as the same are applicable, control the nomination and election of United States Senators. (Michigan Stats., 228.)

Under section 3828 the limit to be expended is 50 per cent of one year's salary.

So far as is pertinent at the present moment, section 3828 reads:

"No sums of money shall be paid and no expenses authorized or incurred by or on behalf of any candidate to be paid by him in order to secure or aid in securing his nomination, etc." (Record, p. 932.)

Section 3829 requires that:

"Every political committee shall appoint a treasurer, who shall receive, keep, and disburse all sums of money which may be collected or received by such committee, or by any of its members, for election expenses."

Section 3830 reads:

"No candidate and no treasurer of any political committee shall pay, give, or lend, or agree to pay, give, or lend, either directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing for any nomination or election expenses whatever, except for the following purposes:

"First. For traveling expenses and personal expenses incident thereto, for printing, stationery, advertising, postage, expressage, freight, telegraph, telephone, and public messenger services.

"Second. For dissemination of printed information to the public.

"Third. For political meetings, demonstrations, and conventions.

"Fourth. For the rent, maintenance, and furnishing of offices.

"Fifth. For the payment of clerks, typewriters, stenographers, janitors, and messengers actually employed.

"Sixth. For the employment of challengers at primaries and elections to the number allowed by law as such.

"Seventh. For the payment of public speakers and musicians at public meetings, and their necessary traveling expenses.

"Eighth. For copying and classifying of election registers or poll lists and investigating the right to vote of the persons listed or registered therein, and conducting proceedings to purge the registers and lists and prevent improper or unlawful registration or voting.

"Ninth. For making canvasses of voters.

"Tenth. For conveying infirm or disabled voters to and from the polls.

"Eleventh. For employing as counsel attorneys licensed to practice in accordance with the laws of the State, and for the necessary expenses of such counsel.

"None of the provisions of this act shall be construed as relating to the rendering of services by speakers, writers, publishers, or others, for which no compensation is asked or given."

Section 3831 provides:

"Every candidate and every treasurer of a political committee shall, within 10 days after any primary election, caucus, or convention, and again within 20 days after any general election, * * * in or concerning which he shall have received or disbursed any money, prepare and file in the office of the county clerk of the county in which such candidate or treasurer resides a full, true, and detailed account and statement, subscribed and sworn to by him before an officer authorized to administer oaths, setting forth each and every sum of money received or disbursed by him for nomination or election expenses, the date of each receipt, the name of the person from whom received, or to whom paid, and the person to whom and object or purpose for which disbursed. Such statements shall also set forth the unpaid debts and obligations, if any, of such candidate or committee incurred for the purposes set forth in section 3 of this act, with the nature and amount of each, and to whom owing, in detail, and if there are no such unpaid debts or obligations of such candidate or committee, such statement shall state such fact."

Section 3832 reads:

"It shall be unlawful to administer the oath of office or to issue a commission or certificate of nomination or election to any person nominated or elected to any public office until he has filed an account as required by this act, which account shall upon its face be complete and show a lawful compliance with this act, etc."

Section 3834 reads:

"And if upon examination of the official ballot it appears that any person has failed to file a statement as required by law, or if it appears to any such officer that the statement filed with him does not conform to law, or upon complaint in writing by a candidate or by a voter that a statement filed does not conform to law or to the truth, or that any person has failed to file a statement which he is by law required to file, said officer shall forthwith in writing notify the delinquent person to comply with this act."

(Also see sec. 3835.)

Section 3838 reads:

"No person who is not a candidate, or the treasurer of a political committee, shall pay, give, or lend, or agree to pay, give, or lend, any money, whether contributed by himself or by any other person, for any election expenses whatever, except to a candidate or to a political committee."

To give the proper legal effect to the foregoing sections of the Michigan statutes, we must keep in mind the following provisions of the primary act in Michigan:

"Sec. 45. Every person who, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person in his behalf, gives, lends, or agrees to give or lend, or offers or promises any money or valuable consideration, or promises or endeavors to procure any money or valuable consideration or office, place, or employment, to or for any voter, or to or for any person on behalf of any voter, or to or for any person in order to induce or have such person induce any voter to vote for or refrain from voting for, or support or oppose any candidate, or on account of such voter having voted or refrained from voting at any primary election in this State; every person who by any means receives, agrees, or contracts for any money, gift, * * * or for inducing, or undertaking to induce any other person to vote in a particular manner, or to do or perform any of the acts or things forbidden by this act, or on account of agreeing to do, or having done any campaign work, electioneering, soliciting votes for such candidate on primary day or prior thereto, or who after any primary election in this State, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person in his behalf, gives or receives any money or valuable consideration or place, position, or employment on account of any person having voted or refrained from voting, or having induced any other person to vote or refrain from voting at any such primary election; or having induced or undertaken to induce any other person to vote in a particular manner or for any particular candidate at any such primary election, or on account of any person having done or been a party to doing anything forbidden by this act, it being the intent of this clause to prohibit the prevailing practice of candidates hiring with money and promises of positions, etc., workers on primary day and prior thereto, * * * shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, etc." (Hearings, p. 939.)

Section 48 of said primary act, so far as it is pertinent to the issue here involved, reads:

" * * * It shall be unlawful for any other person to do or perform for or on behalf of any such candidate, or to help or injure the candidacy of any candidate, any of the acts or things which it is by this act made unlawful for such candidate to do."

CONSTRUCTION OF MICHIGAN STATUTES.

We deduce from the Michigan statutes just quoted:

(a) That Mr. Newberry could not spend, or authorize, or incur obligations to be paid by him in excess of $3,750.

(b) That no candidate and no treasurer of any political committee can pay, give, or lend, or agree to pay, give, or lend, directly or indirectly, any money or thing of value in order to secure a nomination, except for the 11 purposes set out in section 3830.

(c) While the statute places no express limitation on the amount which a committee may expend for the 11 defined purposes, no candidate can under this law create or use a committee as his agency and thereby defeat the express limitation prescribed for the candidate.

(d) Every candidate and every treasurer of a political committee must file a sworn, full, true, and detailed account and statement setting forth each and every sum of money received or disbursed by him for nomination expenses, the date of each receipt, the name of the person from whom received or to whom paid, and the person to whom and object or purpose for which disbursed. It must also set forth "the unpaid debts and obligations, with the nature and amount of each and to whom owing in detail."

(e) No candidate can excuse himself for not filing such account because the treasurer of the committee may have filed one.

(f) If moneys for election purposes were paid to county chairmen or secretaries or to hired workers, the law has not been complied with, because the treasurer may have charged the sums to some one connected with the committee who acted as a disbursing officer. The law requires the naming of the ultimate payee and not the intermediate agent.

(g) No candidate can loan money to a brother or business associate in order to enable him to meet the extraordinary demands of a moneyed campaign, and thereby defeat the purpose of the law.

(h) The intent of section 45 is—
"to prohibit the prevailing practice of candidates hiring with money and promises of positions, etc., workers on primary day and prior thereto."

(i) And section 48, in part, declares:
"It shall be unlawful for any other person to do or perform for or on behalf of any such candidate, or to help or injure the candidacy of any candidate, any of the acts or things which it is by this act made unlawful for such candidates to do."

SENATOR NEWBERRY ORGANIZED THE CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE.

Senator Newberry and his attorneys throughout these hearings have vigorously contended that the Newberry senatorial committee was a voluntary organization of his friends who managed and financed this campaign without his participation in it, and that he was in no sense responsible for their acts. Is this true? Let the record speak.

Jay G. Hayden (B. E., 58-68) testifies that Mr. Frederick Cody called on him in Washington early in 1918 and discussed Newberry's candidacy for the Senate. He told Mr. Hayden that he came representing Newberry (B. E., 58). He offered Hayden a large salary to take up the work of managing Newberry's campaign. This is doubly proved by the undisputed fact that Mr. Cody finally induced Mr. Hayden to go to New York.

He there met Mr. Newberry and conversed with him on the subject of taking the management of the campaign. Mr. Newberry renewed the offer which Mr. Cody had made, and Mr. Hayden declined to take the job, and personally advised Mr. Newberry against running a barrel campaign. Mr. Newberry said to him that if he could not get the Senatorship without a large expenditure of money, he did not want it. (B. E., 58-61.)

Cody was Mr. Newberry's representative in all his work in organizing for the campaign as shown by this record. (B. E., 640, 641, 658-661, 673, 674, 666-669.) (B. E., 73-74-58-59-219-373-527-557-558-560.) (B. E., 365-413.)

ALLAN TEMPLETON, GENERAL CHAIRMAN.

Later Mr. Newberry had a talk with Mr. Allan Templeton, his business associate. They were interested in a large corporation of which Mr. Templeton was president. Mr. Templeton swears that Mr. Newberry solicited him to be active in the campaign, and that he went into it because Mr. Newberry wished it. Mr. Templeton said (R., 414):

"I had been going to New York every few weeks to see Mr. Newberry in connection with our business. We were the two largest stockholders, and we were doing a great deal of Government work at that time, and it was customary for me to go at least once a week to New York. In the winter or spring of 1917-18 Newberry said to me: 'A number of my friends have asked me to run for the United States Senate.'"

That was the first Mr. Templeton had heard of it. Mr. Newberry said, "If I should decide to go I hope you will interest yourself in my candidacy." Mr. Templeton asked in what way he could be of assistance. He said he was very anxious if he should run to have a business man's campaign, and that perhaps I (Templeton) "would be willing to have a business man's committee in Detroit."

He later became the general chairman of the committee, and he was more or less active during the campaign. Every check from John S. Newberry was drawn to Allan Templeton, chairman, except a few made to cash to take care of emergencies. (R., 754-767.) He solicited funds toward the latter part of the primary campaign. (R., 416-417.) He was in constant communication with Mr. King and Mr. Newberry, and from time to time he was in the headquarters about the work. (R., 758; B. E., 132, 690, 695, 697.)

PAUL KING, EXECUTIVE CHAIRMAN.

Mr. Paul King was next to Mr. Templeton in the organization. He was known as chairman of the executive committee or executive manager. He was not a volunteer, although he claims that when he was asked to name his figure for running the campaign, by Mr. Cody and Mr. Templeton, he said he would not accept any direct remuneration. On this subject he said he was a young lawyer, opening offices in Detroit, and he would hope for business to come to his office from Mr. Newberry's companies, arising out of his doing this work. (B. E., 63.)

Templeton sent the following telegram to Mr. Newberry (B. E., 556):

DETROIT, MICH., 13.

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY,
Hotel Gotham, New York, N. Y.:

Have spent past two days in conference with Cody men from out in the State and city. Every one thinks, including Frank Blair, that Paul King quite necessary. King will be in New York Saturday and Sunday this week, Mr. Blair next week. Report satisfactory progress.

A. A. TEMPLETON.

Mr. Templeton and Mr. Cody solicited Mr. Paul King, and Mr. Paul King, in pursuance thereof, went to New York to see the principal, and Mr. Newberry there repeated the invitation and they talked over the campaign and what it was to be and what it would cost. Mr. King states that he went to New York by the arrangement of Mr. Newberry personally. (R., 467.) Mr. King shortly thereafter accepted the job and went to work. (B. E., 665.)

Mr. Francis W. Blair was treasurer of the committee. He was president of the Union Trust Co., of Detroit, and he states that Mr. Newberry was a large stockholder in that company, and that he was requested by Allan Templeton to become the treasurer of the Newberry senatorial committee, and that he did become the treasurer. (R., 388.)

Mr. James Swinehart, representing the Detroit News, who during the campaign was running the New York office of the Detroit News, testified in Grand Rapids that he saw a great deal of Mr. Newberry and Mr. Cody in Mr. Newberry's office and in the Biltmore and in his own office during this period, and among other things he said:

"Mr. Cody came to my office one day about the 1st of February and he told me that they were hoping to get Mr. Paul King as manager of the campaign, and they hoped to have Mr. Allan Templeton head what they were going to call a representative citizens' committee that would sort of give a prestige to the campaign, and then they also hoped to get Mr. Frank W. Blair as the treasurer; and I should say it was about a week, possibly two weeks later than that, that he was at my office again, and he told me definitely that these men had been secured, Mr. King as manager, Mr. Blair as the treasurer, and Mr. Templeton as the executive, or as the head, of this representative committee, and that these men had been specifically appointed by Mr. Newberry; that is, that they had been secured at his personal request." (B. E., 69.)

Mr. Charles A. Floyd, secretary of the committee, was chosen by Mr. Paul King. He claims he was not under direct pay. This selection was reported to Mr. Newberry and approved by him. (B. E., 686; R., 514.)

All the other members of this committee were subordinate to Templeton and King, and were selected by Mr. King and paid salaries out of the senatorial funds. There was not a volunteer on the entire committee from top to bottom. King's acts in employing them, of course, were the acts of Mr. Newberry, who selected and appointed King executive chairman, as before stated.

Do not the above facts gleaned from the record indicate clearly that the names of the members of this committee were submitted to Mr. Newberry for his approval, if he did not in fact select the most of them? And we shall later see how intimately in touch with the activities of the campaign he kept. Aye, even with the financing of the campaign, notwithstanding the fact that those who were directly connected with the campaign committee deny giving him any information. Their purpose is patent. The campaign expenditures by a candidate were limited to $3,750, and it would not do to have it appear that Mr. Newberry had actual knowledge of the extravagant expenditures which were being made in his behalf by a committee of his selection, with whose activities, except the financing, he was kept well informed.

SENATOR NEWBERRY'S INTIMATE ACTIVITIES WITH THE COMMITTEE.

He laid out his plan of campaign with his managers, King and Cody and Templeton. On March 7 Mr. Newberry wrote to Mr. King:

"If not too much trouble I should be glad to have a letter from you as often as you find time and inclination to write, and I hope you will be able to come down occasionally to go over matters in general, or one thing in particular, that needs immediate attention." (R., 469; B. E., 664, 669, 684, 695, 740.)

Throughout the campaign the managers at various times went to New York to meet Mr. Newberry and to revise their plans and to adopt new plans covering all important matters. (R., 469; B. E., 669, 684, 695, 706, 777.)

He was in constant communication almost daily with Mr. King or with other members of the committee. Their activities were reported to him by writing, by telephone, and by telegraph. (R., 469; B. E., 684, 902.)

True, Mr. King, the skilled, experienced political manager, says: "I consulted with Commander Newberry from time to time upon various matters connected with the campaign, but I did as my judgment dictated." (R., 536.)

Under their plan of campaign the committee prepared thousands and thousands of personal letters for Mr. Newberry to individual voters and workers throughout the State, and these were sent to New York and signed by Mr. Newberry and mailed. (R., 518, 519; B. E., 671.)

No man appears to have performed any service in the campaign, even to the extent of signing the petition for Mr. Newberry's nomination, without a personal letter from Mr. Newberry, signed by him. These letters were prepared by the committee, forwarded to Mr. Newberry, signed and mailed by him. (R., 518, 519; B. E., 671.)

Mr. King takes to himself the credit for the success of the campaign. "I ran that campaign," he says. (R., 536.)

When asked if he did not run it under Mr. Newberry's advice and direction, Mr. King replied:

"I did not. I consulted with Commander Newberry from time to time upon various matters connected with the campaign, but I did as my judgment dictated." (R., 536.)

Again, on page 634:

"Q. What was the reason why you should talk with him and confer with him and report to him about everything except the financing?—A. Because, as I say, the money was forthcoming from Detroit. There was never any question about it. There was simply a question, Senator, when anything came up to be done—the question in my mind was whether it was a good thing to do, and if it was a good thing to do, I did it. The question of expenses did not come into my mind at all. It was a question of whether it was a good thing to do or not, whether it would help the campaign along or not. If it were a good thing to do, I did it regardless of the expense. If it were not a good thing to do, I did not do it." (R., 634.)

King may have originated, but Newberry approved, the plan of publicity, covering the entire State and including paid advertisement in nearly 500 papers. This was done by a committee of which Templeton was general chairman and King was executive chairman, and while their names may have been recommended to Mr. Newberry, he chose them, or at least approved their choice. No one can come to any other conclusion who has read this record, and there is no evidence to the contrary.

That is was Newberry's publicity is proven by a letter which Mr. Newberry wrote to Mr. King on April 13, 1918, about the candidacy of Gov. Warner for the Senate. Gov. Warner had been three times elected governor of Michigan—the only man in the history of the State thus honored. Mr. Newberry wrote to Mr. King, his manager:

"I am glad Mr. Warner is scared out for the present, and as long as we keep up our publicity work at full pressure it will be harder and harder for any new man to get any kind of a start that will make it seem worth while for him to be a serious candidate." (B. E., 704.)

Mr. Newberry did not say "your publicity" or "the publicity of my friends" who are voluntarily conducting this campaign, but it is "our publicity."

King was not the candidate for Senator. The committee was supporting no other candidate than Newberry. He was to be the beneficiary of their work and of the money which they expended, and, as we will demonstrate as we go along, a part of this money was Mr. Newberry's money.

The sum of $147,860.16 is proven to have been expended in "our publicity," as is shown by the account of expenses which was filed by Mr. Blair, the nominal treasurer of the committee.

Again (B. E., 741), under date of May 23, 1918, he wrote to Mr. King:

"MY DEAR PAUL: I return herewith the draft letters with a few notations. Please be assured that these were made with no intent to criticize, and only as a suggestion.

"When you finally settle on the forms, please send me an index descriptive of the people to whom the various letters are intended to be sent, together with clean copies of the forms you finally decide to use.

"If in your opinion I should, by the use of these letters, now declare myself to be a candidate under the primary law, would it not terminate our present plan of publicity?"

Whose plan of publicity was this? Why does Mr. Newberry call it our plan? Why does he say that if these letters are used, and he should now declare himself "to be a candidate under the primary law, would it not terminate our present plan of publicity?"

Is it not a just inference from this language that he had in mind the restrictions on expenditures for the primary, and that he wanted the advantage of this publicity before his candidacy was declared, so that he might not have to account for it?

Mr. Thomas Phillips managed the publicity end at a salary of $100 a week. He got his information from Senator Newberry from which he prepared the advertisements. He spent a day or two with Mr. Newberry in New York securing the necessary data.

A plan for advertising in the moving-picture shows was devised. A photograph of Mr. Newberry was taken as if he was inspecting battleships in the midst of the great activities of the Navy. Mr. Newberry posed personally on a wooden imitation battleship in one of the parks in New York for this movie film, and it was exhibited throughout Michigan under the auspices of the committee. (R., 351, 355.)

The amount paid the Dunn Master Plate Co. for this film was $3,788. The making of the film and its circulation through Michigan cost over $5,000. Nowhere is there anything in the filed account showing where the money came from with which to pay this sum, and it is nowhere charged to the expenses of the campaign. That the money was raised and expended goes without saying. It was intended for Mr. Newberry's benefit and he received it. Mr. Newberry knows whether he furnished this money in whole or in part, but because he failed to appear before the committee and the majority declined to ask him to come, we are without further light upon this subject.

Again, the correspondence (particularly B. E., 688, 701, 722, and generally B. E., 684-902) shows Mr. Newberry in constant touch with the committee's work, repeatedly he was urging them on by praise and congratulations, and by declaring again and again that under no circumstances would he abandon the campaign, but that they and their friends might be assured that he would continue in the race to the end, notwithstanding the prospects of a number of other candidates, such as Gov. Warner, Gov. Osborn, Senator William Alden Smith, and Mr. Ford either had or would announce their candidacy.

Again, in the northeastern peninsula was one O. C. Davidson, an ardent supporter of Gov. Osborn. Little headway could be made if Davidson was to continue actively in support of Gov. Osborn. Mr. King and Mr. Newberry planned together to win Davidson from Gov. Osborn or to neutralize his influence, and finally Mr. Newberry wrote to Mr. King under date of May 2, 1918:

"I think it necessary that I should have more detailed information concerning Mr. Davidson and his exact connection with the United States Steel Co. before I undertake to talk to any of my friends here who are in intimate touch with that organization. You may be sure that I shall leave nothing undone to accomplish the desired result in this matter." (B. E., 709.)

Again, on May 18, Mr. King wrote to Mr. Newberry:

"I presume that we ought to get together again soon and settle some of the pending questions, notably that of the platform." (B. E., 740.)

On May 20, 1918, Mr. Truman H. Newberry wrote Mr. King, in part, as follows:

"Replying to your letter of May 18, I have to look over the proposed forms of letters, and if there are any minor changes that will make them seem more like the letters I would write myself, I will make them in pencil."

No important step was taken without his direction and without his knowledge. Reports were made to him practically every day. (R., 469; B. E., 684 to 902.)

While Mr. King and Mr. Newberry were ordinarily in accord in the management of the campaign, there were notable instances in which Mr. Newberry disapproved, and be that said to his credit.

When Mr. William Mickel sought to induce Mr. James Helme to run in the Democratic primaries and manage Helme's campaign for him, Mr. Newberry expressed the hope that his friends would have nothing to do with it. (B. E., 625.)

Again, when it was thought in May that Mr. Henry Ford might be a candidate, he wrote to Mr. King under date of May 6:

"I do not want to have anybody associated with me in this matter begin any attack on Henry Ford of any kind. I hope you will see that this particular feature of the senatorial primary campaign is entirely omitted from the work you are doing, and I think the letters written from your office should carefully avoid any reference to this matter."

"I will be interested to have your report after you have been home and looked matters over in your office. I suppose you will soon have your monthly meeting again, and the result of that I await with much interest." (B. E., 715, 716.)

These two instances prove conclusively that Mr. Newberry exercised his right to veto, as well as other sections of the record show his constant approval. It was his committee and it was his campaign they were conducting.

On June 15, Mr. Newberry again wrote to Mr. King relative to Mr. Ford entering the contest on June 14:

"The unheeded developments in Mr. Ford's case really require pages of comment, and I am going to hope that after 10 days or more you will come down alone or with Allan [Templeton] when we can give some time to a thorough review of the situation as it then exists and plan for the future." (B. E., 777.)

Whose campaign was this? Who should plan together? None except the members of the so-called volunteer committee and Mr. Newberry and the general chairman and the executive chairman, under whose auspices the money was being collected, and part of which was Senator Newberry's money, and all of which was being expended for the promotion of his senatorial campaign.

When this letter was written they were in the thick of the fight. It was necessary to complete their plans. There was work to do. Newberry was interested in knowing what was being done and directing how it should be done. He made no speeches. He was not in Michigan during the campaign to shake hands. The committee had the entrée to the advertising columns of nearly every newspaper in Michigan. Hired workers were busy in every county in the State. It was costing immense sums of money, and, as the majority report says, page 7—

"The name of Truman H. Newberry was practically unknown throughout the State."

But did that give him or his friends the right to expend vast sums of money in order to sway public opinion to favor an unknown man in the State?

Mr. Newberry was dealing with influential elements in New York. He was interesting Mr. John Mitchell, the great labor leader, in his campaign. (B. E., 689.) He conferred with the Steel Trust officers. (B. E., 709, 774.) He was dealing with the big mining company bosses (B. E., 698), and he was reporting all of his activities to the Newberry senatorial campaign committee, of which Mr. Templeton was the general chairman and Mr. King was the executive chairman. Strange, was it not, that all of their activities should so dovetail together?

So also every move made by the committee was daily reported to Mr. Newberry. A large number of these reports appear in the record. Mr. Newberry acknowledged them. This appears in many places in the record. (B. E., 684-902.) In one letter he says: "I devour your reports." Nothing, apparently, was done at the meetings of the committee or of the field men of which Mr. Newberry was not advised. (B. E., 684-902.)

DID MR. NEWBERRY AID IN WHOLE OR IN PART THE FINANCING OF HIS CAMPAIGN, AND PARTICULARLY THE ACTIVITIES OF THE NEWBERRY SENATORIAL COMMITTEE?

We submit that the evidence in this case is such that if the issue were presented to any court or to any jury in the country he would not be permitted to say, "It was not my committee; I am not responsible for their acts." He could not help but know what was going on, and yet after all of this extravagance it is claimed on his behalf that he had nothing to do with the financing of the campaign, that he spent none of his money, that he did not know what they were doing in a financial way.

We have already pointed out his part in the organization, his intimacy with everything that related to the campaign, excepting only knowledge of the financing, which Mr. King and his associates purposely, we think, kept away from him, because once it appears that he has participated in this financing his is the responsibility, and he could not have made this campaign and kept within the financial limitations which are placed upon him or upon any other candidate by the primary statutes of Michigan.

Let us again turn to the pages of the record.

Mr. Newberry was a very rich man. He was not unmindful of the probable cost of a campaign in a State where he was but little known. He had a conference with Mr. King, his astute political manager, who had, perhaps, as much political experience in campaigning as any other resident of the great State of Michigan. He asks Mr. King what the campaign would probably cost. Mr. King advises him that it would cost "his friends" at least $50,000, dwelling upon the necessity of publicity. (B. E., 664.)

The campaign of publicity is organized; not without the knowledge of Mr. Newberry, but with it.

As early as August 8, 1918, Mr. H. A. Vandenberg, editor of the Grand Rapids Herald, wrote to Mr. Newberry. He quotes in his letter from the Escanaba Journal of August 2 from an editorial entitled, "An offense to political decency":

"It [referring to the Newberry campaign] is being made a money campaign, which outclasses the money-barrel campaigns of 20 and 30 years ago, and if the campaign is to continue unchallenged it will create a condition which must inevitably mean the debauchery of Michigan politics."

He quotes from the Charlotte Republican:

"The Newberry organization has seemingly dismissed all semblance of ethics and common sense in hiding the fact that theirs is a simon-pure and simple money campaign."

Further Mr. Vandenberg says:

"I direct your attention to these specific charges which have appeared in responsible newspapers. They are charges, furthermore, which find kinship in very general rumor and report. I fully realize that gossip is a deadly and a ruthless assassin. But gossip, in this instance, is too widespread to be longer ignored. It charges you and your associates with the expenditure of money running into six figures in the erection of your senatorial organization. Such a situation must be as intolerable for you, if these reports are false, as it is intolerable for the State if the reports are true."

The whole letter is informing, but I shall not quote further.

Under date of August 11, Mr. Newberry replies:

"I have not paid nor am I obligated to pay anything in connection with the senatorial primary nor have I any fiscal information thereof beyond the assurance of the Newberry committee that their accounts will be filed as required by law and all expenditures made only for such purposes as allowed by law."

But not one word is said with regard to the extravagance of the expenditures. (Record, p. 791.)

Messrs. Templeton and King also, at the request of Mr. Newberry, wrote Mr. Vandenberg:

"He (Mr. Newberry), they say, 'has not made any contributions nor expenditures himself, and we have never consulted with him about them. The committee has had entire charge of the whole campaign, including the raising of funds and their disbursements.'" (Record, p. 791.)

Again, they give him no information about the rumor that the expenditures are already "running up into the six figures."

That Newberry regarded himself in part responsible for the financing of the campaign clearly appears in a letter which was written April 6, 1918, by him to Mr. George E. Miller, the editor of the Detroit News. He says, in part:

"Neither Mr. Templeton, Mr. King, nor Mr. Oakman have ever or expect ever to receive one cent (except actual travel and publicity costs) from me. They have not suggested such a thing."

Why would these men expect "actual travel and publicity costs" unless there was some understanding about it, and unless there was some responsibility in that behalf by Mr. Newberry?

CONTRIBUTIONS IN THE NAME OF THE BROTHER, JOHN S. NEWBERRY.

John S. Newberry, the brother, is apparently the only contributor until August 16, when substantial sums were subscribed in the name of other relatives and friends, and it seems to be a fair inference that other subscribers were called for, because the extravagant outlay of money in this campaign became a public scandal shortly after, if not before, August 1.

Let us examine the testimony of Mr. John S. Newberry, the younger brother and business associate of Senator Newberry, which appears in the record, pages 302 to 319. This testimony is so important that we beg to quote from it in extenso.

While interpreting it let us remember that Frederick P. Smith was the attorney in fact of both Senator Truman H. Newberry and John S. Newberry.

"Senator TOWNSEND. And you do not check on one another's accounts?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Does the same man check on the accounts of each of you?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. Smith?"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Yes."

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes; he has our power of attorney."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Does your brother act for you in a good many matters?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir; always."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you act for him?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Excepting when he is away or something like that."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He acts for you in investments and things of that kind?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir. (R., 304.)"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You did contribute something, did you not?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How much?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Ninety-nine thousand dollars."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Ninety-nine thousand dollars exactly?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I think so, as near as I saw the reports."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. As near as you saw the reports?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. When did you contribute the $99,000?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. At different times during the campaign."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you personally draw the checks for it?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you see that they were made to any person in particular?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I did not see any checks."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you sign any checks?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you authorize anybody to sign any checks?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. Smith had my power of attorney."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He had your power of attorney?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That is all the authority you gave him?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you talk to him about it, and tell him to make these contributions?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I told him when I was going away that Mr. Newberry expected to have a campaign, and that I wanted to finance the campaign."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You wanted to finance it?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And what?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. And he signed the checks as they wanted the money. I suppose. I was not at home."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. When was that talk with Mr. Smith?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Before I went away, some time the last end of March."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That is Mr. Fred P. Smith?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The man who keeps your account and your brother's account?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And keeps the office of both of you?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir. (R., 307.)"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. As I understand you, none of those persons whose names I have mentioned talked with you about doing this financing?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I did not know them."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or got you to do this financing?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Not one."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How did you know what it was going to cost?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I did not know."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You did not know how much it would cost?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Had nobody given you any estimate of what it would cost?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Had you talked to Mr. Truman H. Newberry about it?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Not a word?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You simply said to Fred Smith, your manager, or your office manager, 'I want to finance this campaign.' What did you tell him to do, then?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. That was all I told him. They would need money from time to time, and he had my power of attorney. (R., 308.)"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you have stated what you said to Mr. Smith?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That you said you wanted to finance it?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he was authorized to pay out whatever was necessary?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was there any limit to that at all?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir. (R., 309.)"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Could Smith have gone to $200,000 as well under your authority?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. He could have if he had wanted to. His power of attorney gave it to him."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you tell Smith to supervise the expenditure of the money and see it was not wasted?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I did not tell him anything about it."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You did not tell him anything about it?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you take any precautions to see that it was not thrown away or wasted?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I did not. (R., 311.)"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Then, as I understand you, during this period, commencing the 1st of April, when you went away, all during the time this $99,000 was being expended on your behalf, you knew nothing about the amounts that were being drawn?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I did not know anything about it."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you ask for statements at any time from Mr. Smith?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I did not."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you get any from him?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you get any letters from him about what he was expending?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or did you ask for any?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I did not."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Now, Mr. Newberry, did you know that about the last of July of that year there was considerable public scandal about the amount of money that was being used in that campaign?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I was too busy at something else."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He could just as well have taken all the money they needed from your account, so far as your instructions were concerned?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or the amount shown in this record as admitted, something like $178,000?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Just as well as not?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. They could have taken anything they wanted. (R., 312.)"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. During that period from the 1st of April until September, when you came back to Detroit, did you see your brother?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you correspond with him?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir; we had letters back and forth."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was anything about this mentioned?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Anything about his campaign?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. After that time did you talk with your brother about it?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. After what time?"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. After you got back to Detroit."

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I don't recollect anything just now."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Not anything about it at all?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I do not recollect anything about it. I do not think we did."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did your brother know before you went away on the 1st of April that you were going to finance that campaign?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; he did not."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who has possession of these canceled checks, do you know?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I presume they are around the office."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. They have been in Mr. Smith's charge, have they not?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir; he has charge of everything in the office."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did Smith have authority to transfer funds or money from one fund to another?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How broad was his power of attorney as to handling your funds?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Well, as broad as any power of attorney is made, buying and selling, and contracts."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did he have a similar power of attorney from your brother?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I imagine so."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. To the best of your knowledge he did have?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. To the best of my knowledge."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you ever check up your account on this?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You never checked it up?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You never went over it with Smith?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Then of your own personal knowledge you do not know that it came out of your funds at all, do you?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Except what I saw in the papers. That is all I know."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What you saw in the newspapers?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That is all you know about it?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. That is all I know about it, what the reporter stated. That is all I know about it."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You have never taken the trouble to go to your bank and find out whether this money came from your funds or your brother's funds?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. It couldn't have come out of my brother's funds."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How do you know that?"

"Mr. NEWBERRY. It would have to come out of my money if he signed the checks.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You think it did, but you never looked into your books to see?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You never had your bank balance to see?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I was not at home.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. After you came home in September didn't you check it up with him?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I didn't check up anything.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Take the witness.

"Mr. MURFIN. I have no questions.

"Senator POMERENE. Mr. Newberry, you have spoken about this power of attorney which was given to Mr. Smith. Was that a joint power of attorney by yourself and your brother?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; they were all separate powers of attorney.

"Senator POMERENE. Have you got a copy of that with you?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I didn't bring it down.

"Senator POMERENE. Is it a general power of attorney?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. It is a general power of attorney, as they are always made out.

"Senator POMERENE. Authorizing him to draw on your bank account at any time he may see fit?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.

"Senator POMERENE. You said a moment ago in answer to a question by Mr. Lucking that he had the power to transfer money from one fund to another.

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.

"Senator POMERENE. What do you mean by that?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Ever since we have been in business, my brother and I, we have borrowed money from one another. If I wanted money, I borrowed it from him; and if my brother wanted it I let him have it, and we would pay it back from time to time. (R., 315.)

"Senator POMERENE. If there was not money enough in your account to suit your demands, you would borrow from him?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.

"Senator POMERENE. And if he wanted any money he would borrow from you?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir; if I had it in my funds. It was always that way.

"Senator POMERENE. Is that the way your business has been conducted?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.

"Senator POMERENE. In family circles?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir; always in family circles.

"Senator POMERENE. It appears from the examination thus far that your first check was drawn some time the latter part of March, 1918.

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.

"Senator POMERENE. When before that day did you decide to finance this campaign?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Well, I told Mr. Smith when I went away what I was going to do with it.

"Senator POMERENE. How long was that before that check was issued?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I don't remember. That is the first I recollect of it.

"Senator POMERENE. Mr. Newberry, did you receive statements from Mr. Smith from time to time of the state of your bank account?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I did not during the year 1918 receive anything. I was always moving around from one place to another, out on the Great Lakes.

"Senator POMERENE. Did you not give any personal attention to your financial matters?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I didn't bother myself about it. I left it all in Mr. Smith's hands when I went away.

"Senator POMERENE. Did you place any limit at all upon the amount he was to subscribe toward that fund?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

"Senator POMERENE. You knew that you had a corrupt practices act in Michigan, did you not?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.

"Senator POMERENE. And you knew that limited the amount which could be expended by a candidate to $3,750?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.

"Senator POMERENE. Did that have anything to do with your financing the campaign instead of letting your brother do it?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. As I stated before, it was the love and loyalty and affection I had for my brother.

"Senator POMERENE. That does not answer my question.

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Then I did not get your question.

"Senator POMERENE. Did that have anything to do with your financing the campaign, instead of letting your brother do it? That is, did your knowledge that there was a corrupt practices act in Michigan have anything to do with your deciding to finance that campaign instead of letting your brother finance it?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I don't think it did. I didn't think anything about it.

"Senator POMERENE. Did you have it in mind?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I don't think I thought about it.

"Senator POMERENE. Did you know at that time there was a Federal corrupt practices act?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I don't remember just now whether I did or not. I don't think I looked it up or had occasion to. (R., 316.)

"Senator POMERENE. And you want the committee to understand, do you, that you placed no limit upon the amount which Smith was to draw out of your account for the financing of that campaign?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I never thought about it. I just said, 'Go ahead and use what money you want.' (R., 317.)

"Senator WOLCOTT. And apparently that was a contribution made from your funds?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir. I don't know whose funds it was from.

"Senator POMERENE. Where did you keep your bank account?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. The National Bank of Commerce.

"Senator POMERENE. Where does your brother keep his account?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I think he kept his at the People's State Bank.

"Senator POMERENE. Did you during the spring and summer and fall of 1918 get any statement from Mr. Smith or from your bank as to your balance at any time?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

"Senator POMERENE. Did you know what balance you had in the bank at any time?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I did not.

"Senator POMERENE. Was any money checked from your brother's account into yours?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I don't know.

"Senator POMERENE. Or from your account into your brother's account?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. I don't know.

"Senator POMERENE. Do you mean to say you do not know whether any money was borrowed from one or the other?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I don't.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The fact is that since your father's death your brother has practically run your business affairs?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you have different bank accounts in different banks?

"Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir." (R., 319.)

FREDERICK P. SMITH, CONFIDENTIAL AGENT AND ATTORNEY IN FACT FOR TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY AND JOHN S. NEWBERRY.

Later Mr. Frederick P. Smith appeared as a witness, and we deem it important to quote from his testimony somewhat at length. (R., 753, 775.)

"Mr. SMITH. No; I call myself agent.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You are their confidential financial man, are you not?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You have, I think it has been said here, powers of attorney from both Mr. Truman and Mr. John Newberry?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes; practically all of the interests in the office. I carry their powers of attorney.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And there are others also interested?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What others?

"Mr. SMITH. Mrs. Truman Newberry's individual interests and Mrs. John S. Newberry's individual interests, and their sons.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you make contributions to the campaign funds during the primary?

"Mr. SMITH. I gave contributions for Mr. John S. Newberry to Mr. Templeton.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Were they all made to Mr. Templeton?

"Mr. SMITH. Practically all of them. There were a very few made to cash to take care of emergencies.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Your first contribution was how much?

"Mr. SMITH. I do not remember. It would be a hard thing to say what it was.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. A check to Mr. Templeton?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes; Mr. A. A. Templeton.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. It appears here that certain checks were made to Mr. Templeton and by him indorsed to Mr. Paul King as chairman, about $5,083. Were those the checks of John S. Newberry by yourself?

"Mr. SMITH. That might be.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you not a record of those?

"Mr. SMITH. I did not give any other checks except Mr. John S. Newberry's checks, so I conclude they must have been his checks.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The only checks you gave to anybody for that purpose were the checks of John S. Newberry?

"Mr. SMITH. John S. Newberry.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What I want to get at is about that $5,000. Have you got your checks for that?

"Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have not you your record with you of that?

"Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you got your record of the other deposits?

"Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or of your other checks?

"Mr. SMITH. No. (R., 754, 755.)

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. This subpoena, if your honors please, was issued on the 1st of June by this committee, and is in the usual form and contains the following duces tecum:

"And to bring with you all records, books, papers, documents, letters, telegrams, etc., connected with or relating to the Truman H. Newberry campaign for Senator, and all payments and contributions connected therewith."

"You read that, Mr. Smith?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I may say that this was issued at the instance of the contestant. Just why have not you the records?

"Mr. SMITH. I made a search and could not find them. We have a storeroom that we have used for 25 or 30 years. It is up back of the old Newberry house on Jefferson Avenue. I went up there Saturday as soon as I could after I got this subpoena and gave the afternoon to it. I could not find a check since 1917 in the place.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You mean none of the checks since 1917?

"Mr. SMITH. None of the checks. I could not find any of the matter pertaining to this affair. I did find some campaign material. How it got there I do not know. It was there and I brought it along. That is all I could find.

"Mr. SMITH. When I got there the door was open. It has always been under lock and key. It has been broken open several times. Where they went I do not know. I certainly never saw them.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Where the records of the payments and contributions and all that are, you do not know anything about?

"Mr. SMITH. No.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Were they put in there?

"Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; they were put in there.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Did you put them in there personally?

"Mr. SMITH. No; I did not. My cashier put them in there. I do not remember just what time. It seems to me it was either when we came back from the grand jury with the books and papers or it was after the close of the trial; I do not know which.

"Senator WATSON. Were these books and papers at the grand jury hearing and at the final trial in Grand Rapids?

"Mr. SMITH. I do not know. I was not subpoenaed. My cashier was subpoenaed.

"Mr. SOUTER. The books were before the grand jury.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Do you mean the books and records that this witness kept?

"Mr. MURFIN. Yes; that is right.

"Senator WATSON. Were the books and records kept by the Government or were they turned back?

"Mr. SMITH. They were turned back. (R., 755, 756.)

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Is there any way we can definitely find out about this $5,000 of checks that went to Paul H. King, chairman, or were indorsed to Paul H. King?"

"Mr. SMITH. I do not think there is any question about the fact that it was issued."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Were those in addition to the $99,900?"

"Mr. SMITH. I do not know anything about the report."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You do not know anything about the report?"

"Mr. SMITH. No; I had absolutely nothing to do with it."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Well, do you know the total amount that you charged against John S. Newberry on the books?"

"Mr. SMITH. I do not know what was charged, but I know that the credits, taking credits for what came back, because there were moneys coming back along about the time that the report was made up. It made, as near as I recollect, either $99,000 or $99,900. There was a discrepancy of $900."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What do you mean by a discrepancy?"

"Mr. SMITH. Well, the report showed after it was filed by this office $99,000 and his books showed $99,900."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I think my recollection is that the report shows $99,900. I may be in error about that."

"Mr. SMITH. I do not think so. I think it is the other way about."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you advance moneys in cash to anybody?"

"Mr. SMITH. Probably half a dozen times; something like that."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. To whom?"

"Mr. SMITH. When somebody would telephone in to meet their pay roll, and they would be out of town, they would ask me to protect their pay rolls, and Mr. Emery would come up, or Mr. Templeton, or Mr. Paul King, and I would give them the check there for cash."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. For how much?"

"Mr. SMITH. Well, a thousand dollars; I don't remember particularly the amounts."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you any books showing those checks?"

"Mr. SMITH. No; I have not."

"Senator WATSON. Was that in addition to the $199,000?"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. We do not know, your honor. That is what we are investigating. Did you know, Mr. Smith, that they had a bank vault box for cash?"

"Mr. SMITH. No; I did not."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You did not know about that at all?"

"Mr. SMITH. No."

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. What did you mean by 'some checks coming back'?"

"Mr. SMITH. Some money coming back. They sent back some money and a readjustment sometimes of checks; they brought me in a paper bag full of money."

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Who did?"

"Mr. SMITH. Mr. Emery."

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. How much?"

"Mr. SMITH. As near as I can recollect, it was around $21,000."

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. When was that?"

"Mr. SMITH. It seems to me that was the first week in September. (R., 758.)"

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Was it supposed to be some readjustment on account of these late large contributions that they had?"

"Senator WOLCOTT. Does that mean that your office did not contribute $99,900?"

"Mr. SMITH. No; that is the net amount. They contributed an amount which with this $21,000 and the $99,000 added must have come up to $120,000, because when this came back, taking that credit out of the amount of checks given, it left this net amount of $99,900."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Smith, you say that they did this and they did that. Do you mean yourself? You knew how much was being paid out by you, did you not?"

"Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; I knew from time to time I gave them checks."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Well, you had a record of it, had you not?"

"Mr. SMITH. Yes; there was a record, but I did not keep the books."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you give it to them in currency at any time?"

"Mr. SMITH. I think there were probably half a dozen times, but not over that."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Small amounts, did you say?"

"Mr. SMITH. I do not remember now. It might have been $3,000 and it might have been more."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You mean the few times taken all together, $3,000? (R., 759.)"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You think you must have advanced $120,000?"

"Mr. SMITH. I think it must have been."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Because you got some back?"

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you ever mentioned to somebody before to-day that you got any money back in cash?"

"Mr. SMITH. I do not remember whether I have or not."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. In connection with this investigation at any time in the last two and a half or three years has any person ever heard before that you got money back until to-day?"

"Mr. SMITH. I do not know whether they have or not."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who handed you that cash back?"

"Mr. SMITH. Mr. B. F. Emery. He brought it in a paper bag about that high [indicating]."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you count it?"

"Mr. SMITH. I think I did."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And it was about $21,000?"

"Mr. SMITH. It was about $21,000, as I remember it."

"Senator WATSON. Can we find out there just when that was?"

"Mr. SMITH. I can not tell exactly, but I think it was the first week in September."

"Senator WOLCOTT. What was the date of Andrew Green's check?"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Do you mean the $5,000 check or the $15,000 check?"

"Senator WOLCOTT. The $15,000 check."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He could not tell, but he thought it was several weeks after the primary. Mr. Smith, what did you do with the $21,000 that you got?"

"Mr. SMITH. It was undoubtedly put in the bank."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What bank?"

"Mr. SMITH. In John S.'s."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. In John S. Newberry's bank account in the National Bank of Commerce?"

"Mr. SMITH. I think it was. There is not any question about that."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Smith, was it just exactly $21,000, or might it have been some odd dollars?"

"Mr. SMITH. It might have been odd dollars; I do not think it was even money."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did he make any explanation as to why he was returning this money to you?"

"Mr. SMITH. I do not remember that he did, except on the large contributions that were coming in or readjustments or something."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. It appears that the checks on which he got about $35,000 at that time were dated the 5th day of September, and they were canceled on the 7th. It appears that they were deposited on the 6th. Between those two dates $10,000 in currency. I mean from John S. Newberry. Did you give them that?"

"Mr. SMITH. No; I did not."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Do you know anything about it?"

"Mr. SMITH. No."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. They are getting from you $10,000 and handing you back the next day $21,000. Do you know anything about it at all?"

"Mr. SMITH. No; I do not."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. There are no books to enlighten you in connection with it?"

"Mr. SMITH. I do not believe there was any such thing. (R., 765, 766.)"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you give further checks later?"

"Mr. SMITH. Further checks?"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Further checks later?"

"Mr. SMITH. No."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You do not remember whether you did or not?"

"Mr. SMITH. No."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you any way of showing that?"

"Mr. SMITH. No; I have not."

"Mr. MURFIN. Do you mean after September?"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I mean after he got the $21,000. That is as plain as anything in the world. You can not remember whether you paid out other moneys or not or gave other checks?"

"Mr. SMITH. No; I can not."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What did John Newberry say to you?"

"Mr. SMITH. He came to me, as near as I can remember it, the latter part of February or the first part of March—it was the late winter—and told me that if the committee made any demands for campaign funds, if his brother should be in the senatorial race, to give them the money. I do not remember whether he mentioned Mr. Templeton's name or not. I knew Mr. Templeton quite well. The first call was from him. The checks that were given after that were all given to Mr. Templeton the same as the first one."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You have given us, in substance, all that transpired, have you?"

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. No other discussion, except to direct you, if they wanted money and came and asked for it, to give it to them?"

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. No limits as to amounts placed on you?"

"Mr. SMITH. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And no reports made to him as to the amounts you paid?"

"Mr. SMITH. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And no inquiries made by him as to what it was used for?"

"Mr. SMITH. No."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or as to how much was used?"

"Mr. SMITH. My power of attorney is a very broad one. (R., 767.)"

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. But you would not have paid out money without directions from somebody?"

"Mr. SMITH. Absolutely not."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you have told us the only directions you had?"

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You never rendered any statement or account to John Newberry for it?"

"Mr. SMITH. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he never asked for any?"

"Mr. SMITH. He never has."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he made no inquiries about whether it was running to an excessive amount or anything of that kind?"

"Mr. SMITH. He never has."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He never has to this day?"

"Mr. SMITH. No, sir; not to my recollection."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Truman Newberry asked you about the expenses at times, did he not?"

"Mr. SMITH. I do not remember that he did."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You reported to him every day what was going on, did you not?"

"Mr. SMITH. No."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you not send him a telegram every night of what occurred during the day?"

"Mr. SMITH. I sent him a telegram generally at night regarding what the papers said."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. About what the newspapers were saying?"

"Mr. SMITH. About what the newspapers were saying."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. One witness here, a Miss Kilfoyle, testified that every night you sent a telegram to Mr. Newberry concerning the campaign."

"Mr. MURFIN. Fix the time when that happened, Mr. Lucking."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. All right; perhaps you can for me. I suppose she was there in the office."

"Mr. MURFIN. I must not be a witness. I have a distinct recollection of what the record shows."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You mean the time. I suppose it was while she was in the office."

"Mr. MURFIN. I will whisper it to you."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Now, you had only to do with the finances, as I understand it, of the campaign, Mr. Smith?"

"Mr. SMITH. All I had to do was to furnish some money from Mr. John S. Newberry's account."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. But I asked you if you had anything to do with the campaign except the finances, and you said no."

"Mr. SMITH. No; nothing whatever."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You got no reports from them or anything of that kind?"

"Mr. SMITH. No, sir."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. She says: 'During the couple of months or more preceding the primary election in Michigan, in 1918, Mr. Smith sent telegrams to Mr. Newberry with reference to the campaign. It was his custom for three months to dictate a telegram each evening.'

By Mr. Smith I mean Mr. Fred T. Smith, the defendant in this case. Is that substantially correct? (R., 768.)

"Mr. SMITH. No; it is not. I telegraphed him every night after the articles began to appear in the papers.

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. After what?

"Mr. SMITH. After the articles began to appear in the Evening News. I telegraphed him what the papers said.

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. When was that?

"Mr. SMITH. It must have been along the last week of the primary.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I guess it started about the 10th of August. Mr. Vandenberg's letter, which has been put in here, was published on the 8th day of August—Mr. Vandenberg, of the Grand Rapids Herald. Do you remember Mr. Vandenberg wrote some open letters or something of that kind?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You advised him about how long the heavy expenses were going to run, did you not?

"Mr. SMITH. No; he was talking to me about some other matters, and, as I recollect, he mentioned something about when the primary was, and I told him July 27. That is as much as I knew about it.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You mean August 27?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes; August 27. I meant August 27. Instead of that I told him July.

"Mr. MURFIN. You are some politician.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Are you quite sure about that?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes. So I wired him an explanatory telegram.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The trouble with that explanation—and it is evident you are just mistaken about dates—was that your telegram was not sent until July 28, so it could not be July 27 that the primary was going to be.

"Mr. SMITH. No; there is where I made my mistake. I told him on the telephone July 27. Then I got a wire right off to him.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You could not have told him it was the day before, because you would know that the primary had not been held the day before you were talking.

"Mr. SMITH. That is the gist of it.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. But you could not on the 28th day of July tell him the primary would be July 27, the day before you were talking.

"Mr. MURFIN. Is not that a matter of argument?

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Yes.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I do not want anybody to accuse us of absolutely misleading the witness when it is plain he is mistaken. May I call your attention to page 219, to the following telegram:

"DETROIT, MICH., July 28, 1918.

"Lieut. TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY,
"Third Naval District, 280 Broadway, New York.

"I misinformed you this morning the date of close of regular expenses. Should have said August 27. The circular work, advertising, clerical help, postage, and all regular overhead expenses will naturally continue until primary. Have written.

"FRED P. SMITH.

"(R., 769.)

"Did you send that telegram?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes; I did.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Then, it was not about when the primary was; it was when the expenses would cease that you were talking with him and writing him about. Is that right?

"Mr. SMITH. That is probably it. I do not know what the conversation was, but I had told him July 27. I misinformed him as to the month.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You had been talking to him. He wanted to know when these expenses were going to stop, did he not?

"Mr. SMITH. I do not believe so. I think the conversation was about the drain on the balances in the office, and he was complaining about the money that was being spent.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Complaining about the large amount of expenses being drawn?

"Mr. SMITH. Or the money that was being spent and drawn from the account all the time and put into his brother's account to keep from being overdrawn.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And his funds as well as his brother's were used?

"Mr. SMITH. And everybody else's.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. To keep up the amounts that were on the books charged against John?

"Mr. SMITH. To keep his account from being overdrawn.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he wanted to know when this thing was going to end. Is that the idea?

"Mr. SMITH. I think that is right.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You got the date wrong in your talk, and so you sent this telegram to him?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; that is right.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you say:

"I misinformed you this morning the date of close of regular expenses. Should have said August 27."

"In other words, you should have said that the expenses would then be cut off?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING (reading):

"The circular work, advertising, clerical help, postage, and other regular overhead expenses will naturally continue until primary."

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And that is what he had been talking with you about over the phone?

"Mr. SMITH. He was kicking about the balances.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Yes; the drain was pretty heavy, and he wanted to see it stop?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; that is true.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You say, 'Have written.'

"Mr. SMITH. Yes.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you got that letter or a copy of it?

"Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That is lost, too, is it, with the other things?

"Mr. SMITH. It is not in our office, however. (R., 770.)

"Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; I want to find out about the checking out of these funds by you, Mr. Smith, to the Newberry primary committee. Those checks were all drawn against what account in your office?

"Mr. SMITH. Against Mr. John S. Newberry's account.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Are you positive they were invariably drawn against that account and no other?

"Mr. SMITH. Absolutely.

"Senator WOLCOTT. You spoke of transferring funds from the other accounts into his.

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir. It is a procedure that has been current for years. When one account gets low it is fed from the others. We have 12 different accounts. Of course, we do not feed from the corporations, but the personal ones. I have done it this last week.

"Senator WOLCOTT. How many of those personal accounts were there?

"Mr. SMITH. There were 10 at that time.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Did you transfer funds from Truman H. Newberry's account over to John S. Newberry's?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; or Mr. Truman's to John S., or from Mrs. John S., around either way, and always have done it.

"Senator WOLCOTT. All these funds in those various accounts, barring the corporation accounts, went to supply ready money to John S. Newberry's account?

"Mr. SMITH. No; I do not think they all did in this case.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Then, the funds in their two accounts went to keep the John S. Newberry account up to a sufficient fund so as to enable you to have enough money out of that account to take care of these primary expenses?

"Mr. SMITH. In cases where there were overdrafts they would make up enough balance to cover the overdraft.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Were those funds advanced from Truman H. Newberry's account and Mrs. Truman H. Newberry's account to John S. Newberry returned in due course to those accounts from which they were originally taken?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Have you the books showing all these transactions?

"Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Were those books taken by the cashier down to Grand Rapids?

"Mr. SMITH. I do not remember about it. I did not pay any attention to what he took. He got his own stuff. He got a subpoena and went and saw the attorneys and got his material together and went over that night.

"Mr. HAL H. SMITH. But he was subpoenaed with the books?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

"Mr. HAL H. SMITH. The books, records, checks, and letters.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Was he subpoenaed by the Government?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir. (R., 772, 773.)

"Senator WOLCOTT. What is the last you recall of seeing these books and checks that had to do with these transactions about which I have inquired?

"Mr. SMITH. I do not remember whether it was after the grand jury or after the trial.

"Senator WOLCOTT. You were aware of the fact that there was considerable notoriety concerning the expenditure of money in that campaign?

"Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes.

"Senator WOLCOTT. You were aware of the fact, were you not, that it was charged by prominent men in Michigan that this extravagant expenditure of money was either by, or occasioned by, Mr. Newberry?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Was there talk of investigation of that business? In the newspapers, I mean, was there talk of investigation of that statement?

"Mr. SMITH. Well, there has been all along.

"Senator WOLCOTT. I mean back there at the time we are now speaking of, about contemporaneous with the happening of all these events; we will say in August, 1918?

"Mr. SMITH. I do not remember that.

"Senator WOLCOTT. You do not recall any demands for an investigation or demands that there should be an investigation of the thing?

"Mr. SMITH. There was a lot of notoriety in the newspapers about expenditures, but I could not say now whether I remember when it was or not.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Smith, I am at a loss to understand, and I want you to explain to me why it is, that in view of that talk and more or less of a scandal about the expenditure of Newberry funds, that you, the man who had the written evidence of the expenditures and to whom disbursed and how the accounts were kept, should be so much at a loss to tell this committee anything about the whereabouts of those books and checks and that you were apparently so indifferent about their safe-keeping.

"Mr. SMITH. We must have had them a considerable period in our files down there at the office.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Well, you do know that yourself?

"Mr. SMITH. I can not tell what time they went up.

"Senator WOLCOTT. What do you mean—went up to the barn?

"Mr. SMITH. Up to the barn. At Grand Rapids they were tied in a sack.

"Senator WOLCOTT. You took no special precaution to take care of them?

"Mr. SMITH. I put them where we have always put all our checks, under lock and key; and not only that, there is a man and his wife living right in the place.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; but there was a grand-jury investigation of this business when these books and checks came back into your possession.

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

"Senator WOLCOTT. The subject matter was being investigated, and yet you allowed these evidences, written evidences, of the entire business of this whole transaction to get from under your sight. That is correct, is it not? (R., 774.)

"Mr. SMITH. We only have a limited space there in our offices. Every so often we have to clean them out, with the enormous amount of business that comes through that office every year.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; but this was only a period of about two or three months of financing. How did you keep your books—in loose leaves or bound books?

"Mr. SMITH. In bound books.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Did you ever inquire of this cashier what he did with the books and checks?

"Mr. SMITH. No, sir.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Did you ever make any investigation about their whereabouts after they came back from Grand Rapids?

"Mr. SMITH. No; I did not.

"Senator WOLCOTT. They were not destroyed, were they, to your knowledge?

"Mr. SMITH. Not to my knowledge.

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Were they all before the grand jury?

"Mr. SMITH. I do not know whether he got them from the office or whether he got them up there.

"Senator WATSON. You were not subpoenaed?

"Mr. SMITH. No; I was not subpoenaed.

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Mr. Steel took all the books they asked for?

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know that?

"Mr. SMITH. What is that?

"Senator WOLCOTT. You just answered Senator SPENCER and said—

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know that?

"Mr. SMITH. I presume he did.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Well, presumption is different from knowledge.

"Mr. SMITH. Well, I can not say.

"Mr. MURFIN. He did tell you he took all that was asked for?

"Mr. SMITH. He said he took what was required and he went up there. He went over to see Mr. Murfin, and I suppose he explained what was there.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know anything about where they are?

"Mr. MURFIN. Mr. Steel showed me a subpoena, and I told him to respond to it and to go with it before the grand jury and not to open his packages before he got to the grand jury. He got back, and I said, 'What happened?' He said, 'Everything that happened before the grand jury is a secret.' What he took I do not know. I know what I told him to take.

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. That is all, Mr. Smith." (R., 775.)

A careful reading of this testimony shows that there were 12 different personal and business accounts which might be described as the Newberry interests. Two of them were corporations. Ten of them were personal accounts belonging to Senator Newberry, his brother, John S. Newberry, the father's and mother's estates, their wives, and their sons. Frederick P. Smith was the attorney in fact representing all of these interests and had general powers of attorney, especially from Truman H. Newberry and John S. Newberry, which were as broad in the powers conferred as language could make them.

Mr. Smith had acted under these powers of attorney for a number of years. Under them, and perhaps like powers of attorney from the other interests, he would draw checks upon one or the other of these accounts and pay them into other accounts which might from time to time become depleted.

Some time, perhaps in March, 1918, John S. Newberry told Mr. Smith, who was his as well as Truman H. Newberry's attorney in fact, that "Mr. Newberry expected to have a campaign for Senator, and that 'I wanted to finance the campaign.' No other instructions were given. Mr. Smith had the power to draw on Mr. John S. Newberry's account without limit to defray the expenses of this campaign. He never rendered any account to Mr. John S. Newberry, and John S. Newberry never asked for any statement. He did not know the amount of money to his credit. He was apparently not concerned as to its state. In fact, for John S. Newberry he contributed $120,000, of which about $21,000 was returned to Mr. Smith in currency in a paper sack after the campaign was closed. The net amount contributed in the name of John S. Newberry by this attorney in fact was $99,900. Newberry himself says that Smith might have drawn, if he had so desired, $200,000." (R., 311.)

John S. Newberry paid no attention whatsoever to this subject except to give the authority to Mr. Smith to draw checks at libitum. Truman H. Newberry, the older brother, was in fact the business executive of the Newberry interests, and it was he alone who apparently gave attention to the business of the Newberry interests while he was in New York. According to John S. Newberry, Truman H. Newberry did not even know that John was going to finance his campaign. (R., 313.)

Not so indifferent was Mr. Truman H. Newberry. Apparently he was keeping his finger on the financial pulse of the Newberry interests.

One of the stenographers in the Newberry business offices testifies (R., 768) that during a couple of months preceding the primary election Mr. Frederick P. Smith sent telegrams to Mr. Newberry with reference to the campaign. It was his custom for three months to dictate a telegram each evening. This is in part denied by Mr. Frederick P. Smith, but on July 25, 1918, he sent to Truman H. Newberry a telegram:

"I misinformed you this morning the date of close of regular expenses. Should have said August 27. The circular work, advertising, clerical help, postage, and all regular overhead expenses will naturally continue until primary. Have written."

The letter seems to have mysteriously disappeared.

But Mr. Smith says, on page 769 of the record, that Mr. Newberry never talked to him about the campaign. The record shows that there was a conversation by telephone between Newberry in New York and Smith in Detroit. A mistake was made in this talk as to the date of the primary. The telegram is sent to correct it, and then when asked further about this telephonic conversation he says, "I think it was about the drain on the balances in the office" and Senator Newberry was complaining about the money that was being spent.

Frederick P. Smith, the confidential attorney in fact of these brothers, tells us that Truman H. Newberry's funds as well as his brother's and everybody else's were used to keep up the amounts that were on the books charged against John, and to keep his accounts from being overdrawn.

Truman H. Newberry "was kicking about the balances."

"Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Yes; the drain was pretty heavy and he wanted to see it stopped?"

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; that is true.

"Senator WOLCOTT. Did you transfer funds from Truman H. Newberry's account over to John Newberry's?"

"Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; or Mr. Truman's to John S., or from Mrs. John S., around either way, and always have done it."

True, this witness says that these moneys were repaid, but every book belonging to the Newberry interests which would shed any light upon this subject has mysteriously disappeared. At least they are not forthcoming upon subpoena.

Now, when we remember that $99,900, the net amount furnished by John S. Newberry, came from the Newberry interests through Frederick P. Smith, the attorney in fact of the two brothers, that John S. Newberry gave no attention to the subject more than to authorize the drawing of the checks—that he did not know whether this money would come from his account direct or from his account after it had been replenished from drafts upon other accounts, including Senator Newberry's account, who says that Truman H. Newberry did not furnish a substantial part at least of this sum? And how can he say, after complaining about the money that was being spent and "kicking about the balances," that his campaign was "voluntarily conducted by his friends," and that he took "no part in it whatever and no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent."

Again, Frederick P. Smith, the attorney in fact, for these two brothers, took out Truman H. Newberry's account Truman H. Newberry's money, and deposited it to John S. Newberry's account, and thereby aided in securing the nomination for United States Senator for Truman H. Newberry. Under the testimony here submitted can Truman be presumed to have no knowledge that he was loaning his money to help finance his campaign when he was complaining all the while about the drain on his balances.

Did not Truman H. Newberry's money aid in paying the expenses of his nomination? Was not the money paid out of his bank account by his attorney in fact? What difference does it make that it went the roundabout way through John S. Newberry's account?

Again, section 3830 provides that "no candidate shall pay, give, or lend, or agree to pay, give, or lend, either directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing for any nomination or election expenses whatsoever," except for the 11 purposes designated in section 3830 above referred to.

While it is plain that there is no express limitation on the amount which may be expended by a political committee, there is the limitation of $3,750 upon the amount which may be expended by or on behalf of any candidate to be paid by him, and he is obligated to file his account. The minority members of this committee are not able to say how much money was taken from Truman H. Newberry's account and placed in John S. Newberry's account for this campaign, but whatever it was it was his duty to have filed an account thereof, and the presumption is that it was a very substantial amount, otherwise he would not have been "kicking" about the balances.

And strange as it may seem, the majority members of the committee after they found that the Newberry books were destroyed, or at least not forthcoming, they denied the minority members their motion to require the banks to produce their books which would show at least the amount which was taken from these several accounts. Aye, more, when we asked that Senator Newberry, himself, should come before the committee so that he might enlighten us as to his financial activities, he refuses to come, and the majority of the committee refuse the request of the minority members to ask him to come.

The record in this case includes the bill of exceptions filed in the Supreme Court in Truman H. Newberry et al. v. United States. Including this bill of exceptions, the record contains 1,906 pages.

WORKERS WERE HIRED IN VIOLATION OF THE MICHIGAN STATUTE AND NO LEGAL REPORT OF MOST OF THIS EXPENSE WAS MADE.

The majority report declares:

"While the aggregate of the moneys expended 'was large, it was not spent for any purposes that were in themselves illegal or improper.'"

Again it says:

"The clear result of all the testimony is that there is no evidence whatever to sustain the charge of improper use of money at the primary or general election."

Further on, again, the majority report recites:

"The charge is made that hundreds and hundreds of workers were hired all over the State, directly in violation of law, both the written statutes of Michigan and the common law. The evidence entirely fails to sustain this charge, for it is clearly shown that those employed by the Newberry committee—that is to say, clerks, stenographers, field men, and publicity men—are not in any sense within the prohibition of the Michigan statute prohibiting the hiring of workers on primary day and prior thereto to induce persons to support or oppose any candidate. The statute expressly indicates its intent to prohibit the prevailing practice of candidates hiring with money and promises of positions, etc., workers on primary day and prior thereto. This statute can not be contorted into a construction that would prohibit an orderly public extensive program of publicity."

The minority of this committee contend that however careful the managers of the campaign may have been to observe the law, in their eagerness to nominate Mr. Newberry at whatever cost they did not comply with it. They violated it and sought to cover up their tracks.

In order to sustain this charge the minority beg to refer the Senate to certain portions of the record and to quote somewhat extensively therefrom. And while so doing let us keep in mind the provisions of section 45 of the Michigan primary statute, which provides:

"It being the intent of this clause to prohibit the prevailing practice of candidates hiring with money and promises of positions, etc., workers on primary day and prior thereto."

RAYMOND GLOCHESKI.

This witness was a Polish lawyer of prominence at Grand Rapids, Mich. He was hired to work all over the State, organizing the Polish voters. He received $600 in salary and $400 for traveling expenses. (R., 501.) With respect to this man Glocheski, Paul King, the general manager, stated, after describing that his "field men" traveled all over the State, organizing the counties:

"Then I assigned other men whom I did not consider field men in the same sections, men like Mr. Glocheski, to work with certain nationalities of people or certain classes of people. Mr. Glocheski did work among the Polish people of the State. He visited the Polish settlements around the State, especially in Presque Isle County and Manistee County, and there are a good many Polish citizens in Kent County (Grand Rapids)."

"Q. Were they all under pay?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you have a man or men to work with the fraternal societies?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Under pay?—A. Yes, sir." (R., 516.)

Glocheski himself testified that he went to Detroit on a telegram from King and met King at his private office. "King said William Alden Smith was not going to be a candidate and wanted to know what he (Glocheski) thought of Newberry as a candidate." Glocheski said he would be glad to do what he could, and "King told him he wanted him to travel through the State, finding out what the sentiment was regarding Newberry among the Polish people and not let it be known that he was there for that purpose only. That he would give him $150 a month and all expenses." (The above was from Glocheski's testimony before the grand jury.) (R., 501.)

He was sworn again before the committee, and he testified, among other things, as follows:

"The first of each month Mr. King would send me a check for my expenses in the amount agreed upon.

"Q. What was the amount agreed upon?—A. $150 a month and expenses.

"Q. For work in Grand Rapids?—A. For work in the entire State of Michigan.

"Q. What kind of work did you do?—A. I organized the Polish voters in Michigan for Mr. Newberry.

"Q. And went from city to city?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And that was your part of the work?—A. Yes, sir." (R., 504.)
The moneys paid to Glocheski by King are not to be found anywhere entered in the books or records.

CHARLES TUFTS.

Charles Tufts, of Scottsville, Mich., was hired by Paul King and Charles Floyd to work for Newberry, and received $1,600, $200 a month for services and also in addition his expenses. Tufts was a State senator of Michigan. He stated that he went to Detroit on a summons from Paul King, and proceeds:

"He told me he (Paul King) was anxious to see Mr. Newberry win out and requested that I work for him, and I discussed with him plans for my work in behalf of Mr. Newberry, and suggested that I travel over a part of the State, going from county to county, and attempt to line up the various county officers; that at the conclusion of my conference with Mr. King he told me to go ahead with the work and to send to headquarters for expenses as needed, and when I had finished my entire work for Newberry to send in a bill for my expenses. That in accordance with plans made in my conversation with King I worked the following counties: Mason, Newago, Iosco, Alpena, Cheboygan, Presque Isle, Grand Traverse, Manistee, Lake, and Montmorency. That I went to see the county officers of each of said counties, and if they were not lined up with anyone, tried to get them to work for Mr. Newberry, but made no financial agreement, because I had no authority for making such agreements. That in Alpena County A. A. Wentz traveled with me and assisted me in my work for Mr. Newberry; I paid his expenses, but later he told me he was paid so much a week for his services; Wentz and I went together about 10 days or 2 weeks. That E. O. McLean, of Ludington, Mich., a newspaper man, was employed by the Newberry organization to line up the marines, fishermen, life-savers, etc., and write a number of articles for Newberry for publication; that McLean and I traveled the coast towns together for the purpose of lining up the vote and talked Newberry to the men we met. * * * That my expenses in doing my work for Newberry were heavy at times, for when I would run into a place where things were right I would buy meals, cigars, etc., for parties of men, and in accordance with my agreement with King I was not limited in my expense, and I spent freely. * * * That in lining up the various county officers I was not always furnished with the names of the Newberry managers by Floyd, but frequently after I would return from a trip he would ask whether I had called on certain Newberry workers. * * * Further, that after I had entered upon my work in behalf of Mr. Newberry I received two or three personal and complimentary letters from Mr. Newberry thanking me for the work that I was doing." (R., 557, 558.)

Tufts's name nowhere appears in the books or records of the committee, nor do the amounts of money paid him. It would be interesting to see the explanation of the author of the majority report of why Tufts and Glocheski were not hired workers under the Michigan primary act. But there are many more of them. Many of the county officers that were lined up in every county of the State but one were in exactly the same class.

ROLLO E. PRESCOTT.

Mr. Prescott was a printer by occupation, living at the time at Lincoln, Alcona County. He received $750 in salary and about $600 expense money, his work lying chiefly in his own county; but he also organized two or three adjoining counties by procuring the chairmen and secretaries and putting them in touch with Mr. King. He testified he was called upon early in April by one B. F. Reed (this was a field manager of the committee) to come to Harrisville to talk over the Newberry proposition.

"He wanted me to organize Alcona County for Newberry and requested that I get in touch with Paul King in Detroit. I went to Detroit and talked with King. King outlined the plans and requested me to take care of Alcona County. * * * King asked what I would take to do the work outlined and suggested $150 per month salary and an unlimited expense account. * * * He further agreed to leave the matter of organization entirely to me. * * * In accordance with the agreement, I began upon my work immediately and drew five months' salary at $150 a month, in addition to expenses. * * * That in my work in behalf of Newberry I organized Alcona County. I saw George W. Burt, probate judge, and obtained his consent to act as chairman. I acted as secretary, and as part of my work I attempted, so far as possible, to get the supervisors to take charge of the work in each township and told them that if they would put in a day's work now and then I would make it right with them. However, neither Burt nor the supervisors were paid any money by me, and their only activity was to circulate literature which I furnished them."

He then tells of organizing other counties, selecting managers, etc., and furnishing some of them moneys.

He further said:
"That my active work in behalf of Mr. Newberry was confined principally to Alcona County during the primary, and that I made trips over the entire county, calling upon the voters personally and distributing literature broadcast." (Record, pp. 537, 538.)

Mr. Prescott's name does not appear in the books, nor do the moneys paid him.

EDWARD O. McLEAN.

Mr. McLean, an advertising man, residing at Ludington, testified that King wrote him to come to Detroit, and that King asked him if he was not affiliated with any other candidate, and that—

"If I could work for them in the Newberry campaign, and I told him that I could work. * * * Mr. King asked me what my time would be worth, and I told him $200 per month, and he agreed to pay that and all expenses."

Witness said his first work was a preliminary survey of Mason County, where he talked to the political leaders. In Lake County he recommended for secretary Herbert Davis. He said he had a talk with Davis and told Mr. Davis whatever his charges would be they would be taken care of, and that there would be about $200 in it, but that he would have to see Mr. Floyd (secretary of the committee) to complete the arrangement. He said he took up work among the marine voters urging them to support Newberry. That he worked at this until primary election, about three and a half months. * * *

"My total expense was between $500 and $1,200, and my salary amounted to $800, and that he quit work primary day. He said that Paul King wrote him in June that thereafter he was to deal with Charles Floyd, and that he did so and was paid by Floyd. He said that he came to Grand Rapids to report every two or three weeks to Floyd, or whenever he sent for him. Floyd would then ask him what he had been doing and would also give him names of people to see. * * * He went to Detroit once after the first visit and submitted to Mr. King his plan to work among the marine men, which Mr. King indorsed. He visited Mason County, Emmet, Charlevoix, Benzie, Manistee, Oceana, Muskegon, and all the way down to St. Joseph. These were Lake Michigan coast counties. * * * He received a letter from Mr. Newberry after the campaign was over thanking him for his work. * * * He met Capt. Tufts, who introduced him to Mr. A. K. Moore, who said he was doing the same work among railroad men that I was doing among marine men. * * * (Record, pp. 654, 655.)

J. SCOTT HUNTER.

Furniture salesman of Detroit, Mich., member of the common council of the city of Detroit, testified that in the spring of 1918 he attended a smoker at the home of Milton Oakman (Detroit and Wayne County manager of the Newberry forces).

"At that time Mr. Oakman asked the boys there to do what they could for Mr. Newberry."

He went to Newberry headquarters and met Mr. B. Frank Emery. "He asked me at that time to assist in the campaign, but there was no transaction between us. I returned to headquarters a few days afterwards by appointment. At that time he gave me $300 in currency. He requested me to work for Mr. Newberry's interest with the $300, and he gave me a lot of literature, buttons, etc., to distribute. I took the literature and buttons and I expended this $300. I spent it around advertising Mr. Newberry from one place to another, buying drinks and cigars. I spent the entire $300 that way. * * * After the $300 was gone I paid more visits to the headquarters. * * * Mr. Emery delivered a second $300 to me in cash. I did not give him a receipt. It was given to me for the same purpose. There was nothing mentioned in regard to it. I supposed it was meant for services. I spent it the same way as the other; that is, for liquor and cigars and treating through the city." (B. E., 484, 485.)

ZALIE CLAGO.

Zalie Clago, a deputy sheriff of Wayne County (Detroit), testified that Milton Oakman, the sheriff, employed him at $300 per month, and that he received his pay from the Newberry senatorial committee:

"He said that when the matter first came up Mr. Oakman asked him if he would like to take a vacation for three or four months with pay and take charge of the Wayne County office of the Newberry campaign, and said that his duty, his first duty at least, was to look after the organization of the factory employees. That Milton Oakman had charge of all Wayne County, and meetings were held in the county clerk's office on some occasions. That all precinct leaders and ward men were in Oakman's office at times. * * * Among his first duties was the perfection of the organization in factories. He said he took out petitions and visited each factory himself. * * * He also had 20 cases of beer, which he paid for himself, and the meeting was held on April 22, 1918, the Newberry meeting. He said he went to work March 6, 1918, and worked until August 28, 1918, and then went to the State central committee. * * * (R., 369.)

WILLIAM M. CONNELLY.

William Connelly was a State senator, living at Spring Lake, Ottawa County. Senator Connelly testified:

"Charles Floyd asked him if he would take on the Newberry campaign in Ottawa County. He said he considered it for a while and finally made up his mind that he would take it along with his own; he was running for senator. * * * He said he received $1,200 from Floyd. He said that he hired some men to distribute literature and he made speeches; at one time he hired a man and made a speech in Nunica. He said later he saw Charles Floyd and Floyd told him to make up an expense account of something less than $200. Mr. Connelly said he knew it was not right and he wouldn't do it again." (R., 509.)

The above is from his grand jury testimony. Mr. Connelly appeared before the committee and desired to make a correction, so that he was also examined before the committee wherein, among other things, he said:

"Q. Who employed you to work for Senator Newberry or for his campaign?—A. Mr. Floyd at Grand Rapids. (R., 510.)

"Q. What was your conversation with him when he employed you?—A. Well, when he called me on the phone, if I recall correctly, he said he had been looking for some one to handle the Newberry campaign in Ottawa County, and I had been highly recommended to him.

"Q. Afterwards did you make some arrangement with him?—A. Yes.

"Q. State it.—A. The arrangement was that I was to handle the campaign in substantially all of Ottawa County, barring the city of Holland, which was inconvenient for me to look after. (R., 511.)

"Q. How much money did you receive?—A. One thousand two hundred dollars.

"Q. And you accounted for how much?—A. Two hundred dollars by expense statement and verbally for the balance.

"Q. For what purpose was that expended?—A. A portion for my own compensation, approximately $600.

"Q. So that there were $600 additional that you accounted for orally?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. As expense to cover your traveling and hotel expenses?—A. And for men employed for the distribution of literature and for speakers and for bands. * * * I conducted a regular whoop-em-up campaign in a county where the candidate was not known at all, and we put him over in good shape.

Connelly's name does not appear in the books of the committee nor does the $1,200 paid him, so far as discoverable.

TERRY T. CORLISS.

Mr. Corliss was an employee of the State auditors' office, Lansing, Mich.

"Paul King asked me if I could do anything for Newberry in Tuscola and I said I would be glad to do so. Afterwards I met him on telephone call in his Detroit office and Mr. King wished me to go through the State, various parts of the State, and organize county committees and go ahead with the organization a good deal along the lines that I saw fit, and at that time I said I could not afford to do it for nothing, and he said, 'That is all right; we will compensate you for your work.' He said, 'How much are you getting now?' I said, 'Fifteen hundred a year.' He said, 'Well, that is all right; I will pay you $75 a week and your expenses to carry on this campaign.' I did work for about 21 weeks at that salary, receiving $2,275. * * * His duties were specified by Mr. King to organize county committees—that is, choosing a man for chairman and a man for secretary—but he had no authority from Mr. King to pay them any money, but was to refer them in each case to Mr. King, to make the arrangements with him personally."

He then describes at length the going into various counties and meeting and making arrangements with a large number of individuals. He also called on other towns in the same county. He testified that about this time he met Mr. James Davis, who told him he was doing the same kind of work in the southern tier of counties, and also Mr. McGregor, at the Detroit headquarters, who told him he was working in the northern part of the State, doing the same work—organization. (R., 604.)

J. B. BURNS.

J. B. Burns, real estate insurance man, of Three Rivers, was employed by James R. Davis (a field manager). Davis— "wanted Burns to take charge of the campaign there and to take up the matter with the Detroit office. He went to the Newberry headquarters in Detroit and talked with Emery. He returned to Three Rivers and tried to get representatives in each township. * * * Judge Thomas, of Constantine, went with him in an automobile on trips over the county. He wrote and sent out letters and literature. He kept $300 out of the $400 he received for his own services. He continued his interest in the campaign after the primary, but did not receive the $20 per week after the primary. He received a letter and perhaps a telegram from Mr. Newberry thanking him after the primary." (R., 653.)

FAY G. DUNNING.

F. G. Dunning, of Lansing, Mich., a gravel-pit operator, was employed by Mr. E. V. Chilson, assistant secretary. He was employed in April or May.

"Mr. Chilson wanted him to spend his time for Newberry, and he said he could, as he wasn't very busy. He was to work with Dr. Shaw at Lansing, in the campaign, and Chilson paid him $50 in cash then. He visited the Detroit office and received $500 from Chilson; later he received $300 from Emery at Lansing, all cash." (R., 605, 606.)

FRANK P. BOHN.

Frank P. Bohn, a physician and banker, of Luce County, Mich., testified that Paul King came to his office and asked him to manage the Newberry campaign for Luce County and he agreed. He received $150. He testified one was for $100 and one for $50.

"I expended further $125 for workers distributing literature and getting the vote out. Also had a list of voters in the townships made, which I used. I employed about 15 men to work primary day and paid them $5 apiece, 2 of them $10 who worked before primary day. * * * I told them to get the boys out to distribute literature, and do what they could for the interest of Mr. Newberry. * * * I had told Mr. McGregor that it would take from $100 to $150 to take care of the work. The men selected had worked for him (Bohn) in politics before; that I did not know who they were supporting before I hired them. My purpose was to get them to support Newberry. I simply asked them if they were not tied up to support Newberry. It was my intention to get their support and vote for Newberry. I did not know who they were for Senator." (R., 880.)

Neither this man's name nor the payments made him appear in the records of the committee.

WILLIAM E. RICE.

William E. Rice, of Grand Rapids, Mich., testified that Charles Floyd asked him to become identified with the Newberry campaign and that as a result of the conversation he made a contract with Mr. Floyd. The contract was that he was to do certain work and that was that he was to organize bolo clubs throughout the State of Michigan in connection with the Spanish-American War Veterans' camps. He went to various cities where these camps were and did organize the bolo clubs, making the Newberry campaign the principal issue or part of the work and that it was so stipulated by Mr. Floyd.

"He received $50 a month salary and his expenses. He received a letter or telegram from Mr. Newberry regarding the work." (R., 874.)

Mr. Rice's name does not appear in the books or records of the committee.

J. CLYDE WATT.

J. Clyde Watt, of Ionia, testified King asked him to take charge of the Newberry organization in Ionia County. King said he would allow him $500 compensation.

"He finally paid me $600 and expenses. He reimbursed us for money paid out. We received, all told, about $900. Our expenses were about $250, and this was brought to us by James Haskins. Our expenses consisted of circulating petitions, distributing literature, telephone bills, automobile hire, etc. All our money came from Floyd, except $250 from James Haskins."

EDWARD W. FEHLING.

Mr. Fehling lived at St. Johns, Clinton County, and was an attorney. He testified that—

"Floyd came to my office at St. Johns and requested me to become manager of the Newberry campaign in our county. I accepted, and I received altogether $500. Of this amount I spent probably $35 to $75 for distributing literature and kept the rest. I paid nothing to men, but hired boys to distribute literature. I also made six or seven auto trips around the county."

"Q. And in that connection did he (Fehling) say what he was doing on the trips, or whether he was distributing literature, or matters of that kind?—A. He was making those trips over the county in connection with the campaign."

"Q. He had taken the chairmanship of it?—A. Yes, sir." (R., 506, 507.)

GEORGE C. WALSH.

George C. Walsh testified:

"The defendant, Guy Ingalls, during the primary of 1918, delivered to me $100, and requested me to do something in behalf of Mr. Newberry. I spent between $27 and $30 of the $100. I interviewed a number of men who worked for me, and I hired a man by the name of Peter Connors. I gave him $10 and asked him to distribute cards and buttons. * * * I retained the balance of the money Mr. Ingalls had given me. * * * Whatever I got from Mr. Ingalls covered whatever I did either in my paper or other activities for him and for Mr. Newberry." (B. E., 455, 456.)

CHARLES A. CAMPBELL.

Charles A. Campbell testified he resided at Lansing, and was employed in the State labor department. That during the year 1918 he was grand master of the colored Masons, and went about the State making addresses, "doing work during the campaign wherever I could for Newberry, outside of lodge rooms." He received $15 per week from the Newberry committee for this work. That his expenses on these trips were paid by the Masons, and that he was also receiving a salary from the State. (R., 878.)

WILLIAM S. CREBASSA.

Mr. Crebassa was an undersheriff of Baraga County and a food and drug inspector of the State.

"He said he met Paul King in L'Anse in May, 1918, and also Charles Floyd. I talked with King, who said he was driving through the country in an auto and was up there in the interests of Newberry and would like to have me use my influence. He was talking to both Brennan and me at that time. Brennan said, 'Hand us $1,000 and we will paint the town with Newberry literature.' Mr. King said it would take $1,000,000 to satisfy everybody. Mr. Brennan then said, 'Crebassa and Herbert Brennan handled the campaign for Sleeper and did a good job.' * * * He introduced Mr. King to Bill Brennan, the banker. I went with him to the Stearn-Culver office and introduced him to the office force and also introduced him to some of the merchants in the town. Mr. King then told me to do what I could for Newberry; that he had petitions to be circulated, literature to be distributed, also wanted a poll list made, and whatever expense you go to you will be reimbursed. I told him I would do what I could when in L'Anse, but that I was working for the State and away from home a good deal. * * * In September after the primary I received from Detroit $130 to $160. I spent most of it for auto hire in Baraga County, and circulating petitions and having a poll list made up." (R., 889.)

JAMES R. DAVIS.

Mr. Davis testified that Paul King, about the 1st of May, wished him to interest himself in Mr. Newberry's campaign.

"He did go to Detroit and saw Mr. King and Mr. King made arrangements with him there for him to do organization work in the lower tier of counties in Michigan, except Berrien, and offered him $300 a month and his expenses and gave him full authority to pay money to any of the men he interviewed to act as chairman or secretary of the county boards. * * * He interviewed men in Cass, Hillsdale, St. Joe, Lenawee, Monroe, and Branch Counties. * * *"

Names of some of the chairmen and secretaries are given and the testimony continues.

"He was later reimbursed for the amount he paid them to the amount of $800 or $900, and he received himself in the neighborhood of about $700 for his own expenses and about $1,100 salary, and he made the trips also in other counties, although he had no real organization work in the other counties, but he talked with his friends in favor of Newberry, and he went to Detroit headquarters nearly every week and received his pay. * * * (R., 639.)

MEL DEO.

Druggist at North Branch, Lapeer County.

"Paul King asked him to take the chairmanship of the campaign for Lapeer County. Paul King asked us what the expenses would be. I told him just the expenses, and King gave me $100, which I divided with Carrigan. I spent it treating the fellows. I told them it was on Newberry, and this was at a picnic and other places of that kind." (R., 877.)

FRANK L. COVERT.

Frank L. Covert, circuit judge, Oakland County, testifies that he went out with Mr. Seeley and called on men in each township, paid each man sufficient to cover his expenses, an average of $10 to each man.

"We have 25 townships and probably about 25 men; used a total of $250. We each retained $100 for our expenses. He said that $300 was left with him by Chilson, and I turned over $200 of it to Mr. Seeley. After that I understood about $200 more was given to Mr. Seeley. I just allowed myself the $100." (R., 877.)

AUGUST FIELD.

Mr. Field was manager of the Chippewa Hotel at Manistee, Mich. He testified:

"Floyd came to Manistee one evening in April and asked me if I would take charge of Manistee County in the interests of the Newberry campaign. I told him I would. A few weeks later I received a check for $200 from Floyd. * * * I arranged for a luncheon of 20 at my hotel. Mr. King was the only speaker. Mr. Floyd, who accompanied King, gave me $100 that day. I paid the hotel $30 for the luncheon; that is, to myself. He also asked me to give $100 to Richard Hoffman, county road commissioner, for work in the interests of Newberry. I think Hoffman was at the luncheon. I gave him $50 that day and later I gave him $50 more. Afterwards I received another $300 from Floyd during the primary campaign. * * * My recollection is that I gave either $95 or $105 to John Myers, who acted as secretary. * * * I was canvassing the county to see people in the interests of Newberry. At the close of the primary campaign or the general election I had a talk with Floyd over the telephone. I says, 'You know how much money you gave me, and I think I have spent it all; can't you make a report?' He asked me to make it. He said to put in about $120. As near as I recollect, I did make a report of $120, instead of $600; but I do not remember what items I listed in it. * * * With regard to Mr. Hoffman, we agreed that we thought that, being county road commissioner, he could do a lot of good work for Newberry's campaign on account of being around the county so much." (B. E., 229, 230, 231.)

JAMES FISHER.

James Fisher, a banker of Laurium, Houghton County, Mich., testified that Mr. King engaged him to take charge of the Newberry campaign. Mr. James McGregor, another representative, came to see him and gave him $250 and $100 for Mr. Jones, of Ontonagon County, and $100 for Mr. Crevessa, of Keweenaw County. He afterwards gave him $500.

Among other things, this witness says that he gave $80 to a Finnish paper, $40 to a Polish paper; he paid a couple of Frenchmen for work; also to several men in and about Laurium amounts from $10 to $50.

Mr. Fisher further testified that after being subpoenaed he went to Detroit to see Paul King and Mr. McGregor.

"He stated the reason he went to see those gentlemen was to find out the line of testimony which would be required before the grand jury, and Mr. McGregor told him that he (McGregor) had made his returns for him at $250 and also returned the $200 he gave him for Crevassa and Jones. That when he was before the grand jury to say nothing about any moneys, with the exception of the $250, or said that in substance. Mr. Fisher also stated that he received $500 from Mr. McGregor as a gratuity. He stated that he kept no accounts of the moneys expended and made no returns. (Testimony of Mr. Fisher was given before the grand jury on the trial, and a grand juror repeated his testimony to the petit jury, and this testimony was stipulated, like that of a number of others, into this record as being the testimony which the witness would give if subpoenaed to Washington and sworn before the committee.)

"Q. Did he tell about having received this $500 from McGregor as a gratuity at the same time that he told about receiving the $250?—A. He did not in the forenoon, and he did not make any statement relative to receiving the $500 until after he had admitted that he went to Detroit for the purpose of seeing Paul King and Mr. McGregor." (R., 507.)

FRANK O. GILBERT.

Frank O. Gilbert stated that he was employed as a grand lecturer of the Masonic lodge. He testified that he was asked by Mr. James McGregor if he would do what he could to help on the Newberry campaign in talking to men that he saw in his trips through the State, and he said that he would, and he was so employed by Mr. McGregor at that time at $50 a month. That he was paid this money in Bay City for four months by Mr. McGregor in two different payments. He stated that he merely had talked with men whom he met in hotels and on the trains and in towns that he was in favor of Newberry and he said that he also received a letter of commendation from Mr. Newberry just before the primaries. (R., 457, 458.)

Mr. Gilbert was also sworn before the Senate committee and confirmed the foregoing, and then testified:

"Q. This employment did not interfere with your regular salary or compensation?—A. No, sir.

"Q. And the only service you performed was in boosting, as it were, Mr. Newberry in the campaign?—A. That is all.

"Q. And you simply talked with people as you met them, and you received $50 a month?—A. Yes, sir." (R., 458, 459.)

JOHN M. HARRIS.

John M. Harris, for many years probate judge of Charlevoix County, testified before the grand jury. His testimony was repeated before the petit jury. In that he said:

"Met Paul King at senatorial headquarters in Detroit, and he asked me to interest myself in the Newberry work, wishing me to organize the county committees in the immediate neighborhood in which I live, and I said I would. He offered me for that work $200 a month and my expenses, and the first thing I did was to organize the county work in my own county.

He mentions a number of men whom he engaged to act, and said:

"He did not pay these men any money, but suggested their working and to have them go to Paul King and make the arrangements with him personally. He received $800 in salary and about $400 expenses money." (R., 432.)

Judge Harris was also sworn before the committee in Washington. Among other things he said:

"Q. Did you testify before the grand jury as follows: 'Judge Harris said Mr. King told him that the financial situation during this campaign was considerably different than during the Townsend campaign, and that they had plenty of money to carry on the campaign'?—A. I said something like that.

"Q. And that was true, was it not; he did tell you that?—A. I think so." (R., 431.)

"Q. Did you not have some request to send in a statement of your expenditures?—A. I think I did.

"Q. What did your report cover?—A. It covered the expenses in Charlevoix County.

"Q. Something like $75 or $80?—A. Something like that.

"Q. Your report did not cover the other $1,100, did it?—A. No, sir.

"Q. You got $1,200 and you reported about how much?—A. I think it was between $70 and $80.

"Q. What was the other $1,100?—A. I acted on a salary. I went around and I wrote letters covering the northern part of Michigan." (R., 427.)

"Q. Well, you kept most of it as your salary of so many hundred dollars a month?—A. Yes. That was spent in this way—I traveled around some and I came into quite an orderly correspondence throughout the campaign in my office in connection with the campaign and it was applied that way. Call it salary or whatever you want to.

"Q. That is the way it was spent?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Wait a minute, was it spent; how much of that did you keep for services?—A. Well, you might say the way I figure it, I kept $800.

"Q. For services?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And of the moneys you paid out you only returned, I think you said, $71 or $75?—A. Whatever that was; yes, sir." (R., 429.)

"Q. You went and saw Mr. King personally?—A. I did.

"Q. He fixed your salary then and your work?—A. We talked it over.

"Q. Do you remember how much it was per month or per week?—A. I remember just this, I had been assisting in political work before and never had thought of having any compensation. * * * I said to Mr. King that it would be quite impossible for me to devote my time because of my other outside activities in connection with the chairman of our war board, and I think Mr. King said, 'We will be able in this campaign to take care of expenses.' We talked it over, and as I recall I said to Mr. King 'about $200 a month.'

"Q. For your services?—A. Yes." (R., 429, 430.)

FRED KEISTER.

Mr. Fred Keister was editor of the State Journal at Lansing, Mich. In 1918 he was publisher of the Elsie Sun, also a paper at Pewamo. He saw Floyd (secretary of committee) at Grand Rapids, and—

"suggested to Mr. Floyd that he could be of use to him in the campaign where he was located. Told Floyd he was publisher of the Elsie Sun, also a paper at Pewamo. Floyd told me he would be glad to have me do some work and suggested that I take trips around the country with Mr. Fehling, prosecuting attorney, who had charge of the campaign in Clinton County, which I did. He told Floyd that he should have some sort of a jitney to run around with. Floyd replied they were not buying autos, but would give him $200 and he could do what he pleased with it. He went back home but didn't buy a car. He said he took two trips with Mr. Fehling in Fehling's auto, one day over the northern half of the county and one day over the southern half. They called on business men in each town and were doing just general electioneering work." (R., 657.)

AUGUST KELLY.

This witness was employed in the superintendent's department of the State capitol. He testified:

"I went to the Newberry senatorial headquarters of Detroit, where I talked with B. Frank Emery. He wanted me to go to Alpena County and circulate some petitions for Mr. Newberry. He told me they would pay me $25 a week and expenses for circulating petitions. I did this. I was in Alpena County about six weeks. I should judge I got altogether for circulating these petitions, including expenses, a little over $200." (B. E., 171.)

JOHN E. KERN.

This witness was in the real estate business in Midland County. He saw Mr. King in Detroit, where he was taken by Terry Corliss.

"We discussed the campaign there in Midland County and the conditions politically. * * * Finances we discussed. * * * While Mr. King and I were talking there and in the presence of King, a sealed envelope was put on the table right beside me, to take all right. I put it in my pocket. I didn't open it there. I opened the envelope on the train on my trip home and found $400 in it. This was between the 15th and 20th of August. I was probably called secretary of the Newberry organization in Midland County. * * * When I went on these trips with Mr. Corliss I introduced him to men over the county. That was my purpose in going out." (B. E., 133.)

It appeared that this gentleman, of his own motion, returned to the committee all the money except his actual expenses. This was an exceptional case.

ANGUS G. MACEACHRON.

This witness was advertising manager for Detroit Legal News.

"I was at that time and for 24 years had been a member of the United Commercial Travelers of America. * * * I talked with him [Paul King] about taking some employment with the Newberry senatorial committee. I did not talk to him about the traveling men's organization, but the traveling men in general. Our order does not allow us to talk politics in the council rooms, but we have perfect liberty to talk what we please before the meeting commences and just after. That is what I told Mr. King. I told him that I thought if I could get in touch with the traveling men throughout the State that I could do Mr. Newberry some good. * * * The arrangement was made for me to get in touch with the traveling men. That is all. I was to do the work whenever I could get in touch with them. * * * I went talking with the traveling men, not at their meetings, but in their anterooms, wherever else I could find them. My work consisted of just talking to the traveling men, nothing else. Mr. King told me at the time I was employed that I was to get $50 a week. I devoted about 10 week ends to it. I would leave on Friday as a rule and get back Sunday night or some time Sunday, and in the interim I boosted Mr. Newberry's campaign among traveling men. For that I drew in all salary and expenses, $850—about $500 salary and $350 expenses. I included cigars which I bought for myself and others as expenses." (R., 405.)

HUGH A. MADDIGAN.

This witness was chief inspector of plant 35 of the Buick Motor Co., at Flint, Mich.

"As chief inspector of this plant there were a large number of men under my supervision. I knew Fred Henry (Newberry manager of campaign in Flint). He came to my home and asked me if I had lined up to work to elect a United States Senator. I told him I had not. * * * I told him I had not considered whom I would support, and he asked me what I thought of Newberry. Well, I told him I had not studied up much on the campaign yet, or the candidates. * * * I told him I thought Ford was a pretty fair man. He told me he was going to be manager of Genesee County for Newberry, and he asked me if I would support him. I told him I would consider it; so we talked there between two and three hours. Before he left I had decided that I would line up with Newberry. He said, of course, that he did not expect that we would devote our time for nothing. He asked me what I would expect if I would swing my support to Newberry. I told him I thought it was worth $150. * * * So then he told me he would expect I would devote all my spare time from that time on until after the primaries, and I told him if I had to do that I wouldn't do it for $150—I would have to get more than it. While he said he would not let that stop it, that if I went out and devoted my time, I would get twice that amount; he didn't just use them words, but it was taken for granted that I was to get twice $150, that is the way I took it. He gave me $15 that evening. * * * He told me that there would be some petitions out and wanted to know how many signers I could get. I told him between 700 and 1,000 throughout the factories."

Witness detailed other payments to him, amounting in all to $130. (BE., 331, 332.)

ALLAN K. MOORE.

This witness was in the printing business at Grand Rapids. He saw Mr. King in Detroit at King's request.

"I told Mr. King I understood he wanted me to go into the upper peninsula and do some work up there. He said he did and gave me a list of names which we talked over, that I should call on up there, and I should see John G. Mangum, at Battle Creek, and have him suggest men to see in the different counties up there. I think Mr. King mentioned Mr. M. M. Duncan, general manager of the Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co.; Mr. Moriarity, of Crystal Falls; Capt. Richards, of Crystal Falls; Bob Douglass at Ironwood, and a banker at Munising. There was no further conversation, except he wanted me to see these men there and see how they stood for Mr. Newberry and report back. I think I was to make daily reports. * * * I worked in Marquette, calling on the people that I knew, for several days, finding out whether they favored Newberry or not. During that time I was just calling on men that I knew and advertising Mr. Newberry's candidacy by conversation and literature. * * * After this I went to Detroit, where, I think, I saw Mr. King in the Newberry headquarters. I do not recall anything special that was said at that time about my work by Mr. King, except that I had done good work up there in the northern peninsula. * * * He also told me that the reason I was taken out of the upper peninsula was because the defendant, Rogers Andrews, objected to my work there. * * * I think he told me at that time that Andrews had charge of the work in the upper peninsula. Witness was then told to report to Mr. Floyd at Grand Rapids, and he proceeded: 'As near as I can remember, but Floyd said that he had work to keep me busy all summer; thought I would like it better than chasing around in the upper peninsula. That he made arrangements through Dr. William Smith, of Muskegon, and George R. Murray, president of the Railway Men's Relief Association, whereby Mr. Murray would give me letters of introduction to different railroad men, who were members of this organization, for me to call on. * * * I got in touch with George Murray. He published a monthly magazine in connection with the association, which is mailed to all the members. Mr. Murray gave me a letter to the officers of this association in various cities. * * *'

"Mr. Floyd told me he wanted me to go to these men and get them to circulate petitions for Mr. Newberry, and he says, 'You can not expect that they are going to do this work for nothing,' and he gave me in person, I think, at that time $300 in cash to pay these men for the work they did."

Witness then describes calling on the different persons.

"I called with Mr. Jack Murray one or two days at the different street car barns and different railroad yards and met different men." Witness then describes large number of men he had called upon, giving each one of them money, $20, $40, $25, $75, and one $250, etc. (B. E., r. 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102.)

"From there I went to Manistee and saw Joseph Linder, who was secretary of the relief association. I think I paid him $20. * * * I made two trips to Flint, where I called on Mr. Myers, who has charge of the Pere Marquette freight office. I think I paid Mr. Myers $80 altogether, and I think I paid A. D. Cole, yardmaster of the Grand Trunk. I paid Roy Larrabee, a man who worked for the Interurban, $10. At Battle Creek I met a man by the name of Mellon, engineer on the Grand Trunk. The first time I went down there I paid him $140. I gave him $52 once or twice after that. I think twice. I also went to Jackson, where there was a man by the name of Lloyd, secretary of the association, to whom I think I paid $40."

He gives other names and payments.

"Each time I paid these sums I made a report to Mr. Charles Floyd, from whom in each instance except one I got the money I paid out to these railroad people. I think my work continued 20 weeks at the same salary I have heretofore mentioned ($75 per week). (R., 98.) * * * From the time I was assigned to this railroad work by Mr. Floyd up to the end of my employment I did no other line of work except that during the last week of the campaign I went back to Marquette at the request of Mr. Mangan. * * * During the time that I worked for the Newberry committee I received $1,500 salary and $1,219 expense money. The total that I received was approximately $3,500. It might have been $3,600 or $3,700. (B. E., r. 103.) I had been in the newspaper business there which had brought me in contact with a vast number of people, and Mr. King knew it. * * * My object in going there was to call on the men of more or less prominence that I knew particularly and advertise Mr. Newberry's campaign. Mr. King and I had talked over the list that I was to see. In addition to that I called on practically everyone I knew."

Witness here mentions several men of great prominence, and proceeded:

"Including mining officials, manufacturers, lawyers, and public men, or some public men, and editors of that particular locality. My object in calling upon these particular men was to get their support in forming an organization in each county for Mr. Newberry. * * * The whole object of these trips was the sounding out of the sentiment regarding Senator Newberry's candidacy and the promotion of it as far as I could through my own individual acquaintances. * * * (B. E., r. 104, 105.)

The Newberry treasurer's report showed this witness, Allan K. Moore, as receiving a salary of $866. His testimony showed 21 weeks at $75 per week, or $1,575.

GEORGE R. MURRAY.

This witness was president of the Railway Men's Relief Association and published its monthly magazine. King and Floyd called on him at his headquarters in Muskegon. After this visit he came out openly for Mr. Newberry and brought out the magazine in full support of Mr. Newberry. He went around with Allan K. Moore and made some addresses in behalf of Mr. Newberry at the meetings of the relief association.

"They asked me if there was anything I could do to help get the railway men lined up for Newberry and I assured them I would give them my support. It was kind of a hurried trip and they shook hands and bade me good-by. Before leaving they said anything I could do to help along the line they would take care of me. * * * I got no money from Floyd besides the $300. Four hundred dollars was paid to the magazine which was published; that went into the association funds. * * *

"In the month of July a display advertisement was published in the magazine, and in August a personal letter from me to the railroad men. * * * I think our bill for the one display was $150. In August we published an article about Mr. Newberry's campaign, not an advertisement, just an article which I wrote. Twenty thousand extra copies were ordered through the Grand Rapids office." (B. E., 195, 196.)

GEORGE E. ROGERS.

This witness of Grand Rapids. Charles Floyd first spoke to him about working for Newberry.

"I was in his office many times after that and I worked for three or four weeks prior to the primaries. Floyd asked me to make a trip for Newberry and he wanted me to go out and call on him and put pep in the campaign. I told him I would go for $25 a week and all expenses. * * * On the trip north I went to Muskegon, Whitehall, Montague, Hart, Shelby, Ludington, Manistee, Copemish, Charlevoix, Petoskey, Levering, Cross Village, Traverse City, Cadillac, Reed City, Big Rapids, Howard City, and Newago. * * * I was to see that they had Newberry literature and went to work." (R., 879.)

MYRON J. SHERWOOD.

Mr. Sherwood was a lawyer of Marquette, Mich.

"Paul King came to me, asked my support for Newberry, to take the management of his campaign for the upper peninsula. He said he refused to handle the upper peninsula, did not have time—his business was such he could not devote the time to it, but did agree to take care of the city of Marquette and surrounding towns, and refused to handle Marquette County."

Mr. Sherwood handled about $1,500, according to his testimony, but did not reserve anything for compensation.

"He said, 'I employed men to work at the polls on election day.' That there were five precincts in the city. He had put men in each of the four precincts, but none in the other. He said, 'I paid these men $7 per day.' He also had a man out over the city reporting the sentiment and paid him $50 per month." (R., 883, 884.)

ELMER E. SMITH.

Mr. Smith was traveling manager or general manager for the Brotherhood of American Yeoman. He testified he received between $500 and $600.

"He was asked or he was suggested by a man by the name of Mark McKee that Paul King could use him in the campaign. Later on he received a letter from Mr. King, also some blanks for expense accounts and some petitions to circulate, which he was to circulate among the various different lodges, and also the instructions after they had been circulated, they should be returned to him and he was to return them to the Detroit office. Also, as Mr. McKee told him—well, Mr. McKee was a member also of this order, and he told him that Newberry was to become a member also, and to write to the various different lodges and the most aggressive members stating that Mr. Newberry was a member of the lodge; later on he found he never was a member of the lodge at all." (R., 659, 660.)

ROBERT TETRO.

This witness was township clerk, living at Stevenson, Menominee County.

"He said that during the early part of the Newberry campaign Roger Andrews asked him to go to his office in Menominee, and he went, and Andrews asked him to use his influence and distribute circulars for Newberry. * * * He asked me to employ men to work for Newberry—said he expected to pay them. He left it to me to pay them. I employed a lot of them, but only paid seven of them, paid them $5 each. * * * Said Andrews paid him about $260 in all. * * * Said the last time I went there (to see Andrews) I asked him for $35 and he made out a check for $135. I did not notice it at first, but I kept it all." (R., 883.)

NEIL R. WALSH.

Mr. Walsh was an attorney at Owosso, Mich. He said he went to King's office in Detroit and saw some person there.

"I am not positive who it was. It was either Mr. Emery or some other gentleman. The second time I met Mr. Corliss in Owosso he told me that he thought I would be a good man. He said I looked like a wonder, and I allowed I was, and he thought I would be a good man to handle the campaign for Mr. Newberry and to do the necessary distribution of literature and work along that line. * * * I think I told them what I would want and ought to be a reasonable compensation for my work; left that with them. I am inclined to think that conversation was had with Mr. King; I am not positive about that. I do not know Mr. King. After that I received checks or drafts amounting altogether to about $525. * * * I worked my head off there night and day for about four months. * * * I told them what I expended was about $125. The other $400 was retained for my services." (B. E., pp. 486, 487.)

GLEN L. WILLIAMS.

Mr. Williams was court stenographer at Adrian, Mich. He testified that James Davis came to see him and wanted to know if he was favorable toward Newberry as a candidate for Senator.

"I told him I was and he wanted me to help in my county. I agreed and was made secretary. * * * I did go to Detroit and see King. I told King about my financial situation, and King wanted to know if I wanted to work as a paid worker. I said 'No; I would work as a volunteer worker.' He paid me $100. Davis at another time gave me $50. I received in all about $350. I wrote in when I needed money to Paul King. Report of expenses of my account showed $200, not itemized. Davis was there when I made the statement and he took it. He said to me in substance, to put in the expense statement $200, amounts actually paid out at that time but not to include other items. Received a letter from Newberry thanking me for my services, also Harvey's Weekly." (Record, p. 650.)

WILLIAM H. YEARN.

Mr. Yearnd is prosecuting attorney at Cadillac, Mich.

"On that occasion there was some talk between Mr. King and myself concerning doing some work in Wexford looking toward the nomination of Mr. Newberry as a Senator. In substance he asked me if I was favorable toward the candidacy of Mr. Newberry. I told him I was. He asked me if I was in a position to do some work for him, and I told him I was. I said something to him that it would be impossible for me to organize a committee in each voting precinct. My recollection is he said to 'use your own judgment or proceed as you see fit,' or something to that effect. * * * I received nothing that day, but afterwards I got a check for $100. * * * After that conference I went to Cadillac and caused petitions to be circulated for the nomination of Mr. Newberry and enlisted the support for Mr. Newberry of my friends and acquaintances. * * * (B. E., r. 174.) I received no other money from any other persons during the campaign other than the amounts which I have already specified, which aggregated $340. * * * Approximately $100 of the money which had been handed to me was not expended; that I retained." (B. E., r. 175, 176.)

We have thus given the names and testimony of prominent workers who were hired and paid to use their influence for, and to solicit aid, support, and votes for Newberry. They are numerous enough to demonstrate the illegality of the whole campaign, but they were only a fraction of the numbers employed. In every one of the 83 counties (except 1) prominent men were hired to work for Newberry.

They were selected because they were prominent and influential. King so stated in writing at the time to Mr. Truman Newberry. In his letter of May 30 to Mr. Newberry he states:

"Of course we could find people in these counties to take up the work, but in many cases they would be lesser lights, and we want to get the principal workers, if possible." (B. E., 743.)

The law of Michigan made this a criminal offense, and that is, in our judgment, why the records, books, and papers were destroyed, and why the new ones manufactured immediately after the primary contained no entries of these workers and payments, and why the treasurer's report was doctored so as to conceal these transactions.

In the light of the foregoing mass of evidence showing the illegal and criminal use of the moneys to hire workers, what can be thought of the statements in the majority report quoted at the head of this title?

The names of the following witnesses, whose testimony is briefly recited as above, do not appear in the reports made nor do the moneys paid to them appear in the pay roll or the account of expenditures filed: Charles Tufts, Rollo E. Prescott, Edward O. McLean, J. Scott Hunter, William M. Connelly, J. B. Burns, Fay G. Dunning, Frank P. Bohn, William E. Rice, Edward W. Fehling, Charles A. Campbell, William S. Crebassa, Mel Deo, August Field, James Fisher, Frank O. Gilbert, John M. Harris, August Kelly, John E. Kern, Hugh A. Madigan, William J. Michel, George E. Rogers, Myron J. Sherwood, Elmer E. Smith, Robert Tetro, Neil R. Walsh, Glen L. Williams, William H. Yearnd.

Does not a fair construction of the testimony hereinbefore quoted clearly show that the Newberry senatorial committee, its officers and representatives, "hired workers"?

Does it not show that they were paid to use their influence and solicit aid, support, and votes for Mr. Newberry?

Do not some of these witnesses testify positively that they hired workers for primary day and for days before?

Was not a large part of this money expended in violation of the primary statute, the intent of which, according to its very phraseology, was "to prohibit the prevailing practice of candidates hiring with money and promises of positions, etc., workers on primary day and prior thereto?"

Should not the Blair report of receipts and expenditures have contained the names of these men who received these large sums of money and the purposes for which it was paid to them?

The men who conducted this campaign were not ignorant men. They were men of affairs, and among them some of the shrewdest politicians in the State of Michigan. Some of them, including their treasurer, were business men of large affairs. They knew, they must have known, that the report did not comply with the law, and the leading executives of this committee were Newberry's chosen representatives, and how can he evade responsibility for their acts, for their violations of the law, for their failure to file a proper report?

FURTHER IMPORTANT QUOTATIONS FROM THE RECORD.

The minority hopes that each Senator will read every page of this record, to the end that he may come to a conclusion which will be just to the contestant, contestee, the Senate itself, and to the people of the sovereign State of Michigan, as well as to the entire United States. They hope that the result will satisfy the law and the oath and the conscience of each Senator.

In order to facilitate the investigation of this record, the minority of the committee feel it is not improper to quote at length from the testimony of Mr. Paul H. King, the executive chairman, and from Mr. Charles A. Floyd, the secretary of the general committee. These quotations can, of course, be supplemented by reference to the record by anyone desiring so to do. Our belief is that the quotations herein contained will be eminently fair both to the witness and to Mr. Newberry.

EXCERPTS FROM TESTIMONY OF PAUL H. KING, EXECUTIVE CHAIRMAN.

I think Commander Newberry made a general inquiry as to what would be the expenses of a State-wide campaign, and I said that in the TOWNSEND campaign that it had cost Senator TOWNSEND's friends approximately $20,000 to meet the expense of that campaign, but on account of changed conditions in Michigan and throughout the State that it would cost his friends probably considerably more than that, possibly $50,000, to conduct the kind of a campaign—the publicity campaign—that would have to be conducted if it were to be successful. * * * From that time on money or expenses were never discussed with Commander Newberry at any other time. I did not on that occasion tell either the commander or Mr. Cody while I was there at New York whether or not I would take the management. I returned to Detroit and talked the matter over further with my wife, and spoke to Mr. McKee about it, and asked if he had any objection. He said he had not. Finally, after a day or two—I do not remember how long it was—I told Mr. Templeton that I would accept the position of State executive chairman or manager of Mr. Newberry's committee of friends. (B. E., 664-665.)

I prepared a letter that was sent over Mr. Hopkins's signature to the various advertisers in the State requesting them to send in their bills. It was a circular letter, and was followed up by telegrams. In some cases those telegrams were followed up by telephones. I can not say who did the telephoning; it was done in the publicity offices by my direction. I told Mr. Hopkins to be sure to have in every newspaper bill, every bill in connection with the publicity department, before the time for the filing of the report. I do not recall whether or not prior to the time Mr. Blair signed it and it was filed I had a conference or a talk with Mr. Blair about the report. I told Mr. Blair, it seems to me, at the time that he came over to sign the report that we had made every effort to get every bill, and so far as I knew all of the bills were in, and that I had been so advised by Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Emery. It was after I told that to Mr. Blair that he signed the report. So far as I knew, Mr. Blair had nothing to do with the preparation and making up of that report; I did. I first got in on the preparation of the report about 10 o'clock on the morning of September 6. Mr. Emery had been working on it before that, and the various members of the office force had been working on it. Mr. Emery was at his home on the morning of September 6, as I remember. Various members of the office staff—I think, the most of them—assisted me on that day in the preparation and finishing up of this report. The report, or the documents in connection with it to make up the report, were in a very chaotic condition. Mr. Emery had been working for several days to get the report ready and had repeatedly assured me that it would be ready, and, in fact, as I was advised by one of the respondents when I got to the office that morning, he had worked all night the night of the 5th on the report, and had fainted away from exhaustion at 4 o'clock, and had been taken home in a taxicab. The Blair report was, in my judgment, as nearly correct as could be made from the information we had. (B. E., 671.)

I called their attention to the provisions of the Michigan primary election law and the restrictions therein contained and enjoined upon them a strict observance in every way of the law. I had a copy of the law in my office at all times. I had made a study of the law upon a previous occasion. I was very familiar with the law. I was not at any time prompted or actuated by any evil intent in anything I did. I engaged the respondent, John M. Harris. I had known Judge Harris a number of years. I think I had my conference with him that resulted in his becoming connected with this campaign at headquarters. My conference with him and my talk and instructions were substantially as I have just told you. I do not recall that in that talk Judge Harris inquired where the funds were coming from with which to finance this campaign, but I do know that I always stated to the field men that they might state to anyone who became responsible for the campaign in any county that the legitimate expenses in the campaign would be paid by the committee, and that funds would be provided by the friends of Commander Newberry for the purpose. (B. E., 681, 682.)

I don't want to have anybody associated with me in this matter begin any attack on Henry Ford of any kind. His Republicanism is not my fight, but is something that the Republican State committee and the national committee and the Senate campaign committee are vitally interested in, and if the matter develops further I hope you will see that this particular feature of the senatorial primary campaign is entirely omitted from the work you are doing, and I think the letters written from your office should carefully avoid any reference to this matter. (B. E., 715, 716.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. King, we were calling your attention to Mr. Newberry's activities in his own campaign when you last were testifying. You reported to him your employment of Mr. Floyd, did you not?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. As secretary?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he approved of it?

Mr. KING. I believe he did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you tell him the compensation you were paying Mr. Floyd?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or that you were not paying him anything, or anything about it?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you report to him that you were sending field men over the State?

Mr. KING. I think I did. I think the record shows it.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He knew, did he not, that you had what you called your field force?

Mr. KING. I think you have the letter right before you. (B., 514.)

Mr. KING. As I recall, they were Mr. James R. Davis, James F. McGregor, Terry T. Corliss, R. E. Prescott, Ben F. Reed, and Charles Tufts for a short time. That is all I now recall. Mr. William Calhoun, who was the publicity man, did some little field work. I think he went over to Kalamazoo County and other counties.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Was Judge Harris a field man?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; he was one I overlooked. I overlooked his name. He had the northwestern section—the Grand Traverse section. Capt. Tufts was more in the classification of Mr. Glocheski. I assigned the sections of the State to these field men, certain counties for them to visit periodically, which they did. Then I assigned other men whom I did not consider field men in the same sections, men like Mr. Glocheski, to work with certain nationalities of people or certain classes of people. Mr. Glocheski did work among the Polish people of the State. He visited the Polish settlement around the State, especially in Presque Isle County and Manistee County, and there are a good many Polish citizens in Kent County. Capt. Tufts visited the fishing communities, the fishermen and the shore counties, primarily.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Were they all under pay?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you have a man or men to work with the fraternal societies?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Under pay?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What was his name, please?

Mr. KING. I can not recall it. Does the record show it?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was Elmer Smith one of them?

Mr. KING. Elmer Smith did some work; yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What did you call him?

Mr. KING. He did not have any title.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Just a worker?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What was his field?

Mr. KING. What was his field?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Yes.

Mr. KING. He was connected with a fraternity known as the American Yeoman, I think it was. I think Mr. Gilbert, the grand lecturer, did a little work. He testified yesterday. He was grand lecturer of the Masonic order. Those were the only two.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did Mr. Newberry know you had these field men at work?

Mr. KING. I think so.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you had some of those as assistant secretaries?

Mr. KING. Oh, these field men were the assistant secretaries. That was their title. (B., 516.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Were there not only four assistant secretaries on the pay roll—Davis, Corliss, McGregor, and Moore?

Mr. KING. I had forgotten Mr. Moore. He was not a field secretary in the same sense as the others that I mentioned. He did work among the railroad men. There was another group or classification that I tried to organize independently of county lines or the State, more as a group than residents of any particular county.

Senator WILCOTT. Did Commander Newberry know these men were being paid?

Mr. KING. Not so far as I know.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you tell him they were volunteer workers, without pay?

Mr. KING. I don't think I said anything to him about it one way or the other.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you purposely refrain from talking money to him?

Mr. KING. No, sir; there was no occasion to talk money to him.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You reported to Mr. Newberry and received communications from him and conferred with him from time to time about methods and means of preventing other candidates from entering the field, did you not?

Mr. KING. Well, I wouldn't say to prevent any other candidate from entering, Mr. Lucking.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Where they started in, to head them off, if possible. Are you going to compel me to call the names of each of these gentlemen you conferred about?

Mr. KING. I will not compel you to do anything.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Isn't that a fair statement, that you did that directly in conference with Mr. Newberry?

Mr. KING. The record shows, Mr. Lucking—

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING (interposing). I don't care what the record shows. Can't you answer that question?

Mr. KING. In the correspondence I discussed with Senator Newberry the possibility of other candidates entering the field. As to preventing their entering, there was no way to prevent them from entering the field.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I call your attention to Mr. Newberry's letter to you of March 8, on page 688 of the bill of exceptions, winding up as follows:

"I have not wired you because I can make no suggestion and only hope that you can locate the man, or men, upon whom Mr. Warren relies for advice as to any favorable outcome as to his candidacy, for it is with those men that you must confer and hope to persuade to our point of view." (B., 517.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you not hear his affidavit read, that he took no part whatever in the campaign and knew of no money being expended?

Senator WATSON. He was in New York at the time, and he has not denied the authenticity of that correspondence. The correspondence is admitted. There is no question about that. The only denial is of the financial knowledge of Mr. Newberry of what was going on. Of course, Newberry understood the situation. Now, you are going on to prove that Mr. Paul King was active in trying to keep down opposition to Newberry, and Newberry had knowledge of that fact. It is entirely a legitimate proposition. He had a right to do it. We have all done it. We have not always succeeded as well as Paul did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Lengthening the chain; I propose to prove there was not a single part of this he was not active in. I don't know whether your honor has read this affidavit or not:

"The campaign for my nomination for United States Senator has been voluntarily conducted by friends in Michigan. I have taken no part in it whatever."

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Was not that the financial statement? Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. "And no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent."

I am going to show the knowledge on his part of all these activities, which must have cost money, which he must have known cost money.

Senator WATSON. Can you show any letters of that kind that he ever wrote to anybody in that campaign? (R., 518.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Now, further about the activities of Mr. Newberry, under the head of "Private," on page 697, he says:

"This morning a high official of the Cleveland Cliffs Co. called me on the telephone from Cleveland and requested that I not use his name, so I must ask you not even to guess at it, but to know that I have every confidence in the gentleman and that his advice is worthy of our careful and immediate consideration."

I will not read all of the letter, but will ask you if it is not a fact that from that time on Mr. Newberry took charge, without letting you know, of certain activities in the northern peninsula? Is that not so?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Perhaps your memory may be refreshed on that as we go along.

He states as the conclusion of that letter:

"I am writing Mr. McNaughton and Mr. Duncan as he suggests, but before saying anything to Mr. Roger Andrews I would like to have the advice of Mr. Templeton and yourself as to whether you and Mr. Templeton should handle this matter or leave it to my amateur effort."

That was with the idea of having Mr. Roger Andrews keep his hands off the mining companies and their men?

Mr. KING. Evidently.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And allow the mining companies to handle it themselves?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What did you finally decide, in conjunction with Mr. Newberry, as to who should take it up with Andrews and head him off about that matter?

Mr. KING. I think I said I would speak to Mr. Andrews about it.

Mr. MURFIN. I can shorten all this. I will concede he was not locked up in New York.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You say in your reply to him, on page 699:

"I will be glad to handle it with him if you desire. I will, of course, not write the gentleman named until after I hear from you."

He was the final man to decide, was he not?

Mr. KING. I wanted to talk with Mr. Andrews myself, and did subsequently discuss it with him.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. But you did not do it without getting your orders to do it?

Mr. KING. I did not consider it an order.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Well, his permission.

Mr. KING. You can term it what you please, Mr. Lucking. That is your own privilege.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. In this same letter from you to Senator Newberry of April 1 you say:

"I hesitate to make any suggestion as to the amount of the contribution to the church in Augusta."

Mr. KING. Yes, sir. (R., 524-525.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. John S. Newberry never asked whether you spent a dollar or a thousand dollars, or $50,000, or anything, did he?

Mr. KING. I think not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did Victor Barnes?

Mr. MURFIN. No; and neither did the rest of them. We will concede it all.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Truman Newberry did.

Mr. MURFIN. You can argue that when the time comes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Barnes didn't make any question about expenditures to you?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or to the committee, so far as you know?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He showed no interest at all in how his money was being disposed of?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did Henry Joy at any time?

Mr. MURFIN. I will concede that none of them did. Why take up the time with that?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I know it is an unpleasant topic.

Mr. MURFIN. There is nothing unpleasant about it.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Proceed with the witness. (R., 526.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Now, I call your attention to Mr. Newberry's letter of April 4, page 701, and want to ask you a question or two about it:

"The question of Mr. Warner's candidacy, or of anyone else besides Osborn, is, of course, of the highest importance, but I can not avoid the thought that the main idea in the minds of many influential people and papers like the Free Press and the News is anything to beat Osborn, and when you have impressed these papers and the public with the certain knowledge that I will continue in the race to a finish, they will then have to decide whether they can beat Mr. Osborn better by urging another candidate to enter besides myself or whether their best opportunity to beat Osborn would be to concentrate and cooperate with all the most satisfactory publicity that you have already given to me."

Now, I would like to ask you whether you took any steps to follow that suggestion?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I did not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you impress these papers and others with the thought that he would continue to a finish?

Mr. KING. I did that at all times from the start. I was always doing that.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING (reading):

"In regard to the Upper Peninsula. I am hoping that you will frankly discuss the matter with Roger Andrews, and in order to make it easier for him to understand it, you might state that you yourself were going to leave the mining people to handle their own situation without advice or suggestion from anyone outside, because of the reasons stated in my last letter. This I know would be what Mr. McNaughton and Mr. Duncan desire to do."

Did you follow that idea in your interview with Mr. Andrews? (R., 527.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you make detailed reports to Mr. Newberry to each county, in addition to letters?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. About what was being done to further his candidacy?

Mr. KING. As I stated yesterday, and as the records show, I told him about the people I met in every county and how they felt about his candidacy.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you send him maps?

Mr. KING. I think I did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He states on page 704: "I am glad to have the maps and detailed reports from each county."

Mr. KING. We had outlined maps of Michigan, and I colored in different colors the counties to show, in my judgment, how they stood. I have forgotten the system that was used, but one color was for him, and one color was against him, and one color was noncommittal. That was to give him a sort of an outline or bird's-eye view of the situation as I saw it. (R., 528.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He says:

"I am glad to have the maps and the detailed reports from each county, which I shall be able to consult frequently as matters in various localities are referred to in your correspondence."

Did you, from your subsequent interviews with him, learn that he was consulting you: detailed reports and maps to each locality?

Mr. KING. He did not consult them as much as I hoped he would. He didn't have time.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. In some of these letters he says, "I am devouring every letter you write."

Mr. KING. Yes; but I sent him a long detailed report by counties alphabetically arranged that I hoped he would devour also, and I don't think he ever did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He approved of your employing Mr. Jim McGregor, did he not?

Mr. KING. I presume he did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The same letter says:

"I am particularly glad that you have found an opportunity to use Jim McGregor, which I know will please Mr. Warren, his friend."

Mr. McGregor was on salary?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He says he was glad you could use him. Did you tell him when you were talking to him how much McGregor's salary was?

Mr. KING. I did not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How much was it?

Mr. KING. I think it was $75 a week. (R., 529.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That was Mr. Milton Oakman?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He was in charge in Wayne County?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And did he have these personal interviews with Oakman in New York?

Mr. KING. Not to my knowledge. I learned that at Grand Rapids.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I call your attention to a sentence at the bottom of the same page:

"I am glad Mr. Warner is scared out for the present."

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Whose letter is that?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Truman H. Newberry's. He says in that letter:

"I am glad Mr. Warner is scared out for the present, and as long as we keep up our publicity work at full pressure it will be harder and harder for any new man to get any kind of a start that will make it seem worth while for him to be a serious candidate."

He knew of your publicity?

Mr. KING. Of course he did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he said, "As long as we keep up our publicity work at full pressure."

Mr. MURFIN. All that is argumentative, not cross-examination.

Senator WATSON. He knew that was costing money?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He knew that was costing money?

Mr. KING. Any sane man would know publicity costs money.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Certainly; any sane man would know publicity costs money.

Mr. KING. You would know it, and I would.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Yes; but not a cent was expended with his knowledge.

Mr. MURFIN. That is purely argumentative.

Mr. KING. In my judgment, that statement is true.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. On page 706 you say:

"We have our meeting of the field men to-day, and I will send you a report to-morrow."

Your field men had to come from different parts of the State to any meeting?

Mr. KING. They certainly did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he knew that? He knew who the field men were, did he not?

Mr. KING. I think he probably did. I must have told him who they were.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was a man named O. C. Davidson very active in the northern peninsula?

Mr. KING. He is a very prominent man in the upper peninsula.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He was active in the campaign for somebody for Senator?

Mr. KING. He was a friend, as I remember, of ex-Gov. Osborn. I don't know how active he was.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You learned from Senator Newberry that he was active, did you not? (R., 530.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I will tell you what this bears on. This is in the handwriting of Mr. Newberry:

"The campaign for my nomination for the United States Senate has been voluntarily conducted by friends in Michigan. I have taken no part in it whatever and no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent."

Senator EDGE. With his knowledge or consent. I do not know what the legal interpretation of that would be, but I would consider a man did not have any knowledge or did not consent unless he was in close touch with the direct spending of the money, would you not?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. If he was active in conducting that campaign, and it cost money, that would be within his knowledge, according to the understanding of common men. I don't know what some lawyer might say about it, but I should say that. It is to meet that idea that I was directing these questions of how far he was acting in that campaign.

Senator EDGE. A man 1,500 miles away could not direct the management of a campaign.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I am showing that he did.

Senator EDGE. Proceed. I just wanted to find out what you were leading up to.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I am showing he was in most intimate touch with the campaign.

Mr. MURFIN. I will concede he kept in intimate touch with the campaign.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And directed it.

Mr. MURFIN. I don't concede that.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That is what I am showing.

Mr. MURFIN. That he counseled and advised, yes; we concede that. But if you think he directed it instead of Paul King, you will be a long time proving it.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He didn't make any speeches; didn't go around over the State; but he knew what was going on.

Mr. MURFIN. He didn't appoint field agents. (R., 532.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you the letter of the 11th day of May, which is referred to in your letter of May 18, on page 738, where you say:

"Your letter of the 11th was particularly interesting, because it takes up some matters that I have written you about and clears up several matters on which I did not know that you were fully informed. I refer particularly to Mr. Barbour, Mr. Dwyer, and George Miller."

At the beginning of the same letter from which I have read, on page 737, you speak of two letters of the 11th.

Mr. KING. No; I haven't these letters.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I mean a copy of it.

Mr. KING. I think not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Barbour and Mr. Dwyer were influential citizens in Detroit?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And large employers of labor? Mr. Miller was chief editor of the Detroit News?

Mr. KING. The Detroit News.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. On page 739 you say in your letter:

"Yesterday afternoon I spent with Richard H. Fletcher, State labor commissioner, who is certainly doing yeoman service. He is simply going 'sleed length' and is doing some mighty good work. You might write him a personal letter, if you will. His address is Lansing."

Did Mr. Fletcher continue active through the primary campaign?

Mr. KING. I think he did. (R., 533.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. King, a few more questions regarding some of the correspondence. You, in addition to your daily letters or frequent letters reporting what you did, had a regular book of field reports, had you not?

Mr. KING. I started to keep such a book; yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you sent a copy of it to Mr. Newberry?

Mr. KING. I made up one set of field reports and took them or sent them down to Commander Newberry.

Senator POMERENE. Will you explain briefly what you mean by your field reports?

Mr. KING. Just a list of accounting alphabetically. It is such a report as is contained in the record.

Senator POMERENE. Do you mean as to finances?

Mr. KING. No; as to the state of the campaign in the various counties. You will find such a report beginning on page 746, Senator.

Mr. MURFIN. Just read one county.

Mr. KING. Alcona is the first county. [Reading:]

"Hon. George W. Burt, Harrisville, chairman, and R. E. Prescott, Lincoln, secretary. This county is completely organized, having chairman and vice chairman in each township and incorporated village. They are arranging for a complete follow-up campaign. The outlook here is promising. We have received a list of voters from the county clerk and are ready to go ahead with our mailing program. There is no question but what this county will go for Mr. Newberry—barring Mr. Ford's entry."

Of course that was early. The idea was to have a duplicate set of reports, one copy in New York and one in Detroit, but that was never kept up. (R., 606.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Well, I was calling your attention to the fact that in addition to your daily letters reporting what you did from day to day, or your frequent letters, you had a regular book of reports in each county.

Mr. KING. We started that system, if you might call it that, but it was never kept up.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Well, it was started and you sent a copy to Mr. Newberry, and he acknowledged it, did he not?

Mr. KING. I presume he did. I do not now recall. (R., 607.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I call your attention to his letter on page 741, just a sentence out of it:

"If in your opinion I should by the use of these letters now declare myself to be a candidate under the primary law, would it not terminate our present plan of publicity?"

Mr. KING. Won't you read the preceding paragraph, Mr. Lucking, please, or allow me to read it?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You read it.

Mr. KING (reading):

"When you finally settle on the forms please send me an index descriptive of the people to whom various letters are intended to be sent, together with clean copies of the forms you finally decide to use."

You will note that the decision rests with me.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And will you please read now the prior sentence?

Mr. KING (reading):

"I return herewith the draft letters with a few notations. Please be assured that these were made with no intent to criticize, and only as a suggestion."

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Then he went over them and made notations? Mr. KING. I had forgotten that he did, but I do not recall that they were at all substantial.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING (reading):

"Would it not terminate our present plan of publicity?"

Mr. KING. What is the question?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The question is whether that was his plan of publicity as well as yours?

Mr. KING. No; it was my plan.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You mean that you suggested it but he joined in it?

Mr. KING. No; I worked it out.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did he join in it—

Mr. KING. I talked it over with him.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did he approve it?

Mr. KING. As far as I know; yes. I do not recall any dissent. (R., 609.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. In a letter to you by Mr. Newberry on July 4, appearing at page 818 of the printed bill, the Senator says:

"The farmers and men interested in public affairs whom you have seen will, of course, be active throughout the State, but if we are to be successful the organization in Detroit must interest the industrial element to vote on our side. Of course it would be useless if the vote were to be seriously split, or possibly you have decided that it would be best not to take any further steps at the present time."

When he spoke of the organization in Detroit he meant your organization, did he not? You so understood it, anyway?

Mr. KING. I think so; either that or the Wayne County organization. You will notice also it leaves the decision to me—or possibly you have decided that it would be best." (R., 613.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Now, referring to Mr. Oakman, I invite your attention to a letter from Senator Newberry to you on July 9, page 826, in which he says:

"Your information about the Wayne County situation does not surprise me at all, and I am quite prepared for any kind of a shift that Mr. Oakman may find that his personal political future requires. Your idea of having a separate organization in Wayne County, possibly in cooperation with Pliny W. Marsh, or the Detroit Citizens' League is, I think, a very necessary precaution, as a change in Mr. Oakman's mind under the present conditions would leave us without the slightest organization in the very place where we must secure a large favorable vote in order to insure success."

Did you make another organization following that letter? (R., 614.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Now, on page 834, Mr. Newberry writes to you:

"In regard to Dr. Dickie, am sorry you did not let me know before using his letter, as I have considerable more information on the subject of Dr. Dickie's activities than you have, and I would not have had his letter used under any circumstances. I do not desire his friendship or his support."

That is signed by Mr. Newberry. (R., 616.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Toward the end of that letter, on page 854, he says:

"I have arranged with them also to provide for representation at each voting precinct the entire day of the primaries so that through this whole district you can be sure that there will be at least one man and in some cases two or three giving their entire time in saying the final word."

Did you learn from Mr. Floyd whether those men were paid or not?

Mr. KING. I did not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Do you know whether they were paid or not?

Mr. KING. I have no knowledge on the subject. (R., 617.)

Senator POMERENE. Mr. King, it appears—and if I do not correctly state your attitude you may take any exception to it or make any explanation that you deem proper—it appears thus far in the testimony before this committee that you had a number of conferences with Mr. Newberry with regard to his candidacy and his campaign; that in one of these conversations you talked with him about the amount it would cost, and thereupon, in substance, you said to him that it cost the friends of Senator Townsend $20,000, but that you thought his campaign would cost $50,000 or thereabouts.

After that you had a number of conversations with him and you wrote to him giving him reports of what was being done. You have referred here to a so-called field report which you made, and you have read at my request one of these reports from one of the counties. I take it that those field reports gave him a general bird's-eye view of every part of this campaign except the financing. Will you explain why it was that you explained all of these other matters and did not explain to him the financing?

Mr. KING. Why, it is very easy of explanation. The funds were being provided at Detroit. The campaign was being financed. Questions of policy, as I have stated, were discussed, as to what was a good thing to do and what was not a good thing to do. I have no recollection of ever discussing with Senator Newberry the financing of his campaign or any part of it.

Senator POMERENE. Let us see. Does that satisfactorily explain it to your mind? You have referred to the general policy, and I think he had his campaign in very able hands.

Mr. KING. Thank you. (R., 633.)

Senator POMERENE. Why should you say now that the financing was taken care of in Michigan by his friends and give that as a reason for not counseling him on that subject, when the general policy of his campaign was being taken care of by his friends?

Mr. KING. The general policy was being taken care of by his friends; that is true.

Senator POMERENE. And I dare say, from what I have observed, that the general plan of his campaign and what was done outside of the finances by you was as well done as was the financing by his other friends. What was the reason why you should talk with him and confer with him and report to him about everything except the financing?

Mr. KING. Because, as I say, the money was forthcoming from Detroit. There was never any question about it. There was simply a question, Senator, when anything came up to be done—the question in my mind was whether it was a good thing to do, and if it was a good thing to do, I did it. The question of expenses did not come into my mind at all. It was a question of whether it was a good thing to do or not, whether it would help the campaign along or not. If it were a good thing to do, I did it regardless of the expense. If it were not a good thing, I did not do it.

Senator POMERENE. You knew where most of this money was coming from, did you not?

Mr. KING. I knew that Mr. John S. Newberry was supplying a considerable part of it, because I saw the checks.

Senator POMERENE. In view of your State statute and the Federal statute, did you regard it as a pretty important thing to look after the finances of this campaign as well as after the other features of it?

Mr. KING. I did. I thought we were.

Senator POMERENE. Yes. Was it because you had in mind the State statute or the Federal statute, or both statutes, limiting the amount of money that could be expended, that you did not want Senator Newberry to have knowledge of it?

Mr. KING. No; I would not say that.

Senator POMERENE. Is not that the reason?

Mr. KING. I do not think it was, Senator.

Senator POMERENE. As he had to file an account, can you explain why he was not concerned about this financing?

Mr. KING. To tell the honest truth, the matter of the account that he had to file never came into my mind at all until the blanks came to our office from the office of the Secretary of the Senate, I think it was; and I think I mailed them down to him. That was the first time that the matter of his accounting ever occurred to me at all.

Senator POMERENE. You had an attorney, one of your own office men, who was advising with you in regard to the law?

Mr. KING. As to details of the law; yes. I do not think he advised as to the financial features of it.

Senator POMERENE. Now, let me go to another matter.

Senator EDGE. May I ask just one question right there, Senator?

Senator POMERENE. Yes.

Senator EDGE. Was it not discussed rather generally in the press?

Mr. KING. When the attacks were made by these three papers I have mentioned—that was in August some time just before the (R., 634) primary, which was on the 27th—that was the only time that the question of expenditures had risen at all. Mr. De Foe raised the question, and Mr. Vandenberg.

Senator POMERENE. You did discuss with him the amount of advertising and the necessity for their general scheme or plan along that line?

Mr. KING. I think I told him about my plan for publicity; yes.

Senator POMERENE. And your general scheme of sending out field agents and organizing each county?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And you made these reports?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Let me go to another matter.

Your primary day was August 27?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And your report was filed on what date?

Mr. KING. September 7, I think, or 6—within 10 days after the primary. It had to be.

Senator POMERENE. Did you give instructions to destroy or burn the letters and other files that you had in the office?

Mr. KING. As I stated the other day, the form-letter correspondence, I told the office staff that they could throw out.

Senator POMERENE. When did you do that?

Mr. KING. That was just before the State central committee moved in. It must have been—I left on my vacation trip on the night of the 7th of September, 1918. It must have been the first week in September that we were closing up.

Senator POMERENE. Before or after your report was filed?

Mr. KING. The report was filed the night of the 7th. I left on the midnight train that night on my trip.

Senator POMERENE. Did you give any other instructions with regard to the books of account or your contracts—advertising or other contracts?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Did you know of their being destroyed? Did you know they were to be destroyed?

Mr. KING. I did not.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know they have been destroyed?

Mr. KING. It has been so testified.

Senator POMERENE. When did you first learn that some question was being raised about the character of the campaign that was being conducted in behalf of Mr. Newberry?

Mr. KING. I can not recall just the date when those three papers opened up on us.

Senator POMERENE. Name those three papers.

Mr. KING. The Charlotte Republican, the Escanaba Journal, and the Grand Rapids Herald. But I regarded those attacks as being purely political and inspired for political purposes. Senator Smith's paper, the Grand Rapids Herald, I thought was attacking us because of Mr. Vandenberg's possible aspirations for Senator; and the fact that Senator Smith had contemplated reentering the race at the last moment and had found that Senator Newberry had, through their own investigations—they sent out inquiries to the county clerks and judges of probate and members of the legislature, and the replies (R., 635) which they printed in their own columns showed that the sentiment was so overwhelmingly for Commander Newberry that Senator Smith decided not to allow his petition to be filed, right at the last minute, I think, right up to midnight of the final day.

Senator EDGE. What was the final day for filing petitions?

Mr. KING. Thirty days, I think, before the primary.

Mr. MURFIN. July 26.

Mr. KING. Up to 4 o'clock on that day; that was the final hour. They were in the possession of the secretary of state, and they were withdrawn by him when he discovered, through the investigation of his own paper, that sentiment was so overwhelmingly for Commander Newberry; and I thought it was his personal pique, perhaps, incident to the situation, that induced those attacks by the Grand Rapids Herald.

Senator POMERENE. You knew, prior to August 27, the day of the primary, that there were serious charges being made about the character of the Newberry campaign?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And those were made in part by Democrats and in part by Republicans?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. No Democrats, I think, your honor, that I remember.

Senator POMERENE. Just let me go on.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Pardon me.

Senator POMERENE. You remember that there was a letter written by your lieutenant governor on August 22, 1918?

Mr. KING. I remember the letter very well; yes.

Senator POMERENE. In which he made certain serious charges?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And you remember the character of them. I do not care to go into it, because I distinguish between evidence and charges. Also about that time—

Mr. KING. He was not even produced at the Grand Rapids trial by the Government.

Senator POMERENE. That is all right. That was printed immediately, was it not, after it was written?

Mr. KING. Yes; I think he put it in the paper before he mailed the letter to Commander Newberry.

Senator POMERENE. In any event, it was printed four or five days before the primary?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And then, also, Representative Wiley wrote a pretty scorching letter bearing on this same subject, on August 22, 1918?

Mr. KING. As representing Gov. Osborn, who was also a candidate; yes.

Senator POMERENE. That may all be, but he did make serious charges, did he not?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Without going into the details, they took up the question of the extravagance of the campaign as to money?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir. (R., 636.)

Senator POMERENE. This being so, did not the fact that these serious charges were made by representative men in the Republican Party admonish you that some question might be raised afterwards with regard to Senator Newberry's title to his seat if he were elected? Did not that occur to you?

Mr. KING. It looked to me just like a hot political fight, Senator. The subsequent developments that ensued, I am frank to say, never entered my mind at all.

Senator POMERENE. You are evidently right that it was a hot political fight.

Mr. KING. Yes; and the press will also show that I answered these attacks by stating the reasons why it was necessary to conduct the publicity campaign that we had conducted. Mr. Ford was the best advertised man in Michigan or in the country; that he was backed by the Democratic organization from the White House down, the Democratic national committee, the Democratic State central committee; he was backed by his own forces, which were in large numbers scattered throughout the State, and by his sales agencies. He was backed by the people who furnished supplies and materials, wealthy manufacturers who furnished these supplies and materials to his plants. I thought it was necessary to conduct a campaign of this kind of publicity and to organize to meet just exactly that kind of opposition, and I had no apologies to offer for it.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. You mean, backed for what?

Mr. KING. Backing Henry Ford for United States Senator.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Was this in the primary?

Mr. KING. In the primary.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. They were back of him as a Republican candidate in a Republican primary?

Mr. KING. Absolutely. The plan was to put him on both tickets, and the suggestion came from the White House that he was Mr. Wilson's candidate.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know that?

Mr. KING. Mr. Ford himself stated that he ran at the suggestion of the President; that he was drafted.

Senator POMERENE. Let me see if I understand you. From what you have said thus far do I understand that you were giving your reasons for the campaign you were conducting, or do I understand that you were making answer to these charges and are giving the substance of your answers?

Mr. KING. That is what I am trying to do.

Senator POMERENE. Then let me go a step further.

Of course, it is to be presumed that in your office you did have an account of receipts and disbursements.

Mr. KING. There was such an account, I suppose.

Senator POMERENE. You have no doubt about it, have you?

Mr. KING. No. In the beginning of the campaign—

Senator POMERENE. Do you know where that account is?

Mr. KING. I do not, Senator.

Senator POMERENE. Have you made any inquiry about it?

Mr. KING. No; I do not know that I have.

Senator POMERENE. As you were, unfortunately, one of the defendants in this case, after your indictment, when you had become involved in what was a serious charge, did it not occur to you that it would be necessary to have all this evidence? (R., 637.)

Mr. KING. Why, I had not thought of it in that way; no.

Senator POMERENE. Does it not occur to you that that is a reasonable conclusion to which any man might come?

Mr. KING. I regarded the whole trial and everything as part and parcel of the political fight.

Senator POMERENE. But be that as it may, it was tried, nevertheless. Whether rightly or wrongly, it got into the courts; and would you not be interested, then, in making your defense so you could produce these records?

Mr. KING. I have not found it necessary to make such defense in Michigan.

Senator POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. KING. My reputation stands up there with anyone else's thus far.

Senator POMERENE. I am not disputing that. If I am tiring you, I will stop.

Mr. KING. No; I am glad to answer these questions.

Senator POMERENE. There are just a few questions that I want to ask you.

In view of the fact that these serious charges were being made just prior to the primary, as well as immediately after the primary, did it not occur to you that it would be wise to have all of your original records?

Mr. KING. I supposed they were in possession of the proper custodian. I had had nothing to do with keeping them.

Senator POMERENE. As to your correspondence, if you had correspondence with different people that represented you outside—and I am assuming, now, for the sake of the question, that all of your correspondence was perfectly legitimate—would it not have been a good thing for you to have had all of that correspondence in the office if any controversy should arise after the primary?

Mr. KING. It would have been necessary to have arranged for storage space. It never occurred to me it was necessary at all.

Senator POMERENE. That may all be. Did it not occur to you, or to some of your associates, that it would be a very important thing, in view of the hot campaign that you had, that you should have your original books of entry, both as to receipts, expenditures, and as to contracts for advertising and other supplies and services? Did not that occur to you?

Mr. KING. I supposed, as I say, they were in the hands of the proper officers.

Senator POMERENE. But assuming for the sake of the argument that every item of receipt was legitimate and every item of expenditure was a legitimate expenditure, would it not have served you and Mr. Newberry and all the other defendants in good part to have had all of these original books of entry?

Mr. KING. I presume it would.

Senator POMERENE. Is it customary in your State that a campaign committee shall destroy the books showing their financial operations after the campaign is over?

Mr. KING. I can not testify as to what is customary. The only other senatorial campaign that I managed, the Townsend senatorial campaign, we kept books of correspondence for a long, long time, and I had the idea that I could refer to them for political information (R., 638) later; but they soon became obsolete and were in the way. We moved them from place to place, and finally dumped them all out. So when we came to this point I said to myself, "There is certainly no object in preserving all this mass of correspondence," and I said to the office staff, "We will not keep it."

Senator POMERENE. Senator TOWNSEND had a pretty energetic campaign up there, did he not?

Mr. KING. He did.

Senator POMERENE. And no question was ever raised about the character of his campaign?

Mr. KING. No, sir. And this campaign, Senator, was, in principle, exactly like Senator TOWNSEND's campaign, because where I had one field man then, part of the time, I had six or eight in this campaign. Where I inserted an occasional advertisement in a paper in that campaign, I had a definite plan of publicity with 13 insertions in all the papers, and where I had one poor little stenographer in the office who worked herself nearly to death, I had 50, if you please, in this campaign. It was simply an amplification of exactly the same procedure that I had followed in the Townsend campaign. In principle there is no difference at all.

Senator POMERENE. Let us pursue that a little bit further. There was no question raised about the legitimacy of Senator TOWNSEND's campaign, either before or after his primary?

Mr. KING. No, sir; although a very substantial sum of money was spent in that campaign.

Senator POMERENE. I understand that, and you have been very frank about that. But here was a campaign in which no charges were made with reference to a violation of the law or any extravagance, and yet you kept all your correspondence and files for a number of years thereafter. But when it comes to this Newberry campaign, with these very aggravated charges, whether right or wrong—I am not passing on that—when these very aggravated charges were being made against the character of the campaign, charging extravagance and even charging fraud and violation of the law, does it not strike you as a little strange that all of this correspondence should be destroyed at that time and the books of entry not available?

Mr. KING. The correspondence which was destroyed was purely form-letter correspondence. This correspondence is in the record here and fully covers the questions at issue. That was preserved. There was no idea of destroying anything that might be used in future proceedings, because the idea of all these proceedings had never occurred to me, I am frank to say.

Senator EDGE. What book entry was saved beyond that report?

Mr. KING. I do not know, Senator EDGE. I had nothing to do with that part of it, as I have stated, and I do not know what books were saved. So far as I know, I do not know that they are destroyed. I do not know that they are now.

Senator POMERENE. Did you have an understanding with John S. Newberry that he was to finance this campaign?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I did not know him at that time at all.

Senator POMERENE. How did you get your information that it was going to be financed by some of these gentlemen?

Mr. KING. I think, from Mr. Templeton. (R., 639.)

Senator POMERENE. What did he say to you on the subject?

Mr. KING. I can not recall, except that the expenses would be paid; and later, when I needed money, I asked him for money and he very promptly procured money for me. This was in the form of a check or checks signed by Mr. John S. Newberry.

Senator POMERENE. Did he tell you who was to finance it?

Mr. KING. I do not know that he did.

Senator POMERENE. You knew who these substantial contributors were from day to day?

Mr. KING. Yes; I think I knew about it. For instance, Col. Hecker, who is a very well known and prominent man in Detroit—he came into my office and left a check on my desk for a thousand dollars, which I turned over to Mr. Blair. So that indirectly, one way and another, I think I knew about it.

Senator EDGE. All these checks you received from Mr. Newberry you first turned over to Mr. Blair?

Mr. KING. These checks were made payable to Mr. Templeton, and he countersigned them. I saw the first one. Subsequently I did not see them any more.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. There were not any of them turned over to Mr. Blair?

Senator POMERENE. The question I propounded has not yet been answered. As I understand it, you say now that they were made to Mr. Templeton and you turned them over to Mr. Blair. What did he do with them?

Mr. KING. I think they were given to the office manager and deposited by him in the Commonwealth Bank. I am not sure.

Senator POMERENE. I am trying to find out, Mr. King, how they got into your regular account, of which Mr. Blair was the treasurer.

Mr. KING. I am not clear about that point, whether they were given to Mr. Blair or deposited in the Commonwealth Bank. I am not sure.

Senator POMERENE. That would be quite important in order to have an accurate accounting.

Mr. KING. I was not an accounting officer.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Do I understand you to say that Mr. Ford, at one and the same time, was running in the Republican primary for the Republican nomination and in the Democratic primary for the Democratic nomination?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; that was the idea—to capture the nomination on both tickets.

Senator WATSON. He asked you if he was running for both nominations at the same time.

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. So that in the Democratic primary he was running on the Democratic ticket and in the Republican primary he was running on the Republican ticket as a candidate for the United States Senate?

Mr. KING. That is it exactly.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Did I understand you to say that Mr. Ford said that that plan met with the approval of the President?

Mr. KING. Oh, no; he simply said he had been drafted to be a candidate for Senator.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. The primary was on August 27?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir. (R., 640.)

EXCERPTS FROM TESTIMONY OF CHARLES A. FLOYD, SECRETARY.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you if you filed any account of these bills which you paid after the original account was filed, a supplementary account?

Mr. FLOYD. No, sir; we did not.

Senator POMERENE. The statute requires you to file an account of all receipts and expenditures, does it not?

Mr. FLOYD. I do not remember the wording of the statute. I believe it says within the knowledge of the committee or within the knowledge of the treasurer, or something to that effect.

Mr. MURFIN. The statute requires this report to be filed within a certain number of days after the primary, and there is no provision for taking care of pick-ups or unpaid bills. There is no provision for a supplementary report or a requirement of it.

Senator POMERENE. Did you have a memorandum of those unpaid bills in your office at the time and fail to account for receipts and expenditures?

Mr. FLOYD. We did not, or they would have been included in the report.

Senator POMERENE. Who was authorized to contract this indebtedness that you knew nothing about?

Mr. FLOYD. No; it was not. There were bills that came in. For instance, some advertising bills, newspaper advertising. Everyone had been instructed to do everything possible to get all the bills in, and still straggling bills came in. I think one was a telegraph bill.

Senator POMERENE. Did you prepare this account?

Mr. FLOYD. Which account?

Senator POMERENE. The account which was filed.

Mr. FLOYD. I had something to do with the tabulation of it.

Senator POMERENE. As everyone was instructed to get these accounts in, etc., you knew what accounts were outstanding, did you not?

Mr. FLOYD. There was no way of checking it.

Senator POMERENE. Did not somebody testify a little while ago to the effect that there was a written contract for advertising?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. As those contracts were entered into, did you not have a memorandum in regard to it?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir. There were memoranda in regard to that, Senator, but there was no way the office had of finding out if all the bills were in from the large number of newspapers.

Senator POMERENE. You certainly must have kept an account showing these contracts or obligations which you had entered into?

Mr. FLOYD. Our office system was not as perfect as it should have been in that connection.

Senator POMERENE. When you filed this account did you know there were some of these accounts outstanding?

Mr. FLOYD. I did not.

Senator POMERENE. Was there not some conversation among you and the other official heads in the office in regard to possible unpaid accounts still outstanding?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir; and there were a large number of telephone calls and messengers to get all the bills we could possibly get. (R., 567.)

Senator POMERENE. Then the fact remains that at the time you filed this account you did know that there were other accounts out, did you not?

Mr. FLOYD. I can not say that, sir.

Senator POMERENE. You had every reason to believe that there were other accounts out?

Mr. FLOYD. No; I did not.

Senator POMERENE. You were not very much surprised when they came in, though?

Mr. FLOYD. At some of them; yes.

Senator POMERENE. Here is a matter of twelve or fifteen thousand dollars worth of accounts. With twelve or fifteen thousand dollars worth of accounts, as they came in, there were not very many of them that were disputed?

Mr. FLOYD. No, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And you were anxious to get the money to pay for them?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir; it was embarrassing not to have them paid.

Senator POMERENE. If they were not disputed, you must have known something about it at the time you filed this account.

Mr. FLOYD. If any one man knew all the accounts that had been incurred and had checked them carefully as the various accounts came in, month by month, he would know that. For my part I did not know it.

Senator POMERENE. Whose duty was it to keep in touch with all those accounts?

Mr. FLOYD. It was not mine.

Senator POMERENE. Whose was it?

Mr. FLOYD. Some one in the Detroit office that I had nothing to do with.

Senator POMERENE. You were the secretary; you certainly know who had control of that part of the business?

Mr. FLOYD. Senator, as secretary my work was entirely outside of the Detroit office until the last two or three days before the filing of the report.

Senator POMERENE. Did you dispute any of these accounts which came in? I mean those embraced in the $12,000 or $15,000.

Mr. FLOYD. Not of the ones that were paid; no, sir.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. When you made the account of September 6, 1918, did you think you had included every item of indebtedness of the Newberry senatorial committee from every source and of every character?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator WATSON. Mr. Floyd, if you had known that the account ran to $190,000 instead of $176,000 or $177,000, would that fact have deterred you from putting in the whole amount?

Mr. FLOYD. Not at all.

Senator WATSON. Was there any reason why you should not have filed it for $190,000 as well as for $175,000?

Mr. FLOYD. Not at all.

Senator POMERENE. Did you consult anybody about these accounts as they came in?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Whom? (R., 568.)

Mr. FLOYD. Mr. Hopkins, of the advertising accounts. Mr. King had seen some of the accounts that he knew about before he went on his vacation, or else on his return; I don't remember which it was. Anyone who I thought had authority to have incurred the account, I tried to find somebody that could check it.

Senator POMERENE. Mr. Hopkins O. K'd the advertising account and Mr. King O. K'd the other account?

Mr. FLOYD. Possibly; not all of them. Mr. Turner may have O. K'd some small accounts and Mr. Phillips some others.

Senator POMERENE. Were those gentlemen in conference at the time this account was prepared and filed?

Mr. FLOYD. Not in conference; no, sir.

Senator POMERENE. With you?

Mr. FLOYD. No, sir; they were not.

Senator POMERENE. How would you know, then, whether there were additional accounts at that time outstanding if you did not consult with Mr. Hopkins?

Mr. FLOYD. They were mailed into the office. They came into the office after the filing of this report. I think I remember the details of one account—the Detroit Free Press. I believe it was an account for the entire month that got by everybody, which we would have been glad to have included in this report, but it did not come in until too late.

Senator POMERENE. What did it amount to?

Mr. FLOYD. Something like $900.

Senator POMERENE. Do you mean to say that there was a $900 account that got away from your committee that they knew nothing about with the Detroit Free Press, one of the leading papers in Detroit?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir. I think that is the paper. It was one of the Detroit papers. It got by everyone. If we could have got it we would have taken some other measures to get that bill in there.

Senator POMERENE. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Mr. Floyd, how long did this twelve or fifteen thousand dollars' worth of bills embarrass you or trouble you before Mr. Green's money came in?

Mr. FLOYD. I would not exaggerate that as much as that.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Well, irritate you then?

Mr. FLOYD. From the time they were in the office.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. How long was that?

Mr. FLOYD. They began to come in right after the report was filed.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. A matter of a week or ten days?

Mr. FLOYD. Every day they would come in.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. When did you make your statement to Mr. Green and get his money?

Mr. FLOYD. I think it was around the 1st of October; just shortly before or shortly after that.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Do I understand that there was no money left in the account of the committee in the Commonwealth Savings Bank with which any of these bills could be paid?

Mr. FLOYD. Are you asking me if there was?

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes; something like $2,000 left in the account. (R., 569.)

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Whom did you delegate as secretary or assistant secretary in the Detroit office to take charge of the books of the senatorial committee?

Mr. FLOYD. I had nothing to do with the books of the senatorial committee during the campaign, so I could not have delegated it to anyone.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Who did, to the very best of your knowledge?

Mr. FLOYD. Who did keep the books?

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Whose duty was it and who was charged with that responsibility?

Mr. FLOYD. Mr. Emery.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. That is B. F. Emery, is it?

Mr. FLOYD. B. F. Emery.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. What is there that you know of to show all the expenditures and receipts—that is, I mean books and records kept by the senatorial committee other than the two bundles of canceled checks which are here, Exhibits 135 and 136, 135 being the pay roll which was identified by Mr. Phillips, and this public report which was filed on the 6th of September with the county clerk of Wayne County, Mich.?

Mr. FLOYD. These papers or books—

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. What is there besides those books and records and data or lists of expenditures kept by the senatorial committee that you know of now?

Mr. FLOYD. I do not know of any other. (R., 570.)

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING (interposing). Were there any papers burned or destroyed that you know of?

Mr. FLOYD. Oh, yes; all the surplus.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. All the surplus?

Mr. FLOYD. All the surplus papers around there were burned. I think they were left for the janitor every night.

Senator POMERENE. What do you mean by "surplus"?

Mr. FLOYD. Mimeograph copies of letters, lists, and everything like that, that was not necessary for the final making up of the report.

Senator POMERENE. Why did you do that?

Mr. FLOYD. I didn't do it. He asked me what was done.

Senator POMERENE. When was it done?

Mr. FLOYD. Day by day as the janitor cleaned out the place.

Senator POMERENE. Account books, etc.?

Mr. FLOYD. No. Here are the account books. These account books were all made up from the various memorandum sheets that they had and the various records they had, which were all combined in this report.

Senator POMERENE. Were those memorandum sheets destroyed?

Mr. FLOYD. I suppose so. Not that I know of.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Do you know when this check register was made?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Exhibit 136?

Mr. FLOYD. That was made up during the final week before the report.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Is Exhibit 136 a record of every check that was drawn?

Mr. FLOYD. So far as I know.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. And Exhibit 135 is a record of every bill that was paid?

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. That is the complete register of the pay roll. (R., 572.)

Mr. FLOYD. Don't you know what finally became of that particular $2,500, whether it went through one of these two bank accounts or not?

Mr. FLOYD. I couldn't tell you.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Or whether you just distributed it, disbursed it in cash?

Mr. FLOYD. I couldn't tell you.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. While we are on this subject, can you tell me what became of the money you drew on the 5th or 6th of September and cashed on the 7th, about $8,000?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes; I can.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. All right. The first one is the one we asked Mr. McGregor about.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes. The $2,592.27 check that was given to me on September 5, that is covered in the settlement account of James F. McGregor, for checks drawn to me covering the McGregor and Chilson accounts. Chilson did the same work as McGregor did in those two counties. That check was written for the purpose of distributing the expenditure of the McGregor and Chilson funds on these sheets. It was indorsed by me and immediately turned back to the committee. It was only written for the purpose of going through the bank.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Was it a mere matter of bookkeeping to adjust prior accounts that had already been settled?

Mr. FLOYD. To take care of cash advanced to McGregor and Chilson to make these trips. It is merely a matter of bookkeeping. I didn't receive the cash on either of these checks, so don't misunderstand me.

Senator EDGE. It was a transaction going through the regular bank account?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. What is the amount of the checks?

Mr. FLOYD. The total is a little over $8,000.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. What was that explanation again? It was to reimburse for cash expended?

Mr. FLOYD. It was really a reconciliation check for the purpose of spreading on that check register the various county expenses and other expenses that had been paid by me, paid by McGregor, and possibly by Chilson, during the campaign.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Where did you get the money to pay it?

Mr. FLOYD. I got advancements in cash from Emery, supplies, I O U's, and various memoranda.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Where did Emery get the cash from?

Mr. FLOYD. That I don't know.

Mr. MURFIN. You did that to hide it, I suppose?

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. I object to that. (R., 579.) Have you got an explanation as to why at the same time Mr. Emery drew about $24,000?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Does that same explanation apply to those two checks?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir. I was right there when that whole thing was done.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Where did he get the cash from in the first place, that all this represents?

Mr. FLOYD. I don't know where he got the cash, but I know he had a tremendous number of cash items against cash in the form of I O U's and various memoranda, that, in order to get it shipshape to make up the report, it had to be spread on this check register. So the checks were drawn to the men to whom they were drawn and they were asked at the same time to indorse them.

Senator EDGE. How do they appear on your return? Do they appear as $24,000 in the various individual sums, or $24,000 in cash?

Mr. FLOYD. They show each check.

Senator EDGE. One check for $24,000. I understand that was to reimburse other men who had paid individual sums? Did you have the individual accounts in the final report?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir; I had the individual accounts before these checks were made up.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Why did you have to draw those two big checks? Why didn't you draw separate checks, like the rest of those 1,800 checks?

Mr. FLOYD. These were separate checks.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Why did you draw two checks to yourself and two to Mr. Emery for $35,000 and about 800 others for $122,000 to different individuals?

Mr. FLOYD. The reason two were drawn to me was to balance my own account for cash items that Emery had in his files, and the other was to take care of the McGregor and Chilson accounts for their advances, which are stated in their accounts. The reason there were two checks drawn to Emery, one was the final settlement of pay-roll account that had been handled in cash, I believe $32,000 or $33,000.

Senator EDGE. So before that you received the itemized account of Mr. Emery's disbursements.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator EDGE. And they were itemized in your account?

Mr. FLOYD. They were. They were all for that purpose.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The items should be produced.

Mr. FLOYD. I can produce them.

Mr. MURFIN. If he was trying to hide it, he certainly would not have done it that way.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Emery went home sick the last night, you know.

What I O U's were there in existence for $8,000 or $15,000 or $10,000 at that time?

Mr. FLOYD. I don't know whether you would call them I O U's or not. We used that word because we called any slip an I O U that was put in the drawer in the place of cash that had been used. (R., 580, 581.)

Senator POMERENE. Here is this item of check payable to your order, dated June 18, 1918, check No. A1819, for $5,559.88. On the reverse side is this statement: "Final settlement credited by itemized statement of all expenses, settlement of Grand Rapids office and various counties, $12,641.02, from extra sums already reported direct or otherwise covering the same items, $7,081.14; leaving a balance of $5,559.88," the amount shown by the check itself.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Will you just explain the entire history of that transaction, so that the record here will show what that check was to pay you for?

Mr. FLOYD. In the first place, that check actually did not come to me. The check was made out to spread on the record. It was indorsed by me and immediately turned back, because I already had the cash.

Senator POMERENE. Where did you get the cash?

Mr. FLOYD. I got it from time to time from Mr. Emery.

Senator POMERENE. How was that paid to you?

Mr. FLOYD. I think some of the items were paid by check. I see one for $2,500.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. That was not that check. The check is lost.

Mr. FLOYD. Checks and currency from time to time. I think that is the total amount that went through my hands.

Senator POMERENE. The total amount of what?

Mr. FLOYD. Cash and checks.

Senator POMERENE. Where did you get the $12,641.02?

Mr. FLOYD. From the Detroit office. I think I got it from Mr. Emery in that office.

Senator POMERENE. In what form?

Mr. FLOYD. Checks and currency.
 Senator POMERENE. Checks on this same account?
 Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.
 Senator POMERENE. Would those checks be entered here?
 Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.
 Senator POMERENE. And if you got cash would it be entered on this?
 Mr. FLOYD. No, sir. That was what that check was written for, because the cash account had not been covered.
 Senator POMERENE. What was done with those checks afterwards?
 Mr. FLOYD. That was indorsed by me, the same as these other checks, and turned back to Emery, and either cashed by him or he deposited it.
 Senator POMERENE. Was that check deposited?
 Mr. FLOYD. Not by me.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. It was cashed?
 Senator POMERENE. Did it go through the bank at all?
 Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir. That was the purpose of writing it, to have it go through the bank, the only purpose of writing it.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Do you mean it went through the bank without the bank giving any money on it?
 Mr. FLOYD. No, sir.
 Senator POMERENE. What is that perforation of the check?
 Mr. FLOYD. "Paid September 7, 1918." (R., 584.)
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who got the money?
 Mr. FLOYD. Well, Mr. LUCKING, the money on that whole series of checks, something like seven or eight of them—
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. $35,000.
 Mr. FLOYD. Yes. That represented cash that Mr. Emery had outstanding.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. But who got that money on this check? You say you didn't. Who did?
 Mr. FLOYD. I didn't.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Who did?
 Mr. FLOYD. I don't know.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Somebody went to the bank and got $35,000.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. It is perfectly clear to me.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Explain it to me.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Here is an office that goes to Mr. Emery from time to time, as money is needed, and Mr. Emery gives them some money.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Where does he get it?
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. I will come to that. He may take it from cash contributions as they come in. He gives money, as required by the office, $5,000, $2,000, $1,000. When the aggregate comes in he has nothing to show that he has given that money.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He hasn't the money, either.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. He draws a check for the amount, and it is indorsed by those who originally received the cash from him and turned back to him and the proceeds deposited to his account, and that clears the transaction.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Where did they get the $35,000 during the six months previous?
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. This witness says he does not know.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He says it is perfectly plain.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Where Mr. Emery got it he says he does not know.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. We have a right to ask him where he got the money.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. He has already given his explanation.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. If you want to accept such an explanation as that.
 Senator WATSON. If you could understand it you would not have any trouble with it.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. It is no wonder Mr. Emery was sick.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. There is no occasion for that statement.
 Mr. SMITH. It might be well to suggest that these checks are part of the $178,000 which actually matches the deposits Mr. Blair made.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Exactly, but where did the $35,000 come from before that, that was used in cash?
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. If you have any evidence to show that, produce it.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That is the evidence of it. What did they put it on at the last minute for?
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Proceed with anything further this witness knows. He has already made his explanation of it. (R., 585.)
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Mr. Floyd, did you get this explanation from Mr. Emery?
 Mr. FLOYD. Of these checks?
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. You have explained what was done with that $17,000 check. Did you get your explanation from Mr. Emery?
 Mr. FLOYD. Certainly not.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. How do you know it then?
 Mr. FLOYD. I know all about it myself.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. You do?
 Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. What did Mr. Emery do with the $17,000? Where did he get that cash on the 7th of September?
 Mr. FLOYD. I don't know what he did with it. He certainly had to reimburse somebody for the cash that he had advanced.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. We are through with those checks. Proceed on some other line. (R., 586.)
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. There are no checks in this check register for the pay roll of $35,000 except one $2,500 check and one $1,500 check, possibly. That is the point I make.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. And thus Mr. LUCKING infers that if the pay roll of $35,000, for which there are no checks in the check register, were added to the $161,000 in the check register it would produce a total of $196,000.
 Mr. LUCKING. Yes; and on top of that there is nothing in this check register for all the expenses out in the State to workers, except the $2,500 check to Mr. Floyd, which is No. 748, I think—
 Mr. SMITH. What is the number of the salary adjustment? Have you got that there, Mr. LUCKING?
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. You mean the two Emery checks?
 Mr. FLOYD. They run No. 1819 or 1820, or somewhere along in there.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. No. 1827 to Mr. Emery for $17,629.29; No. 1821 to Mr. Emery for $8,825.62; No. 1819 to Mr. Floyd for $5,559.88; and No. 1825 to Mr. Floyd for $2,592.27.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Have you made any examination on that point?
 Mr. FLOYD. Yes; I have, sir.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Will you state it clearly?

Mr. FLOYD. I found the original paper that I made up at the time this pay roll was distributed for the purpose of making up the so-called Blair report, which, if you remember, is classified under four or five general heads. There is a difference of several hundred dollars. It is within at least a thousand dollars of a complete check, but it was so long ago that I do not know that I can check that up. I would be glad to have this go right into the record if you want it to.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. You may put it in as part of your testimony.
 Mr. FLOYD. Do you wish it read?
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Unless it helps you in your testimony we do not want it.
 Mr. SMITH. I think you had better read the totals and give a general description.
 Mr. FLOYD. The total distribution of pay roll accounts, as shown by this memorandum, is $36,540.17.
 Senator POMERENE. What memorandum?
 Mr. FLOYD. The original memorandum I made at the time I made up the distribution of the so-called Blair report. The total is $36,540.17.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. That is, pay rolls? (R., 661.)
 Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir. That is the amount that is distributed into the Blair report. Here is the distribution: First, it is divided into office, including all clerical help. I show it as H. O. Turner et al., $17,985.51.
 The next division is publicity. The names are Morgan, Duthrie, Kopel, Wilson, Hopkins, Haskins, Calnon, and Phillips. The total of that pay roll is $8,600.
 The next division is field men—Davis, Corliss, McGregor, and Moore. The total is $6,625.
 In addition to that there is the Wayne County committee, which was taken care of through Emery funds and charged to county expenses. That pay roll totaled $3,614.66. It makes a grand total of $36,540.17.
 Mr. SMITH. How does that compare with the pay-roll sheets, Exhibit 136?
 Mr. FLOYD. I did not have access to those sheets in making up the check I made last night.
 Mr. SMITH. You have the amount there, I think, somewhere.
 Mr. FLOYD. I think the amount is $35,435.39. In other words, we distributed a little over a thousand dollars more in the Blair report than these pay rolls would show. That is evidently clerical errors in combining these various accounts.
 Under the office pay roll, in order to get a distribution into the general accounts, we had to use our best judgment as to everything in the office, as to how much time was spent by clerks in doing this and how much in that. We arrived at these percentages:
 Newspapers, 20 per cent. Distribution of literature, 5 per cent. Letters and postage, 60 per cent. Speakers, 10 per cent. List of voters, 5 per cent.
 This report will show what those percentages amount to against the total Turner pay roll. There is a difference there of $19—some minor error in making these percentage computations.
 The publicity pay roll was divided in this way:
 Seventy per cent to newspapers, 20 per cent to printing and literature, 5 per cent to distribution of literature, 5 per cent to letters. The speakers' bureau was less than 1 per cent; flat at $285. That was one man.
 Field men's pay roll was divided in this way: Speakers' bureau, $1,987.50; meetings, $993.75; general salaries, $3,643.75. Each of these various items will appear in the Blair report under their proper headings.
 Senator EDGE. What was the reason for adopting what would seem to me to be a very complicated system of bookkeeping for a temporary activity like an election campaign is necessarily? It seems to me that it would meet all the necessities of the law in making your report if you had kept the usual ledger, journal, and daybook and entered the accounts in the ordinary way. All this percentage is not required at all under the law.
 Mr. FLOYD. No.
 Senator EDGE. What was the reason for adopting that method?
 Mr. FLOYD. It appears superfluous. We had a report of something like 30 pages.
 Senator EDGE. The so-called Blair report?
 Mr. FLOYD. Yes. (R., 662.)
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Did you know that this check register for the period from the time that Commonwealth account was opened, the main account of $178,000, down to the 1st of June, showed about $5,000 of checks drawn, whereas the withdrawals from the Commonwealth Bank record showed about $2,000 during this same period? Did you know that?
 Mr. FLOYD. No, sir; I did not.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. You never checked that up when you were making this check register, Exhibit 136?
 Mr. FLOYD. I can not understand such a situation as that. I either did not get your question—
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING (Interposing). I am asking you whether you know it?
 Mr. FLOYD. I misunderstood your question, or you have created an overdraft there.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. You might have had a big enough balance to have stood that. You didn't keep track of that balance from day to day?
 Mr. FLOYD. I certainly don't understand that question.
 Senator EDGE. According to that statement there was a discrepancy of $15,000.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Yes.
 Mr. SMITH. This sheet, Exhibit 38, shows the withdrawals and deposits.
 Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Starting with check 1, right down, up to June 1, 392 checks had been issued, according to the check register, around $5,000 odd, whereas the withdrawals from the same account, as shown by the bank record, and as contained in the exhibit which Mr. Smith offered this morning, which is page 120 in the printed record, shows that in the same period there were withdrawals of about $20,000.
 Mr. FLOYD. That is very simple. I understand the whole situation. I did not understand your question before. When I checked that account over I found the system had been changed and that the preliminary pay-roll checks, which I believe were described as "pink" checks, had been entered in that account. The total of those checks must have been somewhere around $11,000. I can't give you the exact figures.

That was the pay-roll account. That applies against the $36,000 of the total.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. That applies against the $36,000?

Mr. FLOYD. That applies against the $36,000 of total pay-roll accounts. (R., 670.)

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Why didn't you show on the check register there were certain checks that were not on it?

Mr. FLOYD. Those were regular voucher checks.

Senator EDGE. Did the approximately $15,000 difference between the $5,000 shown on the check register and the $20,000 shown as withdrawn by the bank record show anywhere on that check record?

Mr. FLOYD. No, sir; it does not. It shows in the report.

Senator EDGE. Are we to assume from that that there were $15,000 more spent than Mr. Blair's report indicates?

Mr. FLOYD. No, sir; that total check register totals about $160,000.

Senator EDGE. Do I understand that your explanation of the difference between the $160,000 and the $178,000 is shown by this $12,000 or $13,000?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir; when I checked that account, as near as I could get it, roughly figuring, about $160,000 was shown on the check register.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. I want to challenge your attention to the fact that I asked you for that total yesterday, and you said you didn't know.

Mr. FLOYD. I didn't know the exact amount.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. Go ahead.

Mr. FLOYD. In that were approximately $2,000 of accounts receivable. Naturally they were not shown in the Blair report. That would reduce the amount of distribution to approximately $158,000. On top of that is the $5,000 of Paul H. King money, which brings it up to $163,000. The pay-roll checks shown in Exhibit 135, of $17,000, was written to Emery at the end of the period. The combination of the pay-roll checks and the $17,000 check to Emery at the end of the campaign totals the entire pay roll, as shown in this exhibit. At the same time the total of the checks on the register of accounts receivable, plus the Paul H. King $5,000 and the pay-roll money, totals $176,000.

Senator EDGE, you were looking at me. It is plain to me. It may be complicated to you. I know everything was included in the Blair report. It does not seem to me that question can be answered quickly.

Senator EDGE. I must admit it is a little confusing to anyone who will get a list of checks, as shown there, and their dates, and then suddenly be confronted with the indisputable fact that you actually drew from the bank about $15,000 more during that period than the check book shows. You are now making an explanation of it which we can consider.

Mr. FLOYD. I could have answered that more quickly if I had understood Mr. Lucking's question.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I want to call your attention to one fact. Both of these counsel certified that this check register included this $178,000—both of them. I challenged their attention to it. Now the witness says there were a whole lot of other checks. (R., 671.)

Mr. SMITH. We never certified that covered the pay roll at all.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Both of you certified that covered the entire $178,000.

Mr. SMITH. We have always understood that the check register and pay roll, less the adjustment check to Emery, totaled the amount of the Blair report included in the expenditures. There are two separate classes of expenditures. One is the checks there, and one is the pay roll here. Together they make the amount of the report.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you a question. You said he had to straighten up his cash.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Where was that cash kept?

Mr. FLOYD. I don't know where he kept the cash. He had cash in his office. I don't know whether he used a safety deposit box or not.

Senator POMERENE. You mean in the committee's office?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir. (R., 672.)

Senator POMERENE. Let me propound another question to you: Suppose John Newberry gave a check for $5,000, and that is deposited in that bank, and straightway you draw $2,000 out of that and put it in the cash drawer. That leaves a balance of $3,000, though there has been deposited $5,000.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Suppose Mr. Barnes comes in and contributes $5,000, and that goes in the cash drawer. There is $7,000 in cash.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And our friend Emery has I O U's and receipts and so on showing he had got $7,000.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Then you draw a check to his order for $7,000 and you deposit that in the bank. How is that bank going to show the proper status of your account when the second $5,000 has not been deposited in the bank? The deposit shows first $5,000 and later $7,000 or $12,000.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Straighten that out in the record, if you can, in the way that you did it.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Do you understand the case?

Mr. FLOYD. I think I do, Mr. Chairman.

I think, in the first place, the proper way of handling that would be to make a reimbursement check for the $5,000, attaching to it a statement of what it covers, and have that check indorsed by the man who spent the money, and take that check over and deposit it in the bank. That would not affect the bank balance at all.

Mr. WILLIAM LUCKING. It would show?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. That is not how it might be done, but how did you do it?

Mr. FLOYD. In the first place, I didn't do that. I am telling you what I found when I checked over this account.

Senator EDGE. Maybe Mr. Floyd can go into the United States Treasury Department and help us out there.

Senator POMERENE. I wish he would.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. FLOYD. It is plainly evident, Senator, that this $13,000, when the check was cashed, was used in conducting the campaign, and then at the end it was also plainly evident that cash contributions when made would be used in the business before depositing in whole or in part, sometimes in part and sometimes as a whole.

Senator EDGE. I see how it could be done. (R., 678.)

Senator POMERENE. Were you present at the time instructions were given to burn or destroy some of the records and correspondence?

Mr. FLOYD. I was not present at any such conversation.

Senator POMERENE. Did you hear that any of it was destroyed?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir. I could see plainly that each day all the superfluous matter accumulating around the office, that the next morning the place was clean, and the janitor had evidently taken it away and destroyed it.

Senator POMERENE. When was that?

Mr. FLOYD. All during the campaign.

Senator POMERENE. They did not take your office files away?

Mr. FLOYD. I never knew anyone else who took any office files or anything of that kind away and burned them.

Senator POMERENE. What other books did you see in the office other than those we have here? Books of record, I mean.

Mr. FLOYD. There were really no books of record in the way you mean, ledger and journal. They had various statements on sheets, these pay-roll sheets, and of various sizes and different shapes, but no regular books of record.

Senator POMERENE. No regular books at all?

Mr. FLOYD. No, sir.

Senator POMERENE. So that these accounts, amounting to more than $170,000 of receipts and disbursements, were kept on mere memoranda and sheets?

Mr. FLOYD. Practically; yes, sir. That is what I would call them.

Senator POMERENE. Did you have any record of contract, book records, or any files?

Mr. FLOYD. They had some kind of thing; I don't know how you would describe it. I have seen it in the publicity department, something in the shape of a card referring to different newspapers. I think there was something of that kind.

Senator POMERENE. Did you have them at the time you were fixing up this Blair account?

Mr. FLOYD. I could have had access to them. If I could have obtained any information that would have been helpful, I would have used them.

Senator POMERENE. Did you have access to them?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Why were those not kept?

Mr. FLOYD. I can not understand it.

Senator POMERENE. Who would understand that?

Mr. FLOYD. I don't know who would. They were publicity department forms.

Senator POMERENE. Do not misunderstand my question. I am referring to all books and papers, records, and documents they had which were destroyed. Who would know about that? Who can give us some definite information?

Mr. FLOYD. As to their destruction?

Senator POMERENE. Yes; or as to their whereabouts, if they are to be found. (R., 691.)

Mr. FLOYD. I can speak for the ones I came in contact with.

Senator POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. FLOYD. Everything I came in contact with to make up these reports were really originals and complete reports.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by that? Do you mean Exhibits 135 and 136?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir; the Blair report, the sheets, these final checks, everything we kept in the senatorial office, in headquarters. There was very little more of it. I remember those very well when I was making up that report.

Senator POMERENE. Where are they?

Mr. FLOYD. They were left there. The State central committee followed the senatorial committee into those rooms.

Senator POMERENE. Do you mean these papers and accounts were left with the State committee?

Mr. FLOYD. Here are the accounts right in front of you.

Senator POMERENE. No. Those are secondary matters, from your statements, as I understood them.

Mr. FLOYD. I did not intend to have them understood that way.

Senator POMERENE. You just made a statement to the effect that they had certain memoranda and sheets or something of that kind on which they made records from time to time.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Your account is made up from those sheets or whatever they were?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Where are the original entries of which this is secondary matter? Who can give us any information as to those original papers and original entries?

Mr. FLOYD. I don't know who can. I know I tried to find some of them after the State central committee had gone into these offices.

Senator POMERENE. Did you make any attempt to discover what had become of these documents after this subject got into the court at Grand Rapids?

Mr. FLOYD. Not after that time, but long before that time.

Senator POMERENE. Did anybody else try to find them?

Mr. FLOYD. I was asked at different times if I knew where they were, and I told them I had searched for them. They said, "The State central committee went in and took the offices. They are probably in their files." The chairman was dead, and there was no way of finding out what he did with them.

Senator POMERENE. Let me see if I understand you. There were 100 or more of you gentlemen under indictment.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And you had skilled lawyers?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Whatever you did, whether rightly or wrongly, was the subject of an investigation by the criminal court?

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. With all that incentive to get all the facts, have you or anyone else connected with that defense, to your knowledge, been able to find what became of those original documents?

Mr. FLOYD. No, sir; I have not. (R., 692.)

SUMMARY.

The exorbitant expenditures in this primary campaign shocked the conscience of the country.

The attorneys for the contestant claim in their supplemental brief that the record shows disbursements in behalf of Senator Newberry aggregating $263,060.67.

Some of these expenditures may be duplicates. The original books and records of the committee have been destroyed, or at least not produced. The books of the Newberry interests are likewise gone. The majority of the committee would not permit the subpoenaing of bankers to produce their books showing the Newberry accounts. There is no way in the present state of the record to arrive at the exact cost of this campaign. We are reasonably certain that much money was expended of which there is no account.

On the other hand, the Blair report, filed under the Michigan statute (B. E., 252-283), shows total disbursements of $176,568.08. After this report was filed Secretary Charles A. Floyd testified that additional bills were presented, which were paid, aggregating between twelve and fifteen thousand dollars.

Accepting this smaller figure as correct, the total cost of Mr. Newberry's primary campaign was $188,568.08. In other words, to secure him the nomination there was an outlay in Michigan of a sum sufficient to pay his salary for more than 25 years.

In the language of Senator Hear and Senator Frye in the Payne case, "no more fatal blow can be struck at the Senate or at the purity and permanence of the republican government itself than the establishment of this precedent."

True, Mr. Newberry, in his sworn statement filed with the Secretary of the Senate, says the campaign was voluntarily conducted by "his friends." "I have taken no part in it whatever, and no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent," says he.

But with the accusing finger of a large portion of the people of his State pointing at him and with this incriminating record before him he has not up to date volunteered to tell his colleagues in the Senate what the facts are, and the majority members of this committee refuse to invite him to tell them.

We submit that a careful review of this report supplemented by a reading of the record in this case will show conclusively:

First. That his nomination as a candidate for United States Senator was secured by this extravagant expenditure of money, without which he could not have hoped to win over his competitors, because he was little known in the State.

Second. This money was expended through the agency of the Newberry senatorial committee.

Third. This committee was organized at his instance and manned by executives whom he himself chose, or if they were suggested by his friends he approved them.

Fourth. While a larger part of the planning of the campaign may have been done by the executives of the committee, they were submitted to him for his approval.

Fifth. He approved or disapproved these plans according to his judgment.

Sixth. Every general activity of this committee and its executive officers, whether in organization or publicity work, was reported to him almost daily by Mr. Paul H. King, the executive chairman, and others.

Seventh. Many conferences were held between him and the executive members of his committee at New York for the purpose of originating, or criticizing, or revising the plans of the campaign.

Eighth. While Mr. Paul H. King insists that he never discussed with Senator Newberry the financing of the campaign, except in his first conversation when he told him that it would cost "his friends" $50,000, he did know concededly the enormous expenses of the plan of organization and publicity of his senatorial committee, and he knew also that his own bank account and the bank accounts of the other Newberry interests were being depleted by his own attorney in fact, Frederick P. Smith, in order to replenish the waning balance in the bank account of his brother, John S. Newberry, out of which the campaign expenses were being paid. This is known because this same Frederick P. Smith testifies, as above quoted, that Senator Newberry talked to him "about the drain on the balances in the office, and he was complaining about the money that was being spent," and again that he (Senator Newberry) was "kicking about the balances."

Ninth. These drains on the Newberry finances must have been heavy, because out of these various funds were furnished net $99,900, the amount charged in the Blair report.

Tenth. The Michigan law limited the expenditure of any candidate for the Senate to $3,750. We submit that this amount could not be increased by the organization of a committee to act as his agent, and this committee did so act. Qui facit per alium, facit per se.

Eleventh. The Newberry senatorial committee, the agent of the candidate, violated the Michigan law by far exceeding the limitations upon expenditures, by hiring workers on primary day and for days before, and its members by purchasing drinks and cigars for voters.

Twelfth. The Blair report of the receipts and expenditures of the Newberry senatorial committee clearly violates the Michigan law, because it does not give the names of the men who did active work in the campaign and to whom money was paid, nor does it in many instances state the purpose for which it was paid, and gives no account of the liabilities which were outstanding and unpaid at the time that the report was filed.

Thirteenth. The Michigan statutes require both Senator Newberry, the candidate, and the treasurer of the senatorial committee to file accounts of their receipts and expenditures. The treasurer's account does not comply with the law for the reasons hereinbefore stated, and Senator Newberry filed no account whatsoever.

Fourteenth. Not having filed any account under the Michigan statutes, it was unlawful for the Michigan authorities to issue a certificate of nomination to Mr. Newberry.

Fifteenth. The Federal corrupt practices act required statements of receipts and disbursements to be filed in connection with the primary and general election campaigns.

Under this statute and under oath he filed on August 16, 1918, a preliminary statement in which he said:

"The campaign for my nomination for United States Senator has been voluntarily conducted by friends in Michigan. I have taken no part in it whatever, and no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent."

Under date of August 29, 1918, he filed his account of receipts and expenses for the primary election held August 27, 1918, in which he said, under the printed words:

"The following is a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by me or by my agent, representative, or other person for or in my behalf with my knowledge or consent, etc."

Then in his handwriting appears the words "none with my knowledge and consent."

This qualification follows:

"I have read the general published statement of Paul H. King concerning expenditures made by a volunteer committee of my friends, but these were made without my knowledge or consent."

These statements were made under oath and filed in conformity with the Federal statute. Presumably they influenced to some extent the voters of Michigan. The minority members regret to say that they were not true, and while the statute under which they were filed has been held unconstitutional the moral turpitude involved in their making is just as great as if the statute had been held constitutional.

Sixteenth. In our opinion the record as hereinbefore shown conclusively establishes a conspiracy upon the part of Truman H. Newberry et al., who were indicted and tried for a conspiracy to violate both Federal and State laws; that such conspiracy had for its object the violation of the election laws of the State of Michigan as well as the Federal statute limiting the expenditures allowed by a candidate for United States Senator and contemplated the debauching of the electorate of the State of Michigan by the expenditure of large sums of money; that said Truman H. Newberry participated in said conspiracy and actively engaged in its execution; that in pursuance thereof he selected agents and directed their activities; that he was familiar with the fact that large sums of money were being expended and would be expended in the primary election for the purpose of corrupting the electorate of the State of Michigan and in violation of the election laws of said State; that he knew that not less than $188,568.08 were expended in said primary election and that the expenditure of said money was in violation of law; that he aided in the creation of a committee to take charge of his campaign as a candidate for the United States Senate and directed the work of said committee and was cognizant of its activities, including the expenditure of large sums of money in violation of the election laws of the State of Michigan; that he approved of the work of said committee and of its activities and of its large expenditures and was fully aware of the nature, character, and accomplishments of said committee and of the methods employed by it to secure his nomination at the primary election; that through his confidential agent and attorney in fact he contributed to said expenditures various large sums from time to time, but the amounts so contributed or the aggregate thereof are not known to the committee because neither said Truman H. Newberry nor those who controlled the payment of said amounts testified in respect thereto, and further contended that the books and accounts showing such payments were either lost or destroyed; that the payments so contributed by said Newberry, in the manner hereinbefore described, to said committee for the purposes aforesaid were so large as to impair the account of said Newberry at the bank where he conducted his business, resulting in his complaining to Frederick P. Smith, his confidential agent and attorney in fact, because of his reduced balances in bank, as stated in the eighth finding herein; that notwithstanding the knowledge by said Newberry of the facts hereinbefore stated, he filed under oath the statements referred to in the fifteenth finding hereinbefore set forth; that said statements submitted under oath were false and untrue to the knowledge of said Newberry in this, to wit: That he did take part in said campaign and did make contributions and expenditures and that contributions and expenditures were made to secure his nomination, with his knowledge and consent, and pursuant to his direction and control; and that the campaign for his nomination was conducted under the direction of said Newberry and pursuant to said conspiracy hereinbefore set forth.

BOOKS AND RECORDS DESTROYED OR MISSING.

One of the difficulties confronting the committee was the failure to produce the original books and entries of the Newberry senatorial committee.

Mr. Frank W. Blair, the treasurer of the committee, who filed the report of receipts and expenditures, was a mere figurehead. He kept no books. The account was prepared for him, and after some explanation he signed it and it was filed. The only records of receipts and expenditures presented to the committee were:

(a) The report of Mr. Blair.

(b) The pay roll.

(c) The check register.

(d) Government Exhibit 134 of 511 checks out of a total issue of 1,820 to 1,830 checks.

Blair says B. F. Emery was keeping the books of the committee. (R., 389.)

Harry O. Turner, the assistant secretary and assistant office manager of the committee, says (R., 697):

"I took receipts for every disbursement. These receipts were turned over to the auditing or bookkeeping department. The vouchers were turned over to the bookkeeping department. (R., 700.)"

"Senator POMERENE. If there was a bookkeeping department and you were in and out of there, did you not see some books?"

"Mr. TURNER. I saw some books, but for what purpose they were used I do not know. They were different kinds of books, memorandum books and things of that kind—records. I suppose that the auditing department kept a system of books."

"Senator EDGE. Who was the chief auditor?"

"Mr. TURNER. Mr. Emery was the man in charge of that."

"Senator EDGE. We ought to get back to Mr. Emery. (R., 700.)"

"Senator POMERENE. I wish you would tell this committee what books and records you saw about the headquarters there that were used in connection with the work of this campaign committee."

"Mr. TURNER. Senator, I can not tell you exactly what was used. I suppose they were using a daily register of some kind of disbursement and checks being issued. I thought I saw at one time, or at least understood, that there was a record kept of the checks that were drawn for newspapers. (R., 704.)"

They had certain memoranda and sheets from which they made up their account. Floyd says he tried to find them. The State central committee had gone into their office. He could not find them. (R., 692.) Floyd says it was Mr. B. F. Emery's duty to keep the books."

When asked about certain records Mr. King says, in answer to a question, "that they were in the office up to the day of the primary." (R., 335.)

Again, Mr. Alfred Lucking (R., 620) asks Mr. King, the executive chairman of the committee, about the books showing receipts on one side and expenditures on the other. He answers, "I never saw any such book. I presume there were books, but I never saw any such books." At the beginning of the campaign I talked over with Mr. Emery a system of keeping track of the account, but I never had time or opportunity to go into the details of financing the campaign."

All of these men knew that it was necessary to keep an account of receipts and disbursements. The record is full of testimony to the effect that they had books or records. The original entries they must have had, for otherwise they could not have made up the pay roll, the check register, or the Blair report.

King admits that he gave instructions to burn up the correspondence. We can speculate as to where these books are, but they have not been produced, though they were in charge of the men who were intimately connected with this campaign.

King and Floyd and Turner all indicate that it was B. F. Emery's duty to keep books, and he had charge of the bookkeeping or auditing department. B. F. Emery is said to be sick. That he was sick is true, but he was going about his business when process was served upon him in Detroit. When Mr. Lucking is told of his condition, that he is not fit to appear, he consents to a cancellation of the service of process, and immediately Emery went to Canada. About one month after service was made upon him, when it was understood that the hearings have been concluded, he is again back in Detroit.

The minority asked that he be called before the committee. A doctor, about one month before, said that he could not appear at that time, but there is no evidence that he could not have appeared before the committee either in Washington or at Detroit at the time the minority members of the committee asked for his appearance. The majority refuse to call him, and so the one man, the one officer who ought to have knowledge of the whereabouts of these records does not testify.

Again, the books showing the financial transactions of the Newberrys, and particularly of John S. Newberry, who furnished most of the money for the campaign, have likewise disappeared. It is claimed that after they were taken before the grand jury they were returned to the Newberry barn and locked up, and when Frederick P. Smith, the confidential agent, goes to the barn to get the books they are missing.

We then asked to have the officers of the National Bank of Commerce, in which John S. Newberry kept his account, called to produce the bank records of John S. Newberry's transactions. Again, the majority of the committee refuse to issue process, and thus we are without what certainly is available evidence, but the majority of the committee refuse to get it.

Lyman D. Smith, of New York, was likewise a large contributor. It became important to follow his transactions. His records, too, are gone, but the majority of the committee deny the right of counsel for the contestant to call the officers of the bank in which he kept his deposits.

The majority members seem to think that the pending contest was purely an adversary proceeding between Mr. Ford and Mr. Newberry. In one sense of the word this may be true, but it is a controversy which concerns the Senate itself, and the minority are very firmly of the opinion that witnesses desired by any Senator serving on the committee should have been called.

A request to this end was made by the minority members in subcommittee. It was denied.

In a meeting of the full Committee on Privileges and Elections the following several resolutions were presented by Mr. POMERENE:

"Resolved by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, That the subcommittee be instructed to subpoena and take the testimony of Frederick P. Smith and such other witnesses as may be suggested by any member of the subcommittee to the end that there may be a full and complete hearing respecting the issues involved in the pending contest.

"Resolved by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, That the subcommittee be instructed to invite Senator Newberry to appear before it to give testimony concerning the charges pending against him involving his title to a seat in the United States Senate.

"Resolved by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, That the attorneys representing the contestant and the contestee in the pending investigation be invited to appear before the full committee to submit oral arguments on a date to be fixed by the chairman of the committee."

They speak for themselves. Each one of them was denied. How the contestee or the majority of the committee can ask their colleagues to declare Truman H. Newberry entitled to his seat under these circumstances the minority is not able to explain.

NEWBERRY VS. UNITED STATES.

The majority report makes reference to the decision of the Supreme Court in Newberry v. United States, and quotes with much force from the late Chief Justice the following:

"There can be no doubt when the limitations as to expenditures which the statute imposed are considered in the light of its context and its genesis that its prohibitions were intended, not to restrict the right of the citizen to contribute to a campaign, but to prohibit the candidate from contributing and expending or causing to be contributed and expended to secure his nomination and election a larger amount than the sum limited as provided in the statute."

And from Mr. Justice Pitney as follows:

"His mere participation in the activities of the campaign, even with knowledge that moneys spontaneously contributed and expended by others, without his agency, procurement, or assistance, were to be or were being expended, would not of itself amount to his causing such excessive expenditure.

"A candidate can not be made a principal offender unless he directly commits the offense denounced. Spontaneous expenditures by others being without the scope of the prohibition, neither he nor anybody else can be held criminally responsible for merely abetting such expenditures.

"His remaining in the field and participating in the ordinary activities of the campaign, with knowledge that such activities furnish in a general sense the 'occasion' for the expenditure, is not to be regarded as a 'causing' by the candidate of such expenditure within the meaning of the statute."

The minority regrets that the majority of the Supreme Court felt compelled to hold the corrupt practices act unconstitutional. They prefer the reasoning of the Chief Justice and of Mr. Justice Pitney. They regard it as unanswerable. If the Supreme Court can say, as it did in McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S., 1), that the election of presidential electors by popular vote was a compliance with the provision of the Constitution that each State shall appoint electors in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, they can not understand why the majority of the Supreme Court could hold that the regulation of the manner of "holding elections for Senators" does not embrace primary elections. But we accept the conclusion of the majority opinion in this behalf, as we ought to do.

We agree that there was error in the charge of the trial court as pointed out.

A careful reading of the opinions delivered shows very clearly that they discuss two legal propositions—the constitutionality of the corrupt practices act and the correctness of the charge of the trial judge. The facts involved in the record were only referred to incidentally in so far as they might shed light upon the legal propositions involved.

We admit that the statute does not restrict the right of the citizen to contribute, and that mere knowledge that moneys were being spontaneously contributed and expended by friends without his agency would not of itself be a causing of excessive expenditures.

We admit that the candidate's remaining in the field and participating in the ordinary activities of the campaign with knowledge that they occasioned the expenditure of large sums of money could not be regarded as a causing of such expenditure within the meaning of the statute.

But if it is claimed that the Chief Justice or the Justices of the Supreme Court expressed any opinion as to the facts contained in the record before it, which we deny, it is a sufficient answer to say that the record before the Supreme Court is not the record before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate.

We have quoted and discussed at length the testimony of John S. Newberry, the principal contributor to this campaign fund; of Fred P. Smith, the confidential agent and attorney in fact of the Newberrys; of Allan Templeton, the general chairman of the committee and a business associate of Senator Newberry; of Frank W. Blair, the treasurer of the committee; of Hannibal A. Hopkins, the publicity director; of Charles A. Floyd, the secretary of the committee; of Harry O. Turner, assistant secretary and office manager; of Lyman D. Smith, a contributor before; and of Andrew H. Green, a large contributor after the primary was over. None of these witnesses testified in the criminal trial.

Also in the trial court Mr. Paul H. King, the executive chairman, was not cross-examined by the Government because of sickness. He was further examined and cross-examined before the committee.

The testimony of these and other witnesses was before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and was not in the record before the Supreme Court.

This additional evidence shows conclusively Senator Newberry's active participation in the organization of his committee, his approval of all its activities, with few exceptions, his direction as to many of them, and the contributions from his own funds as well as other family funds in which he was interested through the medium of his brother, John S. Newberry, so that it can in no sense of the word be claimed that the moneys expended were spontaneously contributed by his friends, and that he did not participate therein.

The voice of the senatorial campaign committee may be the voice of the friends and business associates of the candidate, but its hand was the hand of Truman H. Newberry.

CONCLUSIONS.

As conclusions from the facts disclosed by the record and the findings herein set forth, we are of the opinion—

First, That the irregularities complained of do not relate to the general election but to the primary. Henry Ford did not receive a plurality of the votes cast at the general election. We therefore find that the petitioner, Henry Ford, was not elected and is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States.

Second, We find that under the facts and circumstances of this case corrupt and illegal methods and practices were employed at the primary election and that Truman H. Newberry violated the corrupt practices act and the primary act of the State of Michigan, and that by reason thereof he ought not to have or hold a seat in the Senate of the United States, and that he is not the duly elected Senator from the State of Michigan for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1919, and we recommend, therefore, that his seat be declared vacant.

IN RE NEWBERRY CASE.

VIEWS OF MR. ASHURST.

The sitting Member, Mr. Truman H. Newberry, filed affidavits with the Secretary of the Senate stating that no money was spent in his primary campaign "with his knowledge or consent."

Mr. Frederick P. Smith, before the Subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, testified inter alia as follows (H., 753-755): [H. refers to hearings before the Subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections; B. E. refers to bill of exceptions in re Newberry et al. v. The United States.]

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What do you call your position, secretary or executor?

Mr. SMITH. No; I call myself agent.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You are their confidential financial man, are you not?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You have, I think it has been said here, powers of attorney from both Mr. Truman and Mr. John Newberry?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; practically all of the interests in the office. I carry their powers of attorney.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And there are others also interested?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What others?

Mr. SMITH. Mrs. Truman Newberry's individual interests and Mrs. John S. Newberry's individual interests, and their sons.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What did John Newberry say to you?

Mr. SMITH. He came to me, as near as I can remember it, the latter part of February or the first part of March—it was the late winter—and told me that if the committee made any demands for campaign funds, if his brother should be in the senatorial race, to give them the money. I do not remember whether he mentioned Mr. Templeton's name or not. I knew Mr. Templeton quite well. The first call was from him. The checks that were given after that were all given to Mr. Templeton the same as the first one.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You have given us, in substance, all that transpired, have you?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. No other discussion, except to direct you, if they wanted money and came and asked for it, to give it to them?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. No limits as to amounts placed on you?
 Mr. SMITH. No, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And no reports made to him as to the amounts you paid?
 Mr. SMITH. No, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And no inquiries by him as to what it was used for?
 Mr. SMITH. No.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or as to how much was used?
 Mr. SMITH. My power of attorney is a very broad one.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Truman Newberry asked you about the expenses at times, did he not?
 Mr. SMITH. I do not remember that he did.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You reported to him every day what was going on, did you not?
 Mr. SMITH. No.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you not send him a telegram every night of what occurred during the day?
 Mr. SMITH. I sent him a telegram generally at night regarding what the papers said.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. About what the newspapers were saying?
 Mr. SMITH. About what the newspapers were saying.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I do not want anybody to accuse us of absolutely misleading the witness when it is plain he is mistaken. May I call your attention to page 219, to the following telegram:

DETROIT, MICH., July 28, 1918.

Lieut. TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.
 Third Naval District, 280 Broadway, New York:

I misinformed you this morning the date of close of regular expenses. Should have said August 27. The circular work, advertising, clerical help, postage, and all regular overhead expenses will naturally continue until primary. Have written.

FRED P. SMITH.

Did you send that telegram?
 Mr. SMITH. Yes; I did.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Then, it was not about when the primary was; it was when the expenses would cease that you were talking with him and writing him about. Is that right?
 Mr. SMITH. That is probably it. I do not know what the conversation was, but I had told him July 27. I misinformed him as to the month.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You had been talking to him. He wanted to know when these expenses were going to stop, did he not?

Mr. SMITH. I do not believe so. I think his conversation was about the drain on the balances in the office, and he was complaining about the money that was being spent.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Complaining about the large amount of expenses being drawn?

Mr. SMITH. Of the money that was being spent and drawn from the account all the time and put into his brother's account to keep from being overdrawn.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And his funds as well as his brother's were used?

Mr. SMITH. And everybody else's.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. To keep up the amounts that were on the books charged against John?

Mr. SMITH. To keep his account from being overdrawn.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he wanted to know when this thing was going to end. Is that the idea?

Mr. SMITH. I think that is right.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You got the date wrong in your talk, and so you sent this telegram to him?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; that is right.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you say:

"I misinformed you this morning the date of close of regular expenses. Should have said August 27."
 In other words, you should have said that the expenses would then be cut off?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING (reading):
 "The circular work, advertising, clerical help, postage, and other regular overhead expenses will naturally continue until primary."

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And that is what he had been talking with you about over the phone?

Mr. SMITH. He was kicking about the balances.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN. Any questions, Senator WOLCOTT?
 Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; I want to find out about the checking out of these funds by you, Mr. Smith, to the Newberry primary committee. Those checks were all drawn against what account in your office?

Mr. SMITH. Against Mr. John S. Newberry's account.
 Senator WOLCOTT. Are you positive they were invariably drawn against that account and no other?

Mr. SMITH. Absolutely.
 Senator WOLCOTT. You spoke of transferring funds from the other accounts into his.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir. It is a procedure that has been current for years. When one account gets low it is fed from the others. We have 12 different accounts. Of course, we do not feed from the corporations, but the personal ones. I have done it this last week.

Senator WOLCOTT. How many of those personal accounts were there?

Mr. SMITH. There were 10 at that time.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you transfer funds from Truman H. Newberry's account over to John S. Newberry's?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; or Mr. Truman's to John S., or from Mrs. John S., around either way, and always have done it.

Senator WOLCOTT. All these funds in those various accounts, barring the corporation accounts, went to supply ready money to John S. Newberry's account?

Mr. SMITH. No; I do not think they all did in this case.

Senator WOLCOTT. Then, the funds in their two accounts went to keep the John S. Newberry account up to a sufficient fund so as to enable you to have enough money out of that account to take care of these primary expenses?

Mr. SMITH. In cases where there were overdrafts they would make up enough balance to cover the overdraft.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were those funds advanced from Truman H. Newberry's account and Mrs. Truman H. Newberry's account to John S. Newberry returned in due course to those accounts from which they were originally taken?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.
 Senator WOLCOTT. Have you the books showing all these transactions?
 Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.
 Senator WOLCOTT. Were those books taken by the cashier down to Grand Rapids?
 Mr. SMITH. I do not remember about it. I did not pay any attention to what he took.

Mr. SMITH. We only have a limited space there in our offices. Every so often we have to clean them out with the enormous amount of business that comes through that office every year.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; but this was only a period of about two or three months of financing. How did you keep your books—in loose leaves or bound books?

Mr. SMITH. In bound books.
 Senator WOLCOTT. Did you ever inquire of this cashier what he did with the books and checks?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir.
 Senator WOLCOTT. Did you ever make any investigation about their whereabouts after they came back from Grand Rapids?

Mr. SMITH. No; I did not.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Well, do you know the total amount that you charged against John S. Newberry on the books?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know what was charged, but I know that the credits, taking credits for what came back, because there were moneys coming back along about the time that the report was made up. It made, as near as I recollect, either $99,000 or $98,900. There was a discrepancy of $900.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What do you mean by a discrepancy?
 Mr. SMITH. Well, the report showed, after it was filed by this office, $99,000, and his books showed $99,900.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I think my recollection is that the report shows $99,900. I may be in error about that.

Mr. SMITH. I do not think so. I think it is the other way about.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you advance moneys in cash to anybody?

Mr. SMITH. Probably half a dozen times—something like that.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. To whom?

Mr. SMITH. When somebody would telephone in to meet their pay roll, and they would be out of town, they would ask me to protect their pay rolls, and Mr. Emery would come up, or Mr. Templeton, or Mr. Paul King, and I would give them the check there for cash.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. For how much?

Mr. SMITH. Well, a thousand dollars; I don't remember particularly the amounts.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you any books showing those checks?

Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

Mr. Paul King testified inter alia as follows (H., 459-472, 514-536, 550-556):

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You had a chairman and secretary of your county committee in nearly every county, did you not?

Mr. KING. I think in every county but Chippewa.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What is that county?

Mr. KING. The home county of ex-Gov. Osborn, who was also a candidate for the nomination, and I felt it discourteous to go into his county and try to organize his political opponents against him, and we did not go into that county.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. So that you had an organization in every county outside of that?

Mr. KING. I think so.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was money put into every one of those counties where you had an organization?

Mr. KING. I think so; practically every county.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you got the list of expenditures to those various chairmen?

Mr. KING. I have not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Money that they handled? (H., 334.)

Mr. KING. I have not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who they are?

Mr. KING. I have not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Where are they?

Mr. KING. I don't know. (H., 335.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. This diversion started at the point of finding out how much money went into each county?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I think you said you could not give the various amounts. I thought I would call them off, but I don't want to unless I am obliged to. You can not give that to me?

Mr. KING. I can not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What became of the record of that?

Mr. KING. I don't know, Mr. Lucking.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Those records were in your office up to the day of the primary, were they not?

Mr. KING. I think so. (H., 335.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING (interposing). Did you report to him practically every day?

Mr. MURFIN. Wait a minute. Let him finish his answer. You considered yourself what?

Mr. KING. I considered myself a free agent, a free lance, to do just as I felt should be done in the management of that campaign, in the way I conducted it. All questions were referred to me for decision and were passed upon to the best of my ability. With the assistance of Mr. Templeton I conducted that campaign. I am glad of it and proud of it.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you report every day to Mr. Newberry?

Mr. KING. I wrote him very frequently, and when I was out meeting people I wrote him practically every day, telling him whom I met and what they said and how they felt about his candidacy.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How the campaign was progressing?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And went down to consult with him frequently?

Mr. KING. Several times; not frequently.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. About matters of policy?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir. (H., 469.)

I was the organization manager of that Newberry campaign, and I started out to make an organization that was the best one Michigan ever had, and I tried my best to do it, and I think I did. (H., 472.)

Mr. King further testified at the hearing:

I made up one set of field reports and took them or sent them down to Commander Newberry. (H., 606.)

I did report to Mr. Newberry by letter and telegram practically daily. (H., 607.)

Mr. Newberry approved of my plan of publicity. (H., 609.)

On April 14, 1918, Mr. Newberry wrote Mr. King that:

I am glad Mr. Warner (three times governor of Michigan) is scared out for the present, and as long as we keep up our publicity work at full pressure it will be harder and harder for any new man to get any kind of a start that will make it seem worth while for him to be a serious candidate. (B. E., 704.)

Mr. Thomas P. Phillips testified as follows:

I reside in Detroit, and received $60 a week from the Detroit News before I went to work for the Newberry committee. Mr. King hired me at $100 a week as publicity man for the campaign. I made four trips to New York and saw Mr. Newberry and took some moving pictures of Mr. Newberry. I talked to Mr. Newberry, and from what I gathered of his past life I wrote certain publicity. (H., 352.)

Mr. King told me that he had made arrangements to take more moving pictures of Mr. Newberry, and asked me to go to New York and see that the pictures were made. (H., 353.)

Senator Newberry posed for his pictures in my presence on the wooden battleship in the park. I O. K'd the bill for this picture, but did not handle the money. The company that circulated the moving picture was the Dunn Master Plate Co., of Detroit, and I personally paid them $800. This company was paid in all $3,788. (H., 354.)

This wooden battleship that Senator Newberry posed on was designed to encourage enlistments, and was in Union Square, New York. (H., 355.)

I got up quite a lot of publicity. If there was a newspaper in Michigan that it was not published in, it was because I missed it. Mr. H. A. Hopkins had charge of placing the advertising. I helped to write some of the advertising and advised with Mr. Hopkins and Mr. King. (H., 356.)

Mr. John S. Newberry (brother of the sitting Member, and who contributed $99,900 to the Newberry campaign fund) testified inter alia as follows. (H., 317):

Senator POMERENE. And you want the committee to understand, do you, that you placed no limit upon the amount which Smith was to draw out of your account for the financing of that campaign?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I never thought about it. I just said, "Go ahead and use what money you want."

Senator POMERENE. Do you mean to say you do not know whether any money was borrowed from one or the other?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I don't.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The fact is that since your father's death your brother has practically run your business affairs?

Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir. (H., 319.)

A specimen of the methods resorted to in this campaign is disclosed in the testimony of Mr. George Murray, who was president of the Railway Men's Relief Association, of over 10,000 members, with headquarters at Muskegon.

He was editor of the monthly magazine published by his association.

In May, 1918, Mr. King and Mr. Floyd came to him and paid him $300 to work for Mr. Newberry, and an additional $400 was paid to the magazine and went into the association's funds.

Up to that time Mr. Murray had not advocated the nomination of Mr. Newberry in his magazine nor had he published anything about Mr. Newberry's candidacy until Mr. King and Mr. Floyd told him "that they would take care of him on the proposition." (B. E., 195.)

After being paid this money Mr. Murray started out to work for Mr. Newberry and to line up the railroad men for him.

Mr. Murray then started making speeches among the railway men for Mr. Newberry and in all attended 33 meetings.

In the month of July an advertisement was published in Mr. Murray's railway magazine and in August Mr. Murray published a personal letter "direct from him to the railroad men." In this letter Mr. Murray says:

MUSKEGON, MICH., July 30, 1918.

To my friends in the railway service:

I feel it is due you all to know why I am indorsing and supporting the candidacy of Commander Truman H. Newberry for the office of United States Senator.

Mr. Newberry's record, public and private, is such as to inspire the confidence of every man.

I have investigated his character and find that it stands the test.

I trust that my friends among the railway men of Michigan will put their shoulders to the wheel and make this result absolutely certain. The primaries come on August 27.

I personally indorse Mr. Newberry's candidacy, the man, and the principles of sturdy Americanism which he represents.

Fraternally, yours,

G. R. MURRAY, Supreme President.

(B. E., 203, 204.)

"NONCOMMITTAL" AND "FLIMSY."

On August 8, 1918, nearly three weeks before the primary election, Mr. Vandenberg, of the Grand Rapids Herald, wrote Mr. Newberry as follows:

DEAR SIR: I desire to direct your attention to certain phases of the Michigan Republican senatorial campaign which seem to demand very clear and explicit public statement from you well in advance of primary election day.

I direct your attention to these specific charges which have appeared in responsible newspapers. They are charges, furthermore, which find kinship in very general rumor and report. I fully realize that gossip is deadly and a ruthless assassin. But gossip, in this instance, is too widespread to be longer ignored. It charges you and your associates with the expenditure of money running into six figures in the erection of your senatorial organization. Such a situation must be as intolerable for you, if these reports are false, as it is intolerable for the State if the reports are true. Therefore, it is a situation which must be challenged, because if not challenged by you it will have to be challenged by the electorate.

While this letter is purely personal to you, I should be glad to have an answer from you which could be published simultaneously with this letter so that the issue may be made clear.

To which letter the sitting Member replied by telegram as follows.

NEW YORK, August 11.

A. H. VANDENBERG,

Editor the Herald, Grand Rapids, Mich.

I heartily concur in your views and suggestions as stated in your letter of August 8 just received. I have not paid nor am I obligated to pay anything in connection with the senatorial primary nor have I any fiscal information thereof beyond the assurance of the Newberry committee that their accounts will be filed as required by law and all expenditures made only for such purposes as allowed by law. I have forwarded your letter to the committee requesting them to send you a clear, comprehensive, and adequate statement for publication with your letter as you suggest.

I thank you for writing me and appreciate the opportunity thus offered to state the truth.

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

(Record, p. 791.)

Mr. Newberry's comment to his campaign manager on this reply to Mr. Vandenberg is as follows:

I am inclosing a copy of my noncommittal reply to the Grand Rapids people, which covers the situation in a rather flimsy manner * * *. (Mr. Newberry's letter to Mr. King of Aug. 9, 1918, B. E., 881.)

In this same letter to Mr. King, Mr. Newberry, the sitting Member, amongst other things made the following observations:

There is much more information about Osborn's (also-a candidate) present plight I will tell you when I see you. The statement that he is short of ammunition is an absolute fact. Whether or not this was a feeler I will leave to you to judge when I talk to you about it.

I have noticed Osborn's strength with the labor people, and, of course, do not understand it, but am thankful we have a fighting minority, which I hope has gained enough time to include my views in their circular of the workmen's publicity committee.

I am inclosing copy of my noncommittal reply to the Grand Rapids people, which covers the situation in a rather flimsy manner.

A public outcry and warning against the improper use of money in Mr. Newberry's campaign was made by Hon. Luren D. Dickinson, Lieutenant governor of Michigan, in the form of a letter addressed to the sitting Member, which was widely published throughout the State of Michigan and was as follows:

AUGUST 22, 1918.

HON. TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY,

Brooklyn Navy Yard, New York.

DEAR SIR: Men of all walks of life, who have the best interests of our State at heart, believe the men who are conducting your campaign for United States Senator are conducting one that will bring one of the greatest scandals on our State that Michigan politics ever saw and have asked me to take the lead in attempting to rid our State of this blight. I note by your statement that you say you do not know of these things.

In giving you the information I will give you the terms that I hear everywhere in the 62 counties in which I have been recently. I have always had the highest regard for you and must believe you will relieve the Republican Party and the State of a campaign that is now being likened to the notorious Lorimer campaign of Illinois a few years ago. The terms "boodle" and "rotten" seem to be general terms that I hear.

Every section of the State shows evidence of an expensive newspaper campaign costing thousands and thousands of dollars. Thousands of men are liberally paid for work at many more thousands of dollars, an expensive suite of offices with a large force sending out hundreds of thousands of letters to influential voters at more thousands of dollars, thousands of autos already engaged for use on primary day at many more thousands; that practically every opponent of the primary system is backing your campaign; and that hundreds of the experts who have figured in or conducted for money the wet campaigns of the past are among the most active of your supporters.

Conservative estimates say everywhere from $250,000 to $500,000 is being used. The good people of the State are apparently powerless to give the voters these matters on short notice. In case you get the most votes you must expect to have the placing of your name on the election ballot contested. If by technical reasons you succeed, then you must expect every church and moral organization to work until election night to keep our fair State from the baneful influence that success following such methods would leave for years to come.

Should you be successful at the polls, you must expect a legislative investigation that would be demanded by an indignant populace. And if by technicalities you could overcome this, you will probably have to face a Democratic Senate which will unseat you, as it justly unseated William Lorimer, Jr., because of flagrant disregard in your behalf of Michigan's primary laws. The effect on the Republican Party, with the people demanding cleaner things, can not be estimated. Already we hear the Democrats will make the corrupting use of money in your campaign one of their great campaign arguments.

I can not believe you understand the situation, and if you did you would come to the rescue. I am, therefore, asking you in behalf of the old Republican Party, clean politics, preservation of the primaries, social and business interest, to withdraw from this campaign and save the everlasting disgrace to the party and the State from a pollution that would stay for years. Hoping you may act favorably and retain the high esteem in which you have been held in the State, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

L. D. DICKINSON,

Lieutenant Governor of Michigan.

After the primaries Mr. Newberry wrote to ex-Gov. Chase S. Osborn, in answer to a telegram, and said the following:

NEW YORK CITY,

Sunday, September 1, 1918.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: Your cordial telegram assuring me of your earnest support is all that was needed to insure the defeat of Ford in November. I fully realize that my personality is submerged in the issues that confront our party in our State. Many times in the past few months I have envied your ability and privilege to talk, and when your voice rang clear and strong throughout State and Nation on the menace of Ford I wanted to wire you Godspeed in your patriotic work.

Your deeply appreciated telegram of support helps me to visualize the statesman, the sportsman (hunter), and gentleman that I have always known you to be.

Cordially, yours,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

In reply to this Mr. Osborn wrote him an open letter, which was published generally throughout Michigan and which reads as follows:

SEPTEMBER 17, 1918.

MY DEAR COMMANDER: I have read your letter. Thank you for your sentiments. I shall support you. Already I have straightened out entanglements that would have been hurtful to your success. I am not interested in you personally a particle. The entire matter is so far beyond personal consideration and transcends individual proportions to an extent that only public welfare may be thought of. You can be elected; no doubt you will be. My idea is that the thing for you to do is to honestly confess that you broke the law and that you knew all about the campaign, but that you did not realize the enormity of your offense. In such a position you would be entrenched in honesty, I fully believe. And an indulgent people would forgive you and fight for you, because of the past services they think you have given and what they have been told you are giving now. In addition this action would make for your name an honorable place in the history of Michigan. Otherwise the future will curse you.

The plea can not be honestly made that you spent money in excess because you were fighting Ford, because you had begun your reckless campaign long before Ford was mentioned, and had already transgressed the law. Nor can you plead "you did not know." That would prove you to be both an ass and a liar, which I choose to think you are not. I am for you only to save the Nation and the State from the curse of Fordism. A vote for Ford is a vote for the Kaiser right now, as I view the case.

Yours, truly,

CHASE S. OSBORN.

Yet in the face of widely published warnings that a searching investigation would surely be made as to expenditures of money, those persons in charge of the campaign of the sitting Member exhibited indifference in preserving books, accounts, and vouchers, and now seek refuge from questions, the answers to which might prove awkward, by asking your committee to believe that the books are "lost" or have "mysteriously disappeared."

On June 15, 1918, Mr. Newberry, the sitting Member, wrote to Mr. King in these significant words:

* * * The unheard-of developments in Mr. Ford's case really require pages of comment, and I am going to hope that after 10 days or more that you will come down alone or with Allan, when we can give some time to a thorough review of the situation as it then exists and plan for the future. * * * (B. E., 777.)

The foregoing is but a sample of the large volume of correspondence and reports which passed daily between Mr. Newberry and his campaign managers.

MONEY WAS PLACED IN EVERY COUNTY—BUT NOW THE RECORDS ARE GONE.

Mr. King testified:

Q. You had a chairman and secretary of your county committee in nearly every county, did you not?—A. I think in every county but Chippewa.

Q. Was money put into every one of those counties where you had an organization?—A. I think so; practically every county.

Q. Have you got the list of expenditures to those various chairmen?—A. I have not.

Q. Money that they handled?—A. I have not.

Q. Who they are?—A. I have not.

Q. Where are they?—A. I don't know. * * *

Q. Those records were in your office up to the day of the primary, were they not?—A. I think so. * * * (H., 334, 335.)

At the outset Mr. Newberry was confronted with the fact that he was little known in Michigan.

At an interview in New York on the last Sunday in December, 1917, Mr. Jay Hayden, a correspondent of the Detroit News at Washington, told Mr. Newberry that "one of the great obstacles to his candidacy" would be that he was little known in Michigan; that he doubted if he was known to a thousand persons throughout the State. (B. E., 61.)

Mr. Hayden refused the offer of Mr. Newberry to manage his campaign, and departed from New York warning Mr. Newberry against "a barrel campaign" in Michigan. (B. E., 61.) After this advice to Mr. Newberry from Mr. Hayden he was never spoken to again or requested by either Mr. Newberry or Mr. Cody to take the management of their campaign. (B. E., 61.)

This interview in New York had been arranged in December, 1917, in Washington by Mr. Fred Cody, who represented himself to Mr. Hayden as the agent of Mr. Newberry, and told him that Mr. Newberry was considering becoming a candidate for United States Senator. (B. E., 58.)

Mr. Paul King, who subsequently became Mr. Newberry's campaign manager, also told Mr. Newberry at his first interview in February, 1918, in New York that he (Mr. Newberry) was not known in Michigan and that he must prepare for a large and expensive campaign of publicity. (B. E., 664, 665.)

MR. NEWBERRY'S AGENT, MR. CODY, PREDICTED "A BARREL CAMPAIGN" BY NEWBERRY.

Later on in January, 1918, this same Fred Cody told James Sweinhart that "Mr. Newberry would make Mr. Hayden such a financially advantageous offer that he could not afford to reject it," and that "it will be a great time for the boys in Michigan, because they will spend a barrel of money." (B. E., 66, 67.)

In the month of April, 1918, Mr. Cody was talking to Mr. Sweinhart in Mr. Newberry's office in New York and told him that he had been out in Michigan and that "he understood the lid was off and that the sky was the limit so far as expenditures were concerned." (B. E., 68.)

In December, 1917, Mr. Newberry sent Mr. Fred Cody to Washington with a personal letter of introduction to Mr. George Miller, of the Detroit News. This letter stated that Mr. Cody had "some confidential matters" to talk over with Mr. Miller for Mr. Newberry. (B. E., 640.)

Mr. Cody was very close to Mr. Newberry and was often seen in Mr. Newberry's office in New York during the progress of the campaign, as well as in Detroit once a month, and in the Detroit office of the Newberry estate. (B. E., 140, 311, and H., 365.)

Mr. King testified:

Q. When you were over in New York advising with Mr. Newberry, Mr. Fred Cody was present there, was he not?—A. Yes, sir. (H., 535.)

The Michigan primary and corrupt practices acts prohibit—

The hiring of workers at and before the primary.

The disbursement of any money by any person not the candidate or his committee treasurer.

The doing by any person of any act which the candidate himself could not do.

SAMPLE OF REPORTS.

Mr. King tells Mr. Newberry how "work" is done in a letter to him on August 15, in which he says:

* * * Our only weakness is with the labor vote, and my reports indicate that we are getting stronger there. The Flint Labor News, which has been strongly Osborn, is weakening, and I am sending a man there to-day with a page advertisement for insertion just before the primaries. (B. E., 888.)

It is disclosed by Government Exhibit No. 60 (B. E., 253) that the sum of $176,586 was disbursed by the Truman H. Newberry senatorial committee, according to statements on file in the office of the county clerk of Wayne, Mich., and this does not include several thousand dollars disbursed later in payment of additional expenses incurred.

The majority of the committee say: "The amount of money spent at the primary was large—too large—* * *," and, further, "Your committee condemns the use of such a large sum of money in any primary campaign * * *." To these expressions I will simply add that the law and public policy also condemn the use "of such a large sum of money in any primary campaign."

The men who managed the campaign for Mr. Newberry, the sitting member, exhibited fertility, efficiency, and industry that could well be admired, if employed in transactions not discreditable, but in this episode, as is apt to be the fate of most feats of left-handed wisdom, their mystifying methods and their juggling of accounts aroused a public resentment which in no small degree contributed to the very results these campaign managers thought they were avoiding—defection and trouble.

The failure of the Newberry campaign committee to keep regular accounts, the shifting of records and papers concerning the campaign from one place to another, the juggling of money from one account to another, and the adoption of mysterious and unusual methods and roundabout ways regarding matters that might just as well have been performed in the open are not the methods and habits of candidates seeking to obey the law. This mysterious method of accounting prompted Senator EDGE to ask the following questions:

Senator EDGE. What was the reason for adopting what would seem to me to be a very complicated system of bookkeeping for a temporary activity like an election campaign is necessarily? It seems to me that it would meet all the necessities of the law in making your report if you had kept the usual ledger, journal, and daybook and entered the accounts in the ordinary way. All this percentage is not required at all under the law.

Mr. FLOYD. No. * * *

Senator EDGE. It is quite simple to do that without working out a percentage basis. You would simply charge publicity at whatever it is, the men employed in that particular work, copy writing, etc.

Mr. FLOYD. We did that indirectly. Some of these men had various duties.

Senator EDGE. And you felt it necessary to subdivide the duties of a man who happened to be engaged at times in different activities.

Mr. FLOYD. There was another reason for that, Senator.

Senator EDGE. I am free to admit that I can not see any reason.

Senator POMERENE. I have the same inquiry in my mind that Senator EDGE has * * *. (H., 662, 663.)

He who in possession of evidence, in the form of books, papers, and vouchers, tending to exculpate him carefully preserves the same and is anxious and willing at the proper time to exhibit the same.

He who knows of the whereabouts of vouchers, books, and records which he suspects may in the future confound and embarrass him spends but little time or effort to preserve such evidence.

The testimony in this case shows that the senatorial campaign in Michigan in 1918 partook more of the character of an auction than an election. From its inception to its conclusion it was a reckless and illegal foray of opulent men—a foray conducted with a disregard of public morality and with a boastfulness that would be comical if it were not sinister. If the desperate and dubious expedients resorted to in the senatorial contest in Michigan in 1918 to obtain a seat in this body were to become the general rule or the custom of persons seeking membership here, then no man of limited means—indeed, no man of ample fortune, if honest—could enter the senatorial contest with even a conjectural probability of success.

To encourage the methods practiced in the senatorial contest in Michigan in 1918 would be to embolden and to multiply the most baleful assaults that can be made upon representative government.

The testimony shows that the sitting Member was privy to and inevitably, in the nature of events, had knowledge of those facts concerning his own campaign, which scores of thousands of men in Michigan well knew. He was warned by the editor of the Grand Rapids Herald and by Lieut. Gov. Dickinson as to the improper course of his campaign. His agents and managers kept him fully and constantly supplied with reports, but he failed to put a stop to the disbursement of moneys made by his agents, with the obvious purpose of improperly influencing voters, and it is puerile to say that a seat in this body thus obtained may not be declared vacant because, forsooth, the candidate says he was oblivious to that one feature of his own campaign, which overshadowed all others of the contest, which feature was so widely discussed and so notorious as to be known not only in Michigan but throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Of all the persons interested in that campaign, Truman H. Newberry, the sitting Member, was the most interested. He was the candidate; he was the man for and in whose behalf the expenditures were made; he was the luminary around whom all the satellites revolved; from him they received their light and heat and life. To him the daily reports were made; from him the managers received suggestions, words of encouragement, and orders to proceed "at full pressure." He was the motive power of the "organization" built to secure for himself a seat in this body—an organization which moved with a celerity and momentum that crushed or purchased opposition to its plans or purposes.

The credentials of the sitting Member are stained by fraud and tainted by illegal expenditures of money. His seat should be declared vacant.

(Signed) HENRY F. ASHURST.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair. In his judgment am I entitled to call the resolution from the table for the consideration of the Senate at this time without any motion or without unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already laid the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. Then I ask—

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, has the Chair ruled that it takes no motion to bring the resolution before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not. The resolution was introduced yesterday, and it is laid before the Senate under the rule as a resolution coming over from the previous day; and it is now in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, my understanding is that that is the last order of the morning business. I inquire if the preceding morning business has been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been disposed of.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read to the Senate a proposed unanimous-consent agreement for the information and action of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] asks unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on the third calendar day upon which the Senate is in session after Sunday, December 25, 1921, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon Senate resolution 172, declaring Truman H. Newberry to be a duly elected Senator from the State of Michigan, and so forth, and upon any amendment that may then be pending or that may be offered thereto; and that on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or for a longer period than one hour.

Mr. SPENCER. The Secretary omitted two words written in pencil, namely, the words "or substitute," after the word "amendment."

The VICE PRESIDENT. A substitute is an amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no doubt of that, but, at the request of Senators on the other side, those two words were inserted.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to modify the request for unanimous consent so that it will read "any amendment or substitute that may then be pending."

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I always dislike to object to a proposed unanimous-consent agreement, but I see no reason why we should try to hasten a vote upon this question. Under the agreement which has just been proposed a few Senators could occupy practically all the time in a discussion of the question and others would be precluded from an opportunity of presenting their views if they wished to do so. For that reason I object.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator withhold his objection for just a moment?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that, as I understand and interpret the unanimous-consent agreement as proposed, debate may commence to-day or at any time and may be continued without interruption from now until the time fixed in the unanimous-consent agreement for a vote. It does seem to me that ample opportunity will be afforded every Senator to submit his views.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, there will be other questions in the meantime to be discussed, and we shall have limitation upon debate in relation to other matters. I like to be agreeable, but in this instance I insist upon my objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly; I will withhold it for a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it has developed during the course of previous discussion of this matter that some of the Senators who are members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections that reported the resolution, notably the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and, perhaps, some others, in the discharge of other duties imposed upon them by the Senate will be absent a portion of the time between now and the date proposed to be fixed for the final disposition of the resolution. It is important that the Senate shall have the advantage of their study and their information respecting this subject. The record is very voluminous, and many of us have not had an opportunity and will not be afforded the opportunity of going through it in detail. The nature of this controversy is such that every Senator ought to be fully and fairly advised with respect to it. The unanimous-consent agreement, as I recall it, provides that on the day fixed for final consideration each Senator may speak one hour. As suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], ample opportunity will be afforded in the meantime for complete discussion of the case. The resolution is privileged, and without regard to the provisions of the unanimous-consent agreement, it may be brought before the Senate at almost any time.

Mr. KING. It is here now.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is before the Senate now, and it can be kept before the Senate under the proposed unanimous-consent agreement so long as any Senator is ready to discuss it.

I realize, Mr. President, that this case ought to have been brought before the Senate a long time ago; that the delay in presenting it is almost inexplicable, and that this is rather an inopportune time to discuss this subject in the Senate; but in view of the well-known facts I have stated, that ample opportunity for consideration and discussion will be afforded under the proposed unanimous-consent agreement and that such opportunity may be denied if the unanimous-consent agreement is not entered into, and a vote may be had before Senators are ready to present their views respecting the subject, I express the hope that my friend the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], for the convenience of the Senators whom I have mentioned, and in order that the Senate may have the benefit of their study relating to this subject, may find it consistent not to make an objection.

I realize that there is much force in the statement which the Senator from Florida makes, and I repeat that I can not understand why the resolution was not presented some months ago; I can not understand why the report was made with no resolution or motion accompanying it; but the fact is that the unanimous-consent agreement now proposed is a fair one; it affords every Senator an ample opportunity to discuss the issues in the case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator pardon me for an interruption?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to address an inquiry to the Senator from Missouri for the enlightenment of those Senators who are endeavoring to follow the argument of the Senator from Arkansas. What will be the status of the resolution, as the Senator from Missouri understands, between this time and the reconvening of Congress after the Christmas holidays?

Mr. SPENCER. My understanding is that, in accordance with the usual custom in the Senate, the resolution will, of course, be open to such discussion as any Senator may see fit to give it, even if it is not the unfinished business upon the calendar. I desire to add further—and I should like the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to listen to this statement—that my understanding is that when we meet on the 5th day of December and the session opens there will be ample opportunity to discuss the resolution from that time until it is finally called up at the last of the year. If we take a recess at Christmas time, then, undoubtedly, the resolution would not come up for final action until January, because the unanimous-consent agreement provides that it shall be considered on the third calendar day on which the Senate is in session after the 25th of December.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Arkansas will pardon me further, of course, we all appreciate that no matter what subject is before the Senate a Senator may speak on anything he sees fit to speak upon, but, of course, if the tariff measure, for instance, were before the Senate and were the unfinished business, the business engaging the attention of the Senate, a discussion of any other subject would not have the attention, in all probability, that it would receive if that particular subject were before the Senate. Inasmuch as this is in the nature of a privileged matter, I desired to ascertain the views of the Senator from Missouri as to whether the resolution could be called up at any time and made the business before the Senate?

Mr. SPENCER. I have no doubt that it could. It is privileged at any time after the 25th day of December; in fact, before that time it could be called up and made the business of the Senate, and I am free to say further to the Senator from Montana that I should be very glad, so far as I have any control over the matter, to call it up immediately upon the reconvening of the Senate after the 25th day of December, so that the Senate may have at least three days in which to consider it.

Mr. ROBINSON. With respect to the inquiry submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], I wish to say that there can be no question as to the fact that the resolution is privileged by its very nature, and that there is nothing in the unanimous-consent agreement proposed to be entered into that in any way diminishes or subtracts from its privileged character. Not only can the Senator from Missouri, by calling up the resolution in the contested-election case, displace other business that may be pending before the Senate, but any Senator securing recognition from the Chair may do the same thing. That is the effect of the privilege attaching to the resolution, and that is the point I seek to make, that the effect of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, if entered into, will be to give more time and opportunity for debate than will probably be afforded if unanimous consent is denied.

It was stated yesterday by a number of eminent Senators that they are not ready to proceed with the discussion of this case. If the proposed unanimous-consent agreement is entered into, they will have opportunity to make preparation, whereas if it is not entered into they may be compelled either to refrain from discussing it or to proceed at once to discuss it. In that view of the subject, and for the benefit of the Senate, in order that the Senate may have the result of the study of the Senators whom I have mentioned, I hope that my friend from Florida will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I can not understand why the Senate is undertaking to pursue a different course in connection with this resolution from that which it ordinarily pursues in reference to any other bill or resolution before the Senate. Why are we so anxious to have a unanimous-consent agreement before the debate begins? Who is able to state or to have any intelligent opinion as to how long the debate is going to last and how long it may occupy the Senate before it is ready to vote? It seems to me we ought to do as we do on all other occasions, namely, proceed with the consideration of the resolution, and as the discussion progresses Senators will be able to determine how the debate is going to hold out and eventually a unanimous-consent agreement will naturally follow.

I do not think that we ought to postpone the vote on the resolution until next year. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the argument which has been made by the Senator from Arkansas that this case ought to have been brought up long ago is a complete answer against now waiting and putting it off further. I agree with the Senator from Arkansas that this matter has been too long delayed, and I think it is the general opinion of the country that the Senate owes it to itself and to its own self-respect that questions of this kind should be determined promptly and not be postponed, but while Senators are objecting to postponement, in the next breath they are asking for another postponement and a delay that seems to me to be unreasonable.

What will be the parliamentary procedure if we enter into the proposed unanimous-consent agreement? Nobody anticipates that from now until next January we are going to take up all of the time of the Senate in debating this proposition. Other business will come before the Senate; the unfinished business will be taken up; and the result will be that when a Senator wants to do so he can discuss this resolution or he can discuss the proposition which may then be pending before the Senate. The question will be in and it will be out, so that no consecutive discussion will take place until just a few days before the time comes to vote. Then, under the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, a few Senators may be able to utilize all the time.

I do not expect to take part in the discussion, Mr. President; so far as I am concerned, I am ready to vote now, and I have no desire to crowd other Senators who say they want further consideration; I am willing to give them any reasonable length of time; but I believe they will have that opportunity if we proceed with the debate. There never will come a time, no matter when we fix the day for voting, but that some Senator will be absent, but that some Senator will be discommoded, and it seems to me the case has already been held up longer than it ought to have been held up.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as a general proposition I can not take much exception to what the Senator from Nebraska has said, but the conditions in this instance are rather peculiar. In the first place, this is a question of the highest personal privilege, and the Senator from Missouri and perhaps other Senators have the right to call it up at any moment. I am one of those who feel that there should be very full discussion of this case. If the right is on the side of the sitting Member, it is not going to hurt him to have the matter discussed; if the right is on the other side, it is not going to hurt the American people to have it discussed. This, however, is the situation: Unfortunately the Senator from Utah and myself are on the special committee that has been appointed to investigate the Haitian and Santo Domingo matter. We have had rather extensive hearings on the subject here. It is found necessary that we go to Haiti. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], is very positive in his conviction on that subject, and with the knowledge that I have I share that conviction, because it is going to be exceedingly difficult to get at the truth of that controversy unless we can be on the ground. I am satisfied that that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. When does the committee expect to leave for Haiti?

Mr. POMERENE. The arrangements were made to leave on Saturday or Sunday, as I recall. The Senator from Illinois is here and will correctly inform the Senate.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before I yield the floor I want to take up that matter. Of course, I do not need to tell the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from Utah that I do not want to discommode either one of them.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, I am sure of that.

Mr. NORRIS. If they had to go to-day, I would feel more inclined to agree to this unanimous-consent request; but if they go Saturday or if they go Sunday they will be able to give to the Senate before they go their views, which I for one will be glad to hear, because I know they are posted on the question; but they will have ample time to debate it fully before they leave. When they go there is not any doubt but that other Members going on the same trip will not agree with them as to their votes on the Newberry resolution, and they can easily pair, so that there will be no loss to either side so far as the voting is concerned, and we will not be deprived of the addresses of the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Utah and the information that may be contained in them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, with all due respect to what the Senator has said, this is one of the questions on which I will not under any circumstances pair with anybody. I have gone into this subject very thoroughly, I think. I have reached a conclusion about it. There has been some uncertainty as to how long the hearings on the island will take. There is that uncertainty, and we have been very desirous to arrange a time which would not only permit of full discussion of this case here in the Senate, but would give us an opportunity to be back here when the subject is taken up for its final consideration. I had been hoping that Senators would not object to this unanimous-consent agreement. There will be plenty of opportunity for everyone to discuss it. If there were an attempt to make a unanimous-consent agreement to vote within the next few days, I certainly should object to that. I do not think that would be just to any Senator here. I thought we had practically solved the problem by agreeing upon the terms as they have been indicated.

Mr. NORRIS. My idea is that we ought not to have at the present time any unanimous-consent agreement. I do not see any necessity of any. I would not find fault with the Senator if he objected. I am not trying to preclude a full debate of all the questions involved here, but I am opposed to this long delay, and I am opposed also to fixing a time so far in the future for voting on a question that ought to be debated fully before the American people, and the debate ought to be consecutive. There ought not to be an hour's debate upon the Newberry resolution and then a day's debate upon the railroad bill and then a half day's debate on the funding bill, and then, perhaps, further debate on the tariff bill, and then go back to this matter again.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NORRIS. In a moment. We will not have a consecutive debate on this proposition if the time is fixed so far in the future. If it were a question that had been debated, I would not care so much; but it ought to be debated, it ought to be discussed, it ought to be done fully and completely; and when we go that far that is far enough. If we should devote the time from now until next January to the debating of this question to the exclusion of all others, it would, in my judgment, be an unlimited waste of time—too much time, too long. I do not think anybody feels that there ought to be that much debate on it.

I yield now to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to say that I fully agree with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. If the Member who has been sitting here for nearly two years is not fit to be here, he ought to have been expelled long ago; and to have the sword of Damocles hung over his head for an indefinite period in the future is a wrong to him, a wrong to his family, a wrong to the Senate, and a wrong to the country.

Mr. NORRIS. That is right.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I object to the consent, because I think we ought to decide the matter right now.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Georgia to object to the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Georgia withhold his objection for one moment?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I was just stating the grounds upon which I would object. I think the thing ought to be settled right now.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield the floor? If so, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I thought the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] had the floor.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, has the Senator from Nebraska the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Georgia, as well as to my friend the Senator from Nebraska, that ordinarily I am very much opposed to fixing a day certain for voting upon important measures. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] brought this matter to the attention of the Senate a day or two ago, and was within his rights when he insisted that the matter be presented and pressed for an early vote. Many of the Senators—indeed, I believe the majority of the Senators—have not read the record. It is a voluminous record, at least 2,000 pages. The briefs in the case are perhaps four or five hundred pages additional. I am sure that the Senator from Georgia is not ready to pass upon this question now. I am sure that many of the Senators who desire to discuss it are not sufficiently familiar with the record to make what they would like to make, a lawyerlike argument, if they are competent to do so. It will take several days to peruse the record, to familiarize oneself with it, even in order to vote intelligently; and, of course, if one anticipates making a speech upon the matter a vast amount of time should be devoted to a consideration of the record.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does not the Senator know that with the pressure that is constantly upon Members of this body no serious study of this case will be made until it is taken up? Does not the Senator know that if a unanimous-consent proposition is agreed upon to vote upon it at a remote period Senators, pressed as they are by their urgent duties of every day, will wait until that time is at hand before they begin a study of this case? If it could be taken up now and debate upon it made to the extent of a fair presentation upon each side it would inspire Senators, I think, to examine the record and study the case.

We have two or three matters of very great importance right on the threshold of enactment here. They can occupy the time of the Senate up to the adjournment that has been planned for, and for one I am frank to say that I would not myself consent to fixing a time to vote upon any matter that has not been before the Senate and been discussed for some little time, so that we may get our bearings and know what the case is.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana and Mr. STANLEY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KING. Just one moment, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I want to make a point of order—that the discussion is out of order, because the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] has already registered an objection, as I understand. Am I right in that?

Mr. KING. He is withholding his objection pending discussion of the matter.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I withdrew the objection temporarily on account of being requested to do so by several Senators, but I will renew it after the Senators are through.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I understood that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] had objected; I understood that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] had objected; I understood that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] had objected; and I understood that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] had objected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have the floor. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator, and I stand corrected. The Senator from Florida, as I understand, had objected. It is unnecessary for another objection to be made. I was doing what I could to show a reason why the Senator from Florida was right in making his objection. The Senator from Georgia felt the same way. I understand from what the Senator from Wisconsin says that he feels that way, and I feel that way. I have no objection to not interposing an objection while Senators are discussing the matter, but I have not been convinced but that an objection ought to be made; and if it gets down to me, unless I am convinced, I shall make the objection myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to put the inquiry as to whether there is objection. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield for a moment, if it is a question. I should like to conclude the brief observations that I desire to submit.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will wait, then, because I want to say something about the proposition for unanimous consent that has been submitted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely want to ask the Senator whether he thinks that any discussion will change any votes in the Senate. Does he not think that everybody in the Senate already knows about the facts in the case? Does he think discussion will change any votes?

Mr. KING. I believe that the Senators will approach the consideration of this subject as judges would approach the consideration of a vital matter submitted to them; and I can not conceive of any Senator, Republican or Democrat, who would care to vote upon this important question without being entirely familiar with the record and with the legal questions involved.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think most of the Senators have familiarized themselves with the record.

Mr. KING. Of course, if they have familiarized themselves with the record, they are probably ready to vote; but I believe that this is a matter that should be discussed, and that Senators desire a discussion of the matter.

Let me reply very briefly to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

As I understand the situation, Mr. President, we have the railroad bill before us; we may have the conference report upon the tax bill; we have the beer bill, which will be voted upon on the 18th. That will take up, of course, all discussion until the 18th. The railroad bill will doubtless consume several days thereafter. There is no other measure of importance before us, so far as I know, except the Newberry case. The tariff bill—and I invade the domain of prophecy now, and I am prophesying for my Republican friends—will not be before us until after the beginning of the year; so that we will have practically a clear field and can give 30 days, or a large part of that time, to a discussion of this question.

Let me say that the proponents of this proposition, those who are urging a vote, our Republican friends, led by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], I think, have been entirely fair on this proposition. They insist upon pressing it now. A number of Democrats are compelled, because of assignments to public duty, to leave the city within a few days; so that it is to our advantage, it is at our request, that this delay is occurring. It is not at the request of Mr. Newberry. It is not, so far as I know, at the request of the majority of the committee; and, in view of the attitude of the ranking member of the committee, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I do feel that the Democratic Members ought to accede to this unanimous-consent request.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is whether there is objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Objection to what?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To entering into the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I understood before the Senator from Indiana demanded the regular order that I was to have an opportunity to say a word.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Should we not have a roll call?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not necessary that there shall be a roll call.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Because under the rule it is only necessary to have a roll call when a date is fixed in an agreement for a final vote on a bill or joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. SPENCER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is under an obligation to recognize the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, this unanimous-consent agreement is a very unfair one, it seems to me, in a way, suggesting that on the third legislative day the Senate is in session after the 25th of December a vote shall be taken on this question, when the holidays are on and some Senators will be home spending the holidays with their families and friends; yet under the unanimous-consent agreement which has been submitted a vote could be taken on the third day after the 25th day December.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand it, this question is not debatable. There is nothing before the Senate, and the Senator from Alabama is proceeding now by unanimous consent. I therefore demand the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already inquired if there was objection; the Senator from Georgia objected, and the Chair stated that there was objection. The point of order of the Senator from Kansas is well taken.

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

Mr. HEFLIN. The question of the unanimous-consent agreement has been disposed of and I can talk about anything I please. If the Senator from Kansas insists on his point of order, I will speak for a couple of hours now.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that debate during the morning hour is limited to five minutes. There being nothing before the Senate, there is nothing the Senator from Alabama can debate, and therefore he is out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution offered on yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] is before the Senate, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. If that is the case, I withdraw my objection. I did not know the resolution was before the Senate. I did not understand that it had been called up. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I want to make a point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad that my genial good friend from Kansas has at last recovered his equilibrium.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will state his point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have the floor already in my own right.

Mr. HARRISON. I made a point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama has the floor, unless the Senator from Mississippi desires to raise a point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to discuss the point of order, and I do not desire to take the Senator from Alabama off the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will state his point of order. It may not need discussion.

Mr. HARRISON. I withhold the point of order until after the Senator from Alabama has concluded his remarks.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I was about to remark that under the unanimous-consent agreement there could be a vote on the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri on the third calendar day after Christmas, and there might be a bare majority of Senators here. I am anxious to accommodate my good friend, the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the ranking Democratic member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but I submit that we might reach an agreement by which we could take this case up on the 6th day of December and proceed to discuss it day after day, and vote on Saturday night before the adjournment of the Senate, thus disposing of it that week. Let the discussion be confined to that question. It is a serious question, and ought to be determined soon; but it should not be tied up in this fashion, so that it could be taken up right after Christmas Day dawns upon us, if the Senate is in session. Suppose the House should recess for Christmas, but suppose the Senate should refuse under this agreement; if a majority decided to hold this body in session, they could act upon this proposition; and there might not be very many Senators here, a bare quorum, probably.

Mr. President, I would rather proceed with the matter now than to postpone it under such conditions. Certainly the minority members of the committee, and the majority members of the committee, can discuss this question for a couple of days. We can hear their discussion, and in the meantime peruse the record. I have already read quite a number of pages of the record. I have read the majority and minority reports, and other Senators can do likewise. But we ought to focus our attention upon this case, and we ought to focus the attention of the country upon it, and, if we can, get a full and fair report of it to the country by the press. I do not know what the splendid newspaper boys are sending to their papers, but I did not see a line in the papers this morning about the matter having been brought up before the Senate yesterday, and about an effort being made to consider it and dispose of it, a great question like this, which affects the honor and integrity of this body, which raises the question as to whether or not seats in this body are to be made a matter of barter. This may be a matter of small concern to some people who do not regard the honor and good name of this historic Chamber as they should. This is a serious question, and ought to be taken up and discussed fully and fairly. The Senate ought to go into the facts of this case, and let the people of the country know what the facts are. One Senator asked if it was thought that any votes would be changed by discussion. Yes; there will be votes changed by discussion. The Senator from Ohio stated yesterday that word came to him that the other side had been polled some time back, and that enough promises had been secured to insure the seating of the Senator from Michigan. I recall when a favorable report was returned from the committee in the Lorimer case, and they had enough pledges to seat him, but when Senators were confronted with the facts in that case, one by one they slid from under the agreement they had made, and when the roll was called, voted to deny him a seat in this body.

Yes; I think votes will be changed by the discussion of this case, because from what I have seen of the facts in the case, the admitted facts, I say to the Senate that there is enough to convince any fair-minded jury that this man should be denied a seat in this body. Yes; I look to see votes changed.

The way Senators voted on a question like this resulted in the retirement of some of them, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] suggested. I have heard of Senators who were defeated because they voted to seat Lorimer. That same thing is going to happen in the Newberry case. It ought to happen, because when Senators make up their minds to vote to seat one in this body whose counsel admits that he spent nearly $200,000—that amount would pay the salary of a United States Senator for more than a quarter of a century—whenever Senators make up their minds to indorse such extravagant expenditures then they need to be scourged out of this body themselves by the people of the sovereign States that they now represent.

Yes; it is a serious question, Mr. President. It is now the most vital question up for consideration by the Senate. Peace is demanding the attention of the world, being discussed by the conference now in session in this city. What are we going to do here in this law-making body of the Nation toward keeping this place clean from the corrupting and corroding influence of money in politics?

Is any Senator going on record as in favor of selling seats in this body, and that no longer the merits of men are to be considered, that seats here are to be made a matter of barter? Are we to indorse the corrupt use of money in politics, poisoning the Nation at its very source, because, as Thomas Moore said:

When the stem dies, the leaf that grew
From out its heart must perish too.

Whenever we come to the time when a poor man can not be elected to this body upon his own merits and the cause that he espouses, farewell to the Republic; God pity those who are unfaithful when that staggering hour shall come.

How will it be, Senators, when you are asked how you voted, when the question came up as to whether or not seats should be bought in this Chamber? That is what you will have to answer, Senators, and you ought to have to answer it.

Mr. President, one more word. I would be in favor of entering into some kind of an agreement, as I suggested, to take this case up on the 6th day of December, if we do not want to go on with it now, and proceed for a week, and let the last two days of that week be devoted to speeches of an hour each, to be divided equally between the two sides, and continue to consider the case until a vote is had before final adjournment on that day.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I understand that resolution No. 172 is now before the Senate for discussion.

Mr. HARRISON. There is a point of order pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No point of order has been stated.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall state it now. Does the Senator from Missouri want to speak on the point of order?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not. I propose to speak on the resolution.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. May I ask what the point of order is?

Mr. HARRISON. The point of order is this: A moment ago I understood the Chair to say, in answer to a question of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], that the resolution is before the Senate. I make the point of order that it is not before the Senate, and that under Rule VIII it could not be considered as being before the Senate. Rule VIII reads:

At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the calendar of bills and resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock.

Immediately after the morning business had been concluded the calendar should have been called up, and bills on the calendar should have been considered, where objection was not made. That is my point of order, succinctly stated.

I take it that the Chair has ruled, because the resolution was presented yesterday, that it would be in order to hand it down to-day. I submit that that has not been the rule followed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate for the past eight years. Vice President Marshall did not follow any such rule, and a resolution going over was not called up except upon motion of the Senator who offered the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair had not stated that morning business was closed. The taking up of resolutions coming over from the previous day is a part of the morning business. The fifth section of Rule XIV provides that—

All resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration—

Not for motion to be taken up, but for consideration. The order of procedure as laid down in the rule requires that as a part of the morning business all resolutions coming over from a previous day shall be taken up. After morning business is closed the calendar under Rule VIII is in order. An order introduced by Senator Hoar, which is still in force, provides—

That until otherwise ordered, the chair shall proceed with the call for resolutions to be newly offered before laying before the Senate resolutions which came over from a former day.

The point of order is not well taken.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Chair in that ruling hold that it takes no motion upon the part of the Senator from Missouri to bring the resolution before the Senate?

In propounding the inquiry I submit the observation to the Presiding Officer that if the rule should be followed that resolutions coming over from a preceding day, it matters not what their character may be, whether privileged or otherwise, can be handed down by the Presiding Officer to be taken up for consideration without a motion, the prevention of the call of the calendar could be carried out, and it might be possible for the calendar never to be called up for consideration if such procedure should be followed. I submit that it is a very far-reaching rule which would hold that without a motion the Presiding Officer may, before the calendar is called, lay before the Senate resolutions that may have come over from the preceding day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that the resolution is before the Senate. Of course, to the parliamentary inquiry of the Senator from Mississippi the answer would be that any Senator might move to take up the calendar or any other business he might desire to have considered.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I move that the calendar be called.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, have I the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. SPENCER addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, for reasons stated several days ago, which I shall not repeat at this time, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HARRISON. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 172, the Ford-Newberry contest.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. If the motion of the Senator from Indiana prevails, it displaces the transportation bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It certainly does.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McKinley	Shields
Borah	Gooding	McLean	Shortridge
Broussard	Hale	McNary	Simmons
Calder	Harris	Myers	Smith
Cameron	Harrison	Nelson	Smoot
Capper	Hefflin	New	Spencer
Caraway	Hitchcock	Norbeck	Sterling
Culberson	Johnson	Norris	Sutherland
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Swanson
Curtis	Keyes	Overman	Townsend
Dial	King	Page	Trammell
Elkins	Ladd	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	La Follette	Poindexter	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	McCormick	Pomerene	Watson, Ind.
France	McCumber	Ransdell
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent from the Senate attending to his duties as a member of the Disarmament Conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana to proceed to the consideration of the Senate resolution 172.

Mr. HARRISON. The motion is debatable, I believe?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that it is debatable.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that I got it somewhere—I do not know whether it was in the special message of the President, or a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, or from some other source high up in the administration—that this Congress could not adjourn until the railroad transportation bill as well as the question of the funding of the international debt had been considered, and until recently the same persistency was to be shown upon the part of Republican leadership toward pressing through Congress a revision of the tariff laws.

Of course, we do not hear very much now about revision of the tariff. We did hear it when the President, in his first message to Congress, said it was one of the most essential and necessary pieces of legislation that should be considered by the Congress. However, there has been such a conflict of views on that question that there is now nothing like unanimity of opinion on it. But the impression has prevailed that the Republican Party promised the country in the last campaign a speedy revision of the tax laws and the tariff laws of the country. We have frittered away time now for nearly eight months or more, and the tax revision bill is not yet out of conference. I understand that in that conference the Republican conferees, as to certain provisions, are fighting among themselves like cats. It is to be hoped, however, that those differences will be ironed out and that the promise made to the country will be in part fulfilled—that is, to the extent that they will at least pass the legislation, whether it is good or bad.

Now, the Republican promise was just as strong, if not stronger, that they were going to consider the tariff question. Why, Mr. President, the sentiment was so strong on the other side of the aisle for it that a few Senators met somewhere recently and said they were going to invoke the cloture rule to pass the legislation and redeem their promise to the people. They even talked about cloture in passing the most iniquitous piece of legislation that ever traveled through this body and the other body, namely, the tax bill which is now in conference. Although we effected many changes in behalf of the people after full consideration and before it was finally passed, Senators on the other side of the Chamber met and agreed that they were going to try to invoke cloture in order to put it through this body.

Oh, you can say now, what harm would have resulted if cloture had been invoked, and yet the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WARSON] and the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who some in this country believe is the mouthpiece of the President of the United States to-day, they and others close to the President threatened cloture to pass the tax bill through this body. You have received petitions and letters by the thousands from your constituents throughout the country telling you of the promises that you made to them in the last campaign that you were going to place upon the statute books a protective tariff law; that it was essential to the general welfare and business interests of the country; and yet here is the leadership of this body doing nothing on that question except adjourning from day to day in the committee.

Why do you not redeem your pledges to the people? Why do you promise them one thing one day and go back on it the next day? You smile now because you know I am stating what are the facts.

So, rather than deal with that important question and carry out a pledge solemnly made to the people, you prefer to try to cram through the Senate in a few days, without proper consideration and deliberation, the question of the seating of a Member of the Senate against whom charges have been preferred and against whom a verdict has been rendered by a jury of his peers in his own State. It is an important question that you are dealing with. Senators on this side of the Chamber have asked you to give them reasonable time in which to study the record and form their conclusions, that they may know whether to vote for the resolution presented by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] or not. Yet they are following the high-handed methods which were first proclaimed in the beginning of this Congress by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], when he said that the steam roller was working and that it would run over this side of the Chamber. Yes; we know your steam roller is working, but the American people, with such charges preferred against one as high in authority as is a Senator of the United States, will not sanction such high-handed, steam-roller methods as that.

It has been suggested that there is method in the madness of Senators on the other side of the Chamber. I admire the adroitness of their leadership. I know those Senators some times deal in secrecy and oftentimes try to stifle legislation or to put through something here upon which they would not have the searchlight of publicity thrown lest the American people be informed and condemn them for their work. I will be perfectly frank with those Senators. I have not had time to study the record which is involved in this election contest, and there are other Senators also who have not had time to do so. I desire to have time for that purpose; I desire that sufficient time shall elapse before this case is disposed of so the newspapers of the country, which are now crowded with news of the Disarmament Conference, will be able to give space to some of the speeches, pro and con, which may be delivered during the progress of this debate, and that the people may be informed of the charges against the junior Senator from Michigan. I say I am candid in that position.

Oh, the adroitness of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WARSON] and the smartness of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]! They know full well from their experience that when there is in session here a great Disarmament Conference, which is the hope not only of the people of the United States but of the peoples of the world, news in regard to the proceedings of that conference is being read by the people of this country to the exclusion of everything else. Is an unusual procedure to be invoked here so that Senators on the other side of the Chamber may rush through the consideration of this question now so that nothing will get into the newspapers in reference to it, or people's minds will be focused upon the proceedings of the Disarmament Conference and they will not read the speeches which are delivered here?

Is the Senator from Indiana and are his colleagues here who control the destinies of the Republican Party going to invoke night sessions in order to force a disposition of this case and before it can be discussed adequately and before the people of the country may know of their handiwork?

Ah, Senators, that is unfair. Why do you not agree on a proposition that at a certain time—sufficiently remote, so that Senators who are busy with their other work may find an opportunity to read the hearings and the record and the report in this case and to study this question as jurors should in order to arrive at an honest conclusion—this matter may be taken up and considered, to the exclusion of everything else, debate upon it to be limited to one speech by each Senator, if it be so desired, of one hour or an hour and a half in length? That would be the fair thing to do; that would be the right thing to do. This side of the Chamber is asking nothing more than that; and yet we are met by the leadership on the other side of the Chamber trying to cram through the Senate this proposition before the people of the country can be informed of the charges against the Senator from Michigan.

The Vice President ruled this morning, and it is now a precedent to be followed throughout all time, that resolutions coming over from one day to the next are to be handed down without a motion being made or without the Senate passing upon the question; in other words, the rule to be followed hereafter is that when a resolution is offered on one day it is to be handed down on the next day and to be considered by the Senate whether the Senate desires to consider it or not.

I see in the calendar which I hold in my hand certain resolutions, and I am wondering why this resolution, based upon a record that would require days and nights to read and study, was handed down this morning. I see in the calendar that there are lying on the table certain resolutions that were not handed down this morning and about which nothing was said. Why was this resolution, which was presented only on yesterday, handed down without a motion and without the privilege on the part of the Senate of expressing its opinion as to whether or not it should be considered?

The other resolutions which are on the calendar still remain on the table. Why was this resolution, which means so much to the integrity of our elections as well as of this august body, handed down without a Senator having the privilege of speaking upon it or expressing his choice as to whether or not it should be taken up for consideration? These other resolutions, I repeat, still remain upon the calendar.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand the Senator from Mississippi to say that the pending resolution is not on the calendar?

Mr. HARRISON. This resolution was presented on yesterday.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But it is on the calendar.

Mr. HARRISON. Senators on this side of the aisle have been trying to direct the business in the right course for the whole day, following the usual procedure which has been pursued on this side of the Chamber since Senators on the other side organized this body, although not knowing what Senators on the other side are going to do.

Here is a resolution on the calendar, Senate resolution 26, introduced by Mr. REED on April 12, 1921. That resolution is on the table; it has not been handed down. That resolution requests the President to ascertain whether the Government of the Republic of France is willing to discuss the cession to the United States of all or any part of its possessions in the Lesser Antilles Islands. Why should one resolution which is introduced one day be handed down the next day and the same procedure not be followed in connection with other resolutions?

On May 9 there was a resolution offered by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] protesting against this Government taking part in any foreign councils except upon the express understanding that the purposes of such councils are to be the fulfillment of the pledges made by the responsible representatives of this country and the allied Governments during the war. That resolution has not been handed down; the procedure that is followed in that instance is that the Senator submitting the resolution must make a motion to call it up. It has been lying on the table since May 9.

The resolution presented yesterday, that should be given further consideration by this body after all the evidence in the case has been read and the record studied, is handed down to us to be considered to-day without any opportunity for an expression of choice as to whether it should be considered or not.

On May 14, a long time ago, another resolution was presented, which is lying on the table. It was offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and requests the Secretary of State to inform the Senate regarding the negotiations as to the acceptance by the President of the invitation to appoint representatives to meet with the supreme council, the conference of ambassadors, and the Reparations Commission.

That was an important proposition; that carried with it some dynamite for the Republican Party, and so it still sleeps "the sleep that knows no waking" upon the table there. Why was that resolution not handed down as the resolution now before the Senate was handed down? Why is a rule invoked in one instance and not followed in other instances?

On July 8 there was another resolution which is now lying on the table offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. They seem to have it in for the Senator from Wisconsin. None of his resolutions are handed down. Perhaps the reason is that he votes too many times with the Democrats. I am glad I get some support for that statement from the other side. At any rate, that is the most plausible reason I have heard why the resolution should not be handed down as was done in the case of the resolution now before the Senate, namely, that he votes too many times with the Democrats.

Senate resolution 107, offered on July 8, calls upon the President for information relative to conditions in Mexico. Yet that resolution is sleeping on the table there, and is not handed down.

On July 25 there was a bill introduced by a Democrat, but the Democrats should be treated like the Republicans, for there is not so much difference between some of them at any rate. Of course, there is considerable difference between my friend here [Mr. FERNALD] and myself on political matters solely. But this particular bill was offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and is entitled "A bill (S. 2302) to extend the term and powers of the War Finance Corporation for the purpose of promoting and protecting the export of agricultural products in the United States." That is a most important measure; and yet the rule is invoked as to that bill that it must sleep upon the table; but in the matter of seating a United States Senator a resolution is handed down to us and the steam roller is put in operation, and it is said that we can not vote on the proposition of whether or not we shall take up the resolution.

On August 15 another resolution was offered, which is now lying on the table. It was submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] for the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. The Senator from Michigan was treated badly in that instance.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, not at all. The senior Senator from Michigan knows, as does the Senator from Mississippi, that if he wanted that resolution called up he could have called it up. The fact is that what was intended to be accomplished by the resolution has been taken care of in other ways.

I do not wish to interfere with the discussion of the Senator from Mississippi, which is made for the purpose of killing time, but his statement when he refers to me, of course, is not accurate, because if I had wanted to call up the resolution I would have invoked the rule, as the Senator from Mississippi would have done if he had a resolution lying on the table, and, as I take it, every other Senator would have done who had a resolution lying upon the table.

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely, and I thank the Senator for his explanation as well as for his argument. He indorses everything I have been saying—that a Senator who offers a resolution should make a motion to call it up. What I am inveighing against is that this morning there was a ruling invoked as to this situation whereby a resolution relating to the seating of a Member of the Senate was handed down without a motion being made, as should have been done, as suggested by the Senator from Michigan. Now I come to the other proposition.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, it would not have been necessary for the Senator from Missouri to have made a motion in order to have called up the resolution. When this resolution was presented yesterday it was presented for the purpose of making it possible to call it up to-day, and the Senator from Missouri submitted the resolution with the understanding that he would call it up to-day. The resolution, as I have said, was presented in order to make it possible to bring it before the Senate. Then when the resolution came before the Senate this morning every effort was made to reach an agreement to vote, so that the Senator from Mississippi and other Senators could be accommodated, but that effort failed and the Senate was obliged to proceed with the consideration of the resolution if it intended to consider it at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator and myself are in thorough accord. The Senator stated that the resolution was submitted yesterday for the purpose of being called up to-day. What I am inveighing against is that the Senator had his right to call it up and make a motion to call it up, but the Presiding Officer presented it to the Senate without giving us the right to say whether or not it could be considered. So I again thank the Senator from Michigan for his explanation and indorsement of my contention.

On August 16 another resolution was presented by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. That still remains on the table. The same rule was not invoked as to that resolution that was invoked in regard to the resolution this morning. It was a resolution authorizing the President of the United States to call a conference of the leading mercantile nations to consider ways and means to stabilize international exchange.

Is there any question that is more important at this time than trying to stabilize international exchange? The Senator from Utah saw the wisdom of calling a conference of the mercantile interests of the world in order that they might arrive at some conclusion touching the stabilization of international exchange; and doubtless if it had been called it would have brought forth more fruit than the conference recently called by some one on unemployment.

Does any Senator on the other side now know what the recommendations of that unemployment conference were? Does any Senator here know what that conference did? I understand that they passed a resolution saying that there were between five and six million people out of employment in the country. Well, that is natural. We told the people about a year ago that if they again intrusted you with power in the Senate, and intrusted you with power in the Nation, there would be unemployment. I had no idea, and others who tried to tell the people that that situation would come about had no idea, that it would be so great as it is. You simply did worse than we thought it was possible for you to do; but the conference, I believe, did say that there were some six million men out of employment, and they recommended to the mayors and the governors of the States that they ought to do a whole lot of public work and give employment to these people.

That is the extent of your unemployment conference. That is all they did, instead of recommending that the Government should start to work on deepening the channels of the harbors and the rivers of this country that have suffered for six years because of inadequate appropriations and expend sufficient money so that they might be dredged, and that this great fleet of merchant vessels that have been constructed at great cost might come into these ports and carry our products to the markets of the world.

Why did not President Harding, and those who believed with him that something should be done for unemployment, recommend to Congress something to do, instead of sending emissaries throughout this country to the various cities and telling the cities to get busy and build bridges and streets to take care of the unemployment? Of course, that is good; that is fine; and all the cities and all the States now should adopt the most liberal policy of expenditure in order that the great unemployed may be fed, that they may exist in the present panicky and depressed conditions in this country; but the Federal Government can do something, too, and it should, yet the conference was as weak as water in recommending anything substantial and material in the way of legislative action to relieve the situation. Why, of course we would have given sanction and approval to a plan that would expend a reasonable amount of money on good roads, on public buildings, on rivers and harbors, to help in the present distressed condition.

Mr. President, I shall not go down the line reading these numerous resolutions. There are many. They will continue to sleep. Motions will have to be resorted to in the future, I presume, to call them up. If a Senator can get a majority of the votes of the Senate, they will be considered; otherwise, they will not be; but it will live in the history of this body that in connection with a resolution to seat a United States Senator against whom charges of corruption have been preferred, on whom a jury of his peers after weeks of consideration passed a verdict and said that he was guilty, you under those conditions resort to high-handed methods, when the Disarmament Conference is in progress and little other news will get to the country and the public be informed, to cram it down our throats.

I state to you now that some of us, as long as we have physical strength to combat such high-handed, outrageous procedure, will stand here and read the record presented to the jury that convicted the Senator in Michigan as well as the hearings that were presented to the committee here. Take your own course, but if you had any real plan of procedure to put legislation through here, you could frame a unanimous-consent agreement to take up this proposition at a certain time and keep it then before the Senate and limit the debate on it to the exclusion of everything else. Then it would be discussed and the people would be informed. Take whichever course you prefer. If you want to follow high-handed methods and work in secrecy and try to keep it from the people, go ahead; hold night sessions. Otherwise suggest something reasonable and we will accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson].

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, has any business been transacted since the point of no quorum was last made?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi say that any business has been transacted since the last quorum call?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator from Kansas would not think that an excommunication of his party was any business. I think there was some.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, we have heard the kind of speeches that have been made every few days by the Senator from Mississippi. They do not worry us a bit.

Mr. HARRISON. No; and you do not answer them, either.

Mr. CURTIS. There is no use in answering them when the answer is already in the Record. The Senator knows that a proposition for unanimous consent was made this morning and an objection made upon his side of the Chamber.

Mr. HARRISON. The unanimous-consent request this morning was to fix a definite date for voting on this proposition.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order that no business has been transacted since the last quorum call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has inquired of the Senator from Mississippi whether any business has been transacted. He does not state any. The Chair knows of no business, and the Chair rules that no business has been transacted.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, what is the question? Let it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Newberry case. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. BROUSSARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] and withhold my vote.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS]. I do not know how he would vote, and I therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr.

KELLOGG]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. In his absence I am not permitted to vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am told that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], with whom I have a pair, would vote as I shall, and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS. I am told that the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], with whom I have a general pair, would vote as I will vote on this question, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having vote in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HARRIS. I am informed that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], with whom I have a pair, if present would vote "yea," and therefore, being at liberty to vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

The result was announced—yeas 63, nays 1—as follows:

So the motion of Mr. WATSON of Indiana was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider Senate resolution 172, submitted yesterday by Mr. SPENCER, as follows:

Resolved, (1) That the contest of Henry Ford against Truman H. Newberry be, and it is hereby, dismissed.

(2) That Truman H. Newberry is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator from the State of Michigan for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1919.

(3) That his qualification for a seat in the Senate of the United States, to which he has been elected, has been conclusively established, and the charges made against him in this proceeding, both as to his election and qualification, are not sustained.

Mr. SPENCER obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. When this matter came before the Senate yesterday morning, a request was made for the reading of the reports made by the minority and the majority of the committee. I thought that an exceedingly appropriate way of introducing the subject, so that the contentions of both sides might be before the Senate and in order that the arguments might be addressed to those contentions. I thought it likewise of value to inform the public, through the RECORD, as to what are the contentions of both sides. If it would not embarrass the Senator, I ask that the reports be incorporated in RECORD immediately before the commencement of the Senator's argument.

Mr. SPENCER. I have no objection to having the reports incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not like to interrupt the statement of the Senator from Missouri for the reading of the reports, but I believe it would be helpful if they should be read at a later stage in the proceedings; unless the Senator is willing that they should be read now.

Mr. SPENCER. I have no objection whatever to the reports being incorporated in the Record, but may I say to the Senator from Montana that those reports have been upon the desks of Senators since September 29, 1921, and that in the talk of an hour or more, which I have already made, I have gone over a part of the majority report and will doubtless refer very closely to the remaining part of the majority report. Therefore, if the Senator cares to hear what I have to say, he will have the main points of the majority report. Doubtless when the Senator from Ohio comes to speak he will give as much of the minority report to the Senate as he desires to give. The minority report is largely taken up with the testimony which was given before the committee. It is set out at some length, and that report is a document of considerable size. I would not like to have my remarks interrupted by the reading of both reports at this time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not desire to press the matter if it is not altogether agreeable to the Senator from Missouri. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri that I myself have read very carefully both the reports, because I felt called upon to make some remarks upon the subject, being a member of the committee, but I am quite in error if very many of the Members of the Senate have found the time to read either the one or the other report, so that they are proceeding without any general, comprehensive idea of what the controversy is about. I understand, then, that the reports are to be incorporated in the Record.

Mr. SPENCER. Yes; as far as I am concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall object to that if it will operate to prevent the reading of the reports, because I shall ask unanimous consent to have them read at the proper time. The Senate should be informed about the contents of those reports.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that an inquiry is made by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. I merely stated that I would object if it would preclude me from having the reports read at a later stage of the consideration of this proposition, because they should be read. On yesterday the Secretary was reading them, and the reading was stopped, I think, by the remarks of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I venture to say that there would be no good ground for objection, later on, to a request for the reading of the reports, provided they were not duplicated in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will lose no rights.

Mr. SPENCER. I understand the reports are, by unanimous consent, to be incorporated in the Record at the beginning of these proceedings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senate expressed its desire to take up the Newberry case by so decisive a vote that I hope it may be convenient for the Senate to continue as long as possible in the consideration of it to-day, because there must be given full opportunity for as much discussion as either side desires. Perhaps it is only fair to say that I shall ask the Senate to continue in session some time to-night for the consideration of this case, and perhaps to-morrow night, so that we may proceed with it as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist upon a night session the very first day this matter is taken up. My colleagues and myself have assisted in having the matter taken up. We are not to blame for the fact that a unanimous-consent agreement could not be made, and I think we are all sufficiently busy at least to have a little respite after the usual hour of adjournment in the evening. I hope the Senator will not insist on his suggestion. I do not want to be put in the position of objecting, and I am not objecting now, but I simply want to express the view that I think it is hardly the right course to pursue.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I had in mind partly the convenience of the Senator from Ohio and those who are planning to go to Haiti with him on Government business, because if the discussion of the case is as protracted as the Senator from Mississippi thinks it will be, it would be difficult to close it before the Senator from Ohio would want to leave for Haiti, and that would be very unfortunate, because his familiarity with the case is such that the Senate will want to hear the presentation he will make of his side of it. Therefore it seems to me that we ought to proceed as expeditiously as possible, so as to conclude it before he has to leave.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I have listened to the remarks of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and I can not refrain from quoting a verse that is found in the Holy Scripture, which reads as follows:

He that is first in his own cause seemeth just; but his neighbor cometh and searcheth him.

Mr. President, I welcome the opportunity to lay before the Senate the facts in this contest. There can be little, if any, doubt about the law. The Senate is the sole judge "of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own Members." The case will be decided upon the facts as they have been shown by a series of examinations that in extent have been unequalled in the history of any similar case.

In the fall of 1918 there was held a primary election in the State of Michigan for the nomination, among others, of a United States Senator. Truman H. Newberry was a candidate upon the Republican ticket for that office, and there was another candidate upon the Republican ticket, Gov. Osborn. Strange as it may seem, there was also upon the Republican ticket as a candidate Henry Ford, who was running at the same time upon the Republican ticket for the Republican nomination and upon the Democratic ticket for the Democratic nomination. The result of that primary nominated Truman H. Newberry. His election followed at the regular election in 1918.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry. A few moments ago the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who is now presiding in the Senate, made a statement to the Vice President, then presiding, that the five-minute rule would be invoked up until 2 o'clock. Is that the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair did not know that the resolution was before the Senate. He was engaged and thought the request for unanimous consent was being considered, and that that was the question before the Senate. That is the reason why, before assuming the chair, he made the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. A further parliamentary inquiry. Can one Senator speak more than five minutes on this matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; on the pending resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. The Chair has changed his views.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair has not changed his views. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. SPENCER. After the general election in November, 1918, there was filed in the Senate of the United States on January 6, 1919, and again on May 20, 1919, a petition of Henry Ford contesting the election of Truman H. Newberry as a Senator from the State of Michigan and asking for a recount of the ballots for the office of United States Senator cast at the election in Michigan held November 5, 1918, and for other relief and praying—

That said Truman H. Newberry be declared not elected, and also disqualified, and not entitled to a seat, because of the aforesaid violations of law; and that petitioner (Henry Ford) may be declared elected and entitled to said seat.

These petitions were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and of course raised first the question as to who was elected at the general election in 1918, for manifestly if the allegations of the petitioner, whom I may refer to as the contestant, were true with regard to the election and Mr. Newberry was not elected and Mr. Ford was elected, then there was no need of going into any examination with regard to the primary. So, first the committee, with the consent of both parties, took up the question of the general election of 1918, and about that, as briefly as I am able to do, I present the facts to the Senate. We brought to Washington all the ballots that were cast in the State of Michigan for Senator at that general election.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Did the Senator from Missouri say that the petitioner prayed that he be held to be elected?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Wisconsin is entirely right. May I quote the exact words of the petition:

And that petitioner (Henry Ford) may be declared elected and entitled to said seat.

At the recount of those ballots there were some 93 precincts where the ballots had been lost or had been destroyed, because under the laws of Michigan the ballots which were kept intact in ballot boxes are, when those ballot boxes are necessary for another election, taken out and destroyed. It happened in some precincts that after the fall election and before the investigation of this case commenced there were local elections which, in a comparatively small number of precincts, necessitated the destruction of the ballots.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I would like to ask the Senator if those ballots were destroyed after the notice of contest was given?

Mr. SPENCER. I think in no case. My recollection is that the testimony showed that they had all either been destroyed by accident—in one case I think the building in which they were contained had burned down—or in the regular course of destruction of the ballots in order to use the ballot boxes for other elections. I may say also in answer to the Senator from Georgia that by the consent of both parties the official returns of the State count in those 93 precincts in which the ballots were lost or not produced were accepted as the accurate count of those precincts and incorporated in the final result.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That was done by mutual consent of the parties?

Mr. SPENCER. It was. It might be well to interject here the statement to which I know there will be no dissent, that in the recounting of those ballots and in the making up of the tabulation of the final result, while there was now and then a slight difference of opinion the result was concurred in by the representatives of both parties, and the entire recount went through with a cooperation on both sides that absolutely eliminated any friction in connection with that matter.

I call the attention of the Senate in the first place to the general election. I ask Senators to listen to the charges which were made by Henry Ford under oath in connection with that general election. I do so because the greater part of his petition had to do with the general election, with the fraud, the intimidation, the miscounting of ballots, which he alleged had taken place at that general election and which deprived him of the seat to which he claimed he had been justly entitled. Therefore the committee paid particular attention to the charges of Mr. Ford with regard to the general election. Here are some of them:

The contestant (Henry Ford) alleged in regard to the election—

(a) That there are about 2,200 election precincts or districts in Michigan, and that nearly all of the election boards were composed wholly of Republicans, and great numbers of them were wholly composed of intense partisans of Mr. Newberry, and that only in a comparatively few of them were there at the said election any challengers or others acting in behalf of the Democratic candidates, and that every opportunity existed for election officials who were so inclined to miscount the ballots in favor of Mr. Newberry.

Senators will realize upon the mere reading of that allegation that it is a fundamental charge against the integrity of the election itself. It there were a scintilla of proof to sustain it, it deserved, as it would have received, the careful consideration of the committee first and then of the Senate. Not one word to sustain the charge was ever submitted; and in the brief of the contestant Senators will not find even a reference to this or to the other charges which I will now read in connection with the general election. The charge came with a vehemence and a force that was staggering; the proof was absolutely wanting. The matter ended with the allegation and there has not been the slightest attempt even to sustain it, nor is there a single word with reference to it in the brief that was filed by the contestant or in the report of the minority to the Senate.

Mr. Ford charged further in regard to that general election:

(b) That a large number of ballots were unlawfully counted for said Newberry which in fact and in truth were cast for Henry Ford, namely, at least 10,000.

There was no evidence to sustain that allegation: with regard to a single ballot of the 480,000 ballots and more that we examined in the recount which was conducted in the Senate Office Building.

(c) That large numbers of ballots lawfully cast for petitioner were not counted for him, but were unlawfully rejected by the various precinct election boards when making the counts, and they were not returned for petitioner, as in truth they ought to have been, namely, at least 10,000.

The charge is definite; the proof is absent.

(d) That in many election precincts or districts the count by the election officers and boards was illegal, in favor of Newberry, false and fraudulent, and in violation of the election laws governing the count.

(e) Many of the ballots marked and cast for petitioner were counted and returned for the said Truman H. Newberry.

(f) In many precincts (particularly in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan) the provisions of law enacted to protect the sanctity and secrecy of the ballots and to promote a true and honest vote and count were flagrantly violated, and many important and vital irregularities and departures from such provision occurred, thus vitiating under the law the vote of such precincts—as, for instance, the marking of ballots for voters by an unauthorized third person, the exposure of ballots by the voters, the overseeing of the voting by mine bosses and superintendents and the like, all of which were conducted in the interests of said Truman H. Newberry, and the votes of such precincts should be rejected and thrown out.

This, like every one of the preceding charges, vehement in allegation, was absolutely unsustained by a single word of evidence that has been introduced.

(g) That many ballots in many precincts duly marked and cast for petitioner were rejected by the respective election boards and not counted at all.

(h) That many ballots bearing unlawful distinguishing marks were illegally and unlawfully counted for the said Truman H. Newberry.

(i) Many ballots duly marked and cast for your petitioner were wholly rejected and thrown out by many election boards on the unlawful and fraudulent pretext that they were not duly and properly marked for the petitioner, whereas in fact they were so marked and cast.

(j) Many ballots duly and properly marked and cast for the petitioner were rejected and thrown out by many election boards on the unlawful and fraudulent pretext that they bore distinguishing marks, whereas in fact they did not bear any unlawful distinguishing marks and ought to have been counted for your petitioner.

(k) Many ballots duly and lawfully marked and cast for petitioner were erroneously thrown out and not counted for petitioner by many of the said election boards under erroneous interpretations of their duties.

(l) Many ballots for said Truman H. Newberry were corruptly and unlawfully procured to be cast and counted for him by the unlawful use of money on his behalf.

(m) Large sums of money were unlawfully expended by and in behalf of said Truman H. Newberry to influence said election and cause votes to be cast for him that otherwise would not have been so cast.

There was not one single word of testimony or criticism as to the amount of money or the method of its expenditure, or anything in connection with it, so far as the general election was concerned. There were many charges; there was an absolute failure of proof. The primary election will be discussed when we reach that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. How about the other charges? The Senator has read a number of charges. The statement he has just made related only to the last one. Is it applicable also to all of the other charges?

Mr. SPENCER. The statement I have just made, as I have already said, though probably the Senator did not hear me, is true in regard to every single one of the charges which I have read in relation to the general election, and is also applicable to the few remaining ones which I shall read.

Not a single charge with regard to the general election, so severely made, was even attempted to be sustained. They were entirely disregarded by the contestant when it became necessary to prove them. Every one of them strikes at the very fundamental rights of the citizen in an election; every one of them is destructive of our Government if true; and anyone who would participate in such acts as are charged has no right not only to be a Member of the Senate of the United States but should be under sentence in the penitentiary which is provided for those who are guilty of these offenses.

I repeat that every one of the charges in regard to the general election which I have read, and that I shall now read, vehement in their character, was absolutely unsustained by a word of evidence. They are not even mentioned in the brief of the contestant, with all its voluminous contents, as being worthy of a single sentence of reference, but in the face of the facts as they were presented dropped absolutely out of sight. The contestant's allegations continue, as follows:

(n) Large numbers of lawful voters were intimidated and prevented from voting at the said election by partisans and supporters of said Newberry who otherwise would have voted at the election and cast their votes for the petitioner, to wit, 5,000 of such voters.

Senators will notice in these charges not only the definite character of the offense but of the exact number of votes which were affected; in some cases 10,000, and in this instance 5,000, and yet not one solitary witness was produced to sustain the charges.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. TRAMMELL. Will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield first to the Senator from Washington, and then I will yield to the Senator from Florida, with pleasure.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri if the charges which he has recited were sworn to; and if so, by whom?

Mr. SPENCER. They were sworn to by Henry Ford, making the charges, as I recollect, upon information and belief.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has just stated that anyone who is guilty of the offenses charged ought to be in the penitentiary, and I agree with him in that if the offense was deliberate and proven; but I am of the opinion that any man who makes such charges, impugning the validity of an election, without any ground or any proof, is himself guilty of a very serious offense.

Mr. SPENCER. I yield now to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desired at the time I rose to ask the Senator a question, but I will not now ask the Senator the question.

Mr. SPENCER. The next charge is as follows:

(c) Large numbers of lawful voters, employees of certain large corporations, were intimidated and unlawfully coerced by employers and their representatives into voting for said Newberry against their wills and preferences who otherwise would have cast their ballots for the petitioner.

(p) In a number of the counties the respective boards of county canvassers made and reported their canvasses without having or examining the poll books and tally sheets nor in any way verifying the number of original votes as cast or the number of voters voting at the respective precincts.

(q) That careful investigation by petitioner's direction has been made by reliable men since the election to ascertain, as far as may be, the detailed facts pertaining to the above statements and as to the conduct of counting in said election—

I digress here to remark that every one of these charges, according to the allegation of Mr. Ford, was by his own agents investigated as to its truth before it was made—and from such investigations and from other information reaching the petitioner and his representatives he avers the foregoing statements to be true, and he particularly specifies the following counties and election districts therein as the counties and districts where such irregularities, miscounting, and frauds were more flagrantly committed, namely—

Then he mentions 57 counties in the State of Michigan. My understanding is that there are 83 counties in that State. Then it was further charged—and that such irregularities and miscounts occurred in a more modified degree in nearly all the other counties of the State, and that mistakes, unfavorable to petitioner and in favor of the said Truman H. Newberry, occurred in all of the counties.

(r) That upon a fair and lawful recount of the ballots cast at said election your petitioner would be decided to be duly and lawfully elected Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator please state the date of the filing or presentation of the petition?

Mr. SPENCER. The first one was filed on January 6, 1919, and again, on May 20, 1919, the charges were presented to the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Are the allegations of the petition filed on the 20th of May the same as the allegations in the petition filed in January?

Mr. SPENCER. My recollection is that they are, although I am not able definitely to state to the Senator whether or not they are precisely the same. My recollection is that the same charges occur in both petitions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. At what time in January was the petition filed?

Mr. SPENCER. On January 6, 1919, it was filed in the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was about 60 days after the election?

Mr. SPENCER. It was about that.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. In view of certain questions which have been asked on the floor of the Senate, as well as of me by individual Senators, it would perhaps clear the issue somewhat if I were to say that while it is true that charges were filed relating to the general election as well as to the primary election, no attempt was made to pursue these charges so far as they related to the general election, except as to the matter of counting the ballots. I think I am entirely accurate about that, as I now recall; but the evidence which was introduced related almost entirely to alleged irregularities and violations of law during the preprimary campaign.

Mr. SPENCER. In answer to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] I will say that all these charges definitely appear in the petition that was filed on May 20, 1919, after there had been ample time for their investigation. Whether they appeared in extenso in the petition filed as of January, I am not now able to state.

Finally it was charged by Henry Ford—

(s) That upon such a fair and lawful recount, and due allowance being made for such frauds, intimidations, and prevention of votes, petitioner would be decided and declared by your honorable body to have been duly and lawfully elected Senator from Michigan.

When we proceeded to take up these charges with regard to the general election the first thing that we took up was the recount. The official count in the State of Michigan gave to Truman H. Newberry 220,054 votes and to Henry Ford 212,487 votes, which gave to Mr. Newberry a plurality of 7,567 votes. On the recount Mr. Newberry received 217,085 votes and Mr. Ford 212,751 votes. Mr. Newberry's plurality was 4,334 votes. The largest difference by far resulted from the finding of 2,226 ballots that had no initials of the election judges upon them. There was every evidence of their legality; there was every evidence that they had been cast by qualified voters; but under an agreement which had been made by both sides before the recount commenced it had been determined that every ballot that did not have upon it the initials of the election officials, as required by the laws of Michigan, should be cast out and not be counted; and the result was, naturally, that the man who had the largest number of votes cast for him suffered the most.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri what is the normal strength of the two parties in the State of Michigan, as determined by previous uncontested elections?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not know what it was in the immediately preceding election. There sits before the Senator from Georgia the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], whose election was some few years ago, but who perhaps can tell us the result.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Is the governor of the State a Republican?

Mr. SPENCER. Oh, the State is a Republican State. It has been generally so for years.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. By about how many?

Mr. SPENCER. It varies in majority, I should say, normally from 30,000 to 50,000. The Senator from Michigan can inform the Senator as to that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, Michigan is a Republican State. It has at several elections during the last 10 or 12 years or more elected a Democratic governor, although the Republicans have carried the State normally by from about 30,000 to 100,000, or even more than that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SPENCER. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire of the Senator from Michigan if Lewis Cass was not the last Democratic Senator from the State of Michigan?

Mr. TOWNSEND. He was.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In what year?

Mr. TOWNSEND. He served from 1845 to 1848, and again from 1849 to 1857. He was the first Territorial governor of our State, and after Michigan became a State he was elected a United States Senator from the State. The first governor, however, was Stephen T. Mason. Mr. Charles E. Stuart was also a Democratic Senator from our State, serving from 1853 to 1859.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What was the presidential vote in 1912?

Mr. TOWNSEND. In 1912 the State was divided. We had three parties there. Roosevelt carried it, I think, by about 60,000. I am not clear as to the majority. I do not bear those figures in my mind; but he carried it over either one of his opponents.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. By how much did Mr. Harding carry it?

Mr. TOWNSEND. He carried it by about 300,000.

Mr. SPENCER. It may interest the Senate, in a word, to say that the recount employed a substantial number of people in order to speedily complete the work. It ran from the 4th of January to the 2d of February, with a number of tables, and at each table there was a representative of either side. The cost was many thousands of dollars. The recount was carefully made, with the result, as I have indicated to the Senate in figures, that both sides expressed their approval of the method of the recount and of the accuracy of its final result.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. As I understand the Senator, the case was virtually abandoned as to the general election.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I should like to follow that question by this: In Michigan in what way is the general election controlled by the primary?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Michigan can answer that question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, we have a general statutory primary law for nominating candidates for the Senate and all other offices in our State. I think now all of them are under that law. The primaries have been held in August. The parties present their candidates at the primaries, and they are nominated under the same provisions of law that govern the election. That is, the same safeguards are thrown around the primary elections that are thrown around the elections generally. The candidate who receives the plurality of votes in his party is placed on the official ticket as the candidate of that party at the election. Is that an answer to the Senator's question?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Yes; substantially, it is.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, it is perfectly fair to say that such vehement charges and such an entire absence of proof had a certain effect upon the committee, because these charges were the gravamen of the election contest. There was a reference in the petition to the unlawful expenditure of money in the primary, which I will fully discuss in a moment, but it was made rather more as an incident. Neither in length nor in vehemence was it anywhere near as strong as the allegations that were made in connection with the general election, where the contestant stated that his trusted and tried agents had gone over the entire State of Michigan to establish the truth of the allegations he was making, and upon their investigation and information he made the allegations under oath, and was either unable or unwilling to offer any evidence to sustain any of them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if it is not a fact that notwithstanding those general allegations, the gravamen—to use the Senator's expression—of the entire controversy and the offense was this, namely, that Mr. Newberry entered into a conspiracy with Paul King and Cody and others for the purpose of debauching the electorate of the State of Michigan in the primary election, and that pursuant to that conspiracy a large sum of money, in excess of $250,000 or $260,000, was expended; and is it not a fact that the issues tried in the court when Mr. Newberry and others were convicted was that particular issue as to whether there was a conspiracy? Then—if I may supplement that question by another, so as not to occupy the time of the Senator—is it not a fact that when the matter came before the Senate committee the question there was, after having disposed of the question of the votes and the count, whether there had been a conspiracy pursuant to which a large sum of money had been expended; and did not the committee content themselves and the parties rest largely upon the proposition on behalf of Mr. Newberry that there was not a large amount of money expended with his knowledge or consent, but admitting that there was a large amount expended, and the attorneys of Mr. Ford insisting that the large amount of money was spent by Mr. Newberry, or with his knowledge and consent, and that it was pursuant to a conspiracy? In other words, was it not the conspiracy charge that was the gravamen of the case before the courts of Michigan, as well as before the Committee on Privileges and Elections?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think the conspiracy charge was at all before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The conspiracy was the main charge that was tried in the court at Grand Rapids, and subsequently before the Supreme Court of the United States; and it is undoubtedly true that the testimony which was heard before the committee had its bearing upon the primary election, and not upon the general election, but the alleged conspiracy was not mentioned before the committee except as the Grand Rapids trial indicated such alleged conspiracy. About that I shall speak now.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator certainly has not forgotten that the bill of exceptions which was taken before the United States district court and which related to the subject of the indictment, and which was later filed in the United States Supreme Court, was before the Committee on Privileges and Elections as a part of the record; and I now have in my hand that volume, containing nearly 1,000 pages.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no doubt of that. I have it before me.

Mr. POMERENE. Practically all of that testimony, as I now recall—I make that statement with a little reservation, because I know how uncertain one's memory is in dealing with the subject—related to the irregularities said to have taken place at and prior to the primary; and the question of conspiracy was one of the issues involved in the criminal case, all of which testimony was before our committee.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I am in somewhat of a quandary. What I now have to say deals with the primary, and I realize that a great many Senators are at lunch. Of course, they can not be here during this time, and perhaps they could get the statement better from the printed Record, in any event.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Watson of Indiana in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McKinley	Simmons
Broussard	Hale	McLean	Smith
Bursum	Harris	McNary	Smoot
Cameron	Harrison	Myers	Spencer
Capper	Heflin	New	Sterling
Caraway	Johnson	Nicholson	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Swanson
Cummins	Kendrick	Oddie	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Trammell
Dial	Keyes	Owen	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	King	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Ernst	Ladd	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	La Follette	Poindexter	Watson, Ind.
Fletcher	McCormick	Pomerene	Williams
France	McCumber	Ransdell
Frellinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin asked me a question as to whether the definite charges which were made by the petitioner—Henry Ford—were contained in both the petitions for contest, the one filed on January 6 and the one filed on May 20, and I answered him that the one filed on May 20 contained them all. That answer was entirely accurate. I have since learned that the precise charges were also contained in full in the petition as it was filed on January 6.

I have concluded the first point upon which I desired to reply in the presentation of the facts of this case, and that point was that in the general election every charge that was made by the petitioner—Henry Ford—and the charges were of the gravest character, were specific in form, and struck at the fundamentals of the franchise, was without the slightest evidence to sustain it, and not one of them was even mentioned in the brief of the contestant, or in the report of the minority members of the committee to the Senate.

The other allegations in the contest had to do with the primary election, and I shall now devote myself to that phase of the case. May I say, in order to get it out of the way, that if there is any doubt in the mind of any Senator as to the fullness of the examination which was given to the primary election, I call his attention to the fact that never in the history of elections has there been that minute, detailed, comprehensive, persevering examination into every fact in connection with a primary election which characterized the examination into this election in Michigan.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not think I am impertinent, but right at that point I want to ask him what the objection of the majority of the committee was to having the contestee appear before the committee and make a statement?

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will be good enough to let the answer to his question, which is a perfectly pertinent one, wait until I reach it in logical order, I assure him an answer will be given.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is one other question I want to ask the Senator. What was the objection of the majority of the committee to having the books of the bank which handled the accounts examined?

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will wait, it will be true of that as of the former question, and I am in hope the answer will amply satisfy the judgment and the conscience of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will wait until the Senator reaches those points, then.

Mr. SPENCER. In the first place, there was a grand jury called in the city of New York to go into the raising of this alleged amount of money, the corruption and bribery with relation to this primary. They made their examination, and without result.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Was not the lack of result largely due to the fact that witnesses who were subpoenaed refused to appear?

Mr. SPENCER. My recollection of it is that the court found themselves without the power to require the attendance of some of those whom they thought they ought to have before them in order to fully examine into it, and therefore I pay no more attention to the matter than simply to make a passing reference to it.

Then there came an examination at Grand Rapids.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I think I am accurate in the statement I am about to make. Certain witnesses were subpoenaed on behalf of the Government to testify before the United States grand jury in New York. Those witnesses, under the advice of attorneys representing Mr. Newberry and the witnesses themselves, refused to testify before the grand jury, and then, on the advice of their counsel, the Federal primary law was claimed to be unconstitutional, and these witnesses claimed their privilege. That matter was in the court for some time, and, I think, later got to the Supreme Court. I have not followed that feature of it since that time, but after the attorneys refused to allow these witnesses to testify—in my judgment a most unheard-of proceeding—the investigation was later taken up by the Michigan grand jury.

Mr. SPENCER. The grand jury was called to meet at Grand Rapids, in the State of Michigan. Why it was called to meet at Grand Rapids I have never understood. The defendant Newberry lived at Detroit. Grand Rapids is not as accessible to the different parts of the State of Michigan as is Detroit. Railroad facilities are not as good; but for some reason the grand jury was called to meet at the Federal court in Grand Rapids.

I call the Senator's attention to this significant fact, that before that grand jury was called every man, every paper, every check, every bit of information that had to do with the primary election in the State of Michigan—

[At this point the hour of 2 o'clock arrived and the unfinished business was laid before the Senate, when, on motion of Mr. Watson of Indiana, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Senate resolution 172.]

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, in just a sentence I call the Senate's attention to the fact which I established as my first proposition in the presentation of this case to the Senate, and those Senators especially who are lawyers will see at once the significance of this point in regard to the pending contest, that so far as the general election is concerned, there is no question. There was not a word of testimony to show that the election was not valid and lawful. The election of Truman H. Newberry by the people of Michigan to the Senate is undisputed.

The claim that the petitioner made for his seat in the Senate, the contention that he should be declared elected and that Mr. Newberry should be declared not elected has been dropped. There is no recommendation from either side as to the seating of Mr. Ford. The election of Mr. Newberry is unquestioned. That he received a majority or plurality of the votes of the electors in Michigan in November, 1918, stands uncontradicted. That he has the certificate of election and was admitted to membership in this body is beyond doubt.

There remain to be considered some things which had to do with the events preceding the election and preceding the nomination, and which affect Mr. Newberry's qualifications for a seat in this body. Under the guise of an election contest there is now an inquiry being made into events and circumstances which had entirely to do with the primary, and which affected, not the election but the qualifications of the contestee, the sitting Member, the junior Senator from the State of Michigan.

Questions in regard to the primary were raised, and they must be considered, and when we come to the consideration of them I call the Senate's attention again to the fact, and especially the attention of the Senator from Arkansas, who made an inquiry regarding the absence of certain subpoenas for certain bank books and papers, that every witness, that every paper, that every document, that every book, was before the grand jury in Grand Rapids; that the agents of Henry Ford scoured the State of Michigan for every man who knew anything about that election, to see if perchance there might be some remark, some event, or something unexplained, which, when presented to the grand jury, might look like evidence against Truman H. Newberry; and from that scouring of the State of Michigan 483 men were subpoenaed before the grand jury at Grand Rapids. Every man who had anything to do with the primary election of Truman H. Newberry was subpoenaed, and when they came before the grand jury they came not as culprits, nor as those who believed they had done anything wrong. Every man appeared and was proud of his part in the election of Mr. Newberry. When they entered the first question that was asked of them was, "Do you waive secrecy? Are you willing that anything you may say to the grand jury shall be used at any time in any court of law?" And every one of them said, "Yes; we will waive secrecy. What we have to say you can use at any time and in any place." Six of those witnesses were among the 134 who were indicted, and the statements they made before the grand jury and whose secrecy they consented should be removed were statements that were introduced against them before the petit jury when they came on for trial. Every book, every paper, every witness was before the grand jury in Grand Rapids, and they examined into every detail of the primary election with a degree of particularity that has been unequalled in any similar election proceedings in the history of this land. And everything before the grand jury which was deemed at all relevant was introduced at Grand Rapids, and the entire testimony at Grand Rapids was available to this committee which, on the part of the Senate, examined into this matter.

So that if we hear upon the floor of the Senate anything said about a witness not being present before our committee or about any papers or checks not being presented before our committee, I ask Senators to remember that there were before our committee not only the living witnesses who were—44 in number—examined by the committee but the complete bill of exceptions in the trial at Grand Rapids as it was presented to the Supreme Court, with its summary of the testimony of every one of the witnesses. More than that, there was incorporated in our hearings the testimony of every witness taken at Grand Rapids that either side desired to have put into our record, so that when Senators come to look into the record in this instant case they will find every scrap of evidence in regard to the primary election in Michigan.

There will be something said about the absence of one witness, Emery. May I say a word about it, although it is a little out of time, and then leave it. There was a man named Emery who was identified with the Newberry primary committee in Michigan. He knew more about the transactions than any other man. He is a man whose testimony we ought to have had. He is a man whose testimony we wanted. I am much mistaken if the Senate will not hear many vehement condemnations of the committee for not having him before us.

Here are the facts: He was one of the men indicted at Grand Rapids. While he was gathering together the ballots to be brought here and riding in a Ford machine, the significance of which will appear in a minute, there was an accident. The man's skull was fractured five times. Operation after operation followed. He was tried and convicted in Grand Rapids while he lay in the hospital sick and unconscious. His counsel said, "We have no objection to proceeding if you like," so they tried him and convicted him. From that day to this that man neither mentally nor physically has been able to give testimony.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Do I understand the Senator to say that in the State of Michigan a man was indicted and tried by a jury when he was not present?

Mr. SPENCER. Indicted, tried, convicted, and sentenced while he was in the hospital. Whatever rights he had, may I say to the Senator from Georgia, were by his counsel waived. They made no point of it. Undoubtedly in the State of Michigan, as in the State of Georgia or Missouri, it would have been impossible to try a man in his absence except he waived his right to be present.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. As a lawyer, I ask the question of the Senator who now has the floor, what right did his lawyer have to waive that constitutional privilege?

Mr. SPENCER. Pertinent question of the Senator from Georgia; and yet I believe the Senator from Georgia will agree with me before this case is through that, infamous as that circumstance seems, it is negligible compared to what was done in connection with Truman H. Newberry, whom it is sought to unseat from this body.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Has that lawyer been disbarred from his profession, may I ask?

Mr. SPENCER. I am unable to give the Senator information. With regard to that witness, we sent out to Michigan to find out about him and we got the certificates of two doctors, and it was the only medical testimony before us about his condition. The counsel for Mr. Ford, whose company is being sued by Mr. Emery for damages because of the injury, first subpoenaed Mr. Emery and then withdrew it and then claimed he was misinformed. One of the physicians said to us that his subjecting himself to examination would cause a collapse and would possibly be fatal.

On the eve of another operation the Assistant Sergeant at Arms of this body who summoned the witnesses and saw him, came back with the statement that mentally as well as physically it was impossible for him to testify, and other witnesses testified to the same effect. No court in the world would have required him to come before it and testify. We said, "We will not subpoena him or compel him to come, and subject him, at the possible expense of his life, to examination in this case."

If I had it to do over again, I would do precisely the same thing. It would have been an inhuman exercise of power to have compelled him, either in Detroit or here, to subject himself to the trial and strain of an examination in a case like this. Therefore, we do not have his testimony. I am free to say I wish we did have it. He knew more about the campaign than anyone else. A little later on I shall speak of a companion witness who also was sick. Oh, how the contestant insisted that we should have him. "Oh," they said, "Henry B. Joy will tell the truth, and we are satisfied that every dollar that Henry B. Joy put into this campaign was the money of Truman H. Newberry. Oh, let us have his testimony."

I will speak of that a little later on, for when we found by the report of the physician that that man's testimony could with reasonable safety be taken, if it was taken in the presence of his doctor and at Detroit, it was so taken by the consent of both parties, and that testimony throws illuminating light upon the allegations that were made in regard to it, and absolutely contradicts every claim which the contestant made in regard to it.

So that I say, and then leave it, that so far as an examination into the facts of this case is concerned, they have been examined with a detail unparalleled and are upon the public records for any man to read who likes.

Now, what are the facts?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Missouri has not answered either of the questions I asked him. He has not answered why they refused to permit the minority to examine the contestee, which the Senator said he would answer.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall, and I hope the Senator from Arkansas will be patient. My answer will be full and fair.

Mr. CARAWAY. He has not answered the question why he would not permit the books of the banks that handled the Newberry accounts to be examined, and I hope he will do that.

Mr. SPENCER. I certainly shall, though I may say in passing that all the books of the Newberry accounts are in the record, and if the Senator from Arkansas seeks to do so he can read them from beginning to end.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator will pardon me, if they are in the record, the witness swore they were not there, and he was the man who was being examined and swore he did not know where they were. Incidentally, if I may be permitted to say it without being impertinent to the Senator from Missouri, the Senator would not even permit counsel for the minority to question Floyd about certain transactions.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Arkansas has mistaken the facts.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will read from the record if the Senator from Missouri disputes it.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Missouri does dispute the inference which the Senator from Arkansas makes. Some of the books and papers—

Mr. CARAWAY. Ah, some of them; but the Senator said they were all there, when the record shows they were not.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator would allow me to finish my sentence, perhaps it would clarify matters. Some of the books and papers were destroyed under circumstances which, when I get to it, I shall explain. Every book and paper, before its destruction, was presented to the grand jury, and there sat before our committee, as one of the paid counsel of Henry Ford, the man who conducted the grand jury investigation; and if there had been a single thing omitted he was there to call attention to it. In his own language, if the Senator will look at page 756 of the record, that man, who was the Government attorney at Grand Rapids and the paid attorney of Mr. Ford before our committee, said those books were before the grand jury.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the Senator will allow me to go on with this. I should like to take it in its logical order.

Mr. POMERENE. But clearly the Senator does not wish to make a misstatement of the facts.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is where the Senator is wrong.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator certainly does not wish to be understood as stating that the Newberry accounts are in this record.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not. I say they were before the grand jury.

Mr. POMERENE. But we are debating this question on the record as it is before the committee, and I feel quite certain that the Senator will thank me for correcting his statement to the effect that the Newberry accounts are in this record.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no correction necessary.

Mr. POMERENE. If that had been done, there would have been less of difficulty and contention between the majority and the minority members of that committee.

Mr. SPENCER. The facts are uncontradicted that every book and paper was before the grand jury. Some of them were since lost, some of them were since burned and destroyed, but if there was a single thing that was necessary for the contestant in this case to produce, the men who knew the grand jury facts were there to call attention to that. It is camouflage to speak now of the production of books and papers which have been lost, and whose loss has been fully accounted for, after they had all been examined in the proceeding before the grand jury, because every fact before the grand jury which the Government desired to bring out was brought out at the trial and the full record of the trial was before the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield to me?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator intend to say that all the records in the Newberry senatorial campaign were before the grand jury?

Mr. SPENCER. Everything that the grand jury wanted was before the grand jury.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is not what I asked.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not know. I was not there.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why did not the Senator say so?

Mr. SPENCER. But I do know that the grand jury had the power to ask for any paper or witness that threw any light upon the question, and that everything they asked for was presented, and that they asked for everything that Henry Ford or his counsel suggested.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Missouri unduly—

Mr. SPENCER. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Surely the Senator will not contend that he has presented a proper picture of the grand jury proceedings. Let me suggest this: The man Fred B. Smith, the confidential attorney in fact of the Newberry interests, went before the grand jury with books, Newberry books. There is not anything in the record showing what the contents of those books were, so far as they might shed light upon this matter. Those books were taken back, and Mr. Smith testified that they were brought back by him. John S. Newberry testified that those books were placed in a barn or stable on the old Newberry estate, and that they had a man and wife living in that barn. Mr. John S. Newberry, when subpoenaed to produce those records here, said that the capacity in their office was very limited, that they took those books down to the barn where they kept other records, and that he went down to look for them but he could not find anything there except some political campaign literature. That is about the sum and substance of that testimony. Am I right?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has stated very much of what, if I had not been interrupted, I should myself have stated.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not care to interfere with the Senator's argument.

Mr. SPENCER. I should have added to what the Senator said that the place where those books were taken by Mr. Smith, who was the confidential man of the Newberrys, was the place where for years all similar books had been taken; that every few months, as the books accumulated, they took them down to this so-called warehouse, which the Senator from Ohio calls a barn, which was in the custody of a man and his wife who lived there, and that later on, after the books had been taken to the grand jury and after the grand jury had learned from them everything that could throw any light upon the primary election, the books were taken back, and later on they could not be found; they had been stolen. That is undoubtedly the fact; but it still remains perfectly true that everything those books contained had been entirely at the disposal of the grand jury, and if there had been anything in those books which would have availed the contestant or which would have aided the Government in its case against Truman H. Newberry it would have come out in the grand jury, for they had all those books, and if anything material had come before the grand jury it would have been presented before the petit jury and it would have been part of the record in that case and would have been before us. It is unfair now to ask, "What must there have been in those books and papers that can not now be found?" If they never had been examined, there would be something in that suggestion; but every one of them was examined and was examined by the bitterest and most vindictive enemies Mr. Newberry or any man ever had and examined with a degree of particularity that was unequalled. They could find nothing from them; the grand jury, therefore, brought out nothing from them; the books were turned back, and then, after they were turned back, they were, as I have said, in some way lost or stolen.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Missouri now to say that the books in question—that is to say, the books that were kept by the confidential agent of Mr. Newberry which could show the contributions made to the campaign fund—were before the grand jury, were examined by the grand jury, and that the grand jury knew all about what was in them. I have before me the only reference to that matter in the record, consisting of a few brief questions and answers. With the permission of the Senator, I should like to read it. It is found on page 756 of the record and is as follows:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Where the records of the payments and contributions and all that are you do not know anything about?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were they put in there?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; they were put in there.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you put them in there personally?

Mr. SMITH. No; I did not. My cashier put them in there. I do not remember just what time. It seems to me it was either when we came back from the grand jury with the books and papers, or it was after the close of the trial; I do not know which.

Senator WARSON. Were these books and papers at the grand jury hearing and at the final trial in Grand Rapids?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know. I was not subpoenaed. My cashier was subpoenaed.

Mr. SOUTER—

Mr. Souter is the attorney referred to who had been one of the attorneys for the prosecution. Mr. Souter says—

The books were before the grand jury.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you mean the books and records that this witness kept?

Mr. MURFIN, who was one of the attorneys of Mr. Newberry, says in answer to the question asked by Mr. Wolcott:

Yes; that is right.

Senator WARSON. Were the books and records kept by the Government or were they turned back?

Mr. SMITH. They were turned back.

Mr. MURFIN. The Government subpoenaed the witness from this office to bring the records, and another man took them to the grand jury and was there three or four days. Now, what happened in the grand jury, of course, I do not know. I have never found out yet.

The sum and substance of this testimony is that Mr. Souter, one of the attorneys, says that the books were before the grand jury; that is all there is to it. There is no scintilla of evidence in the record that the grand jury ever looked at the books or had anything to do with them.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Montana is a great lawyer and he will at once understand the significance of the proceedings which he has just read and to which perhaps I should not have referred if the Senator had not read the record. It is true that the matter is referred to in a very brief manner; it takes up but little space. Here was the strategy of the situation. When they found out that the Newberry books were not now attainable, that they had been lost or stolen and could not be found, they said as, perhaps, any lawyer would have said, "Now we can make any kind of claim we like as to what those lost books contained," and in the building up of that hope they started to make the claim that those books would unearth all kinds of fraud, until they got to that little sentence of Mr. Souter's, who they knew was the attorney for the United States at Grand Rapids, who they knew was in the grand jury room examining witnesses, who they knew was hired to convict Truman H. Newberry, and who they knew, if there had been a single item of evidence from those books which could be used for Mr. Newberry's conviction, would have been brought out before the grand jury. Therefore, when Mr. Souter said—and remember he was representing Mr. Ford before our committee as one of Mr. Ford's paid counsel—"those books were before the grand jury," there was little further investigation about that. It was too evident that the books were barren of evidence to help contestant.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Missouri said that they decided to make an issue of the books destroyed. Whom does he include in the word "they"?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not altogether catch the Senator's question.

Mr. CARAWAY. Whom does the Senator include in the pronoun "they"; to whom does he refer?

Mr. SPENCER. In what connection was it used?

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Missouri said that when the books were discovered to have been destroyed "they" decided to make a great issue about the books being destroyed.

Mr. SPENCER. I referred to the counsel for Mr. Ford, who were present at the hearing before the committee as his representatives.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. SPENCER. I will be glad to answer any question the Senator may ask.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Missouri realized that that was going to be used as a circumstance?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think I quite understand the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. I say, the Senator realized that the fact that the books could not be produced was to be used as a circumstance against Mr. Newberry?

Mr. SPENCER. It is perfectly evident.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought the Senator said that they commenced to make a great issue about the books being destroyed.

Mr. SPENCER. Evidently I did not make myself clear to the Senator from Arkansas. I will repeat what I said.

Mr. CARAWAY. Here is what I want to ask the Senator without having him go back to explain what he has already said. Realizing that people were questioning what these books contained, why did the Senator from Missouri object to having the bankers' books examined which would have reproduced that account?

Mr. SPENCER. Because they would not have reproduced the account. Everything that could have reproduced the account was before the committee either in the bill of exceptions or in the record.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I will ask the Senator from Montana to let me complete the answer to the Senator from Arkansas. Here is a sample of what occurred: A man came from New York and said, "I give (I think it was) $7,500 to the Newberry campaign." We said to him, "Present your checks," and the checks were sent up to the committee. Then it was insisted that we summon the bank to produce all the transactions of that man for a period of months, when there was not a single scintilla of evidence to contradict the accuracy of his statement. It would have been, I submit as a lawyer, ridiculous to have followed any such proceedings. More than that, when we concluded those hearings, as the Senator will find in the last sentence of the interrogation to which he has referred, Senator Wolcott asked when these men produced their checks or papers if they were not satisfactory, of course we could look into them further, and it was agreed in the committee that the men could be recalled and that further examination could be made if it was at all necessary. It would have been a useless thing and a foolish thing and an unfair thing to the witness and to the bank to have had his private bank account running over a period of months brought up before the Senate committee in order to show whether or not the payment which he made by a certain check which he produced had actually been made, and which was entirely undisputed by anything in the testimony.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The entries shown on the books appertain to the checks or drafts drawn by John S. Newberry and others on their banks as contributions to the campaign fund. Inasmuch as Fred Smith's records in the matter were lost, of course, the entries could be reproduced by referring to the accounts at the bank and to the checks that were drawn, could they not? Those entries could be reproduced from the records of the bank, could they not?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will find the accounts of the bank either in the bill of exceptions or in the record in regard to the John S. Newberry checks. The Senator will find every contribution that John S. Newberry made fully set out in the record.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There will be found in the Blair report the checks given by John S. Newberry; but that is not the question I asked the Senator. If certain amounts were transferred from the account of the other Newberrys, including Truman H. Newberry, to the John S. Newberry account in order to make up the amount that would be shown by the bank records, would it not?

Mr. SPENCER. Not by the bank records.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why not?

Mr. SPENCER. It would have been shown by the book accounts of the Newberry estate. I had planned to discuss that a little later, but I will discuss it now if the Senator desires.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why would not the bank's books show a record of checks from Truman H. Newberry to John S. Newberry?

Mr. SPENCER. The evidence shows that John S. Newberry did not draw a single check. There was a man named Fred P. Smith, who was a trusted employee of Truman H. Newberry, of John S. Newberry, of his wife, of a number of his relatives, and some of the corporations in which they were interested. This man had been a trusted employee for years; he had had for years the power of attorney of each one of them to draw checks, to transact the business of the estate, and to handle the accounts which were under his care. He had a power of attorney which was of the broadest character. This is what he did frequently, and what he had done for years: When, for example, any account ran short in cash, he transferred on the books to that account from any one of the other accounts whatever was needed to make the balance in the bank satisfactory, and then in a day or two, when the account to which he had thus transferred money received funds, it, the amount, was transferred to the account from which it was taken. It was a matter of bookkeeping. Neither of those who were directly interested in the respective accounts knew anything about it; neither man whose money was thus handled knew anything about it; it was a detail of bookkeeping in the office; and did not actually transfer a single dollar from one account to another except as a temporary credit to keep bank balances intact.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will allow me to finish the statement, then I will yield. Mr. Smith had done that for years. The testimony in the case shows that when Mr. Smith was upon the stand he said that during the primary campaign when the amounts of money that were being contributed by John S. Newberry were being made and they aggregated a large amount—and I shall go into some detail in regard to that a little later—he found that the account of John S. Newberry at the bank was running a little low, and therefore, without the knowledge of John S. Newberry and without the knowledge of Truman H. Newberry or anyone else, he transferred to John S. Newberry some money to make his balance in the bank satisfactory, and retransferred the amount shortly after to make the accounts correct.

Mr. POMERENE. From where?

Mr. SPENCER. And he said that that money might have come from Truman H. Newberry or from any other person whose account he had. As a matter of fact, he did not know whence it came; and then he said that in the process of time, right away, that was retransferred back, and was a mere item of bookkeeping. There is not one word of testimony, and the Senator can not indicate any testimony to show even inferentially that there was any real transfer of money from one Newberry to another that was known to either of them, or that was not promptly retransferred as a matter of bookkeeping; and that is the molehill out of which it is sought to make a mountain.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the bank records would have shown just exactly how much money was transferred from the account of Truman H. Newberry to the account of John S. Newberry; would they not?

Mr. SPENCER. Yes; if any such transfer had been made and checks drawn by Mr. Smith had been deposited. It would not show if the transfer was of cash in the office.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And the committee refused to permit the records to be examined.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will remember that the witness was not positive from what account he made the transfer. He said he got it from the account of Truman H. Newberry or of the others. The bank records might have shown it as I have said, but it was not a matter in dispute; there was nothing in it. It was a mere matter of office bookkeeping. There was nothing that would have warranted the committee in summoning a bank, with its books and papers, to give testimony about a fact which, under the admitted statements was uncontradicted. Neither John S. Newberry nor Truman H. Newberry knew anything about it. It was a mere bookkeeping act in the office; and what folly it would have been to subpoena officers of the bank to come to Washington from Detroit and to produce its books and checks for months back in order to establish something that had no probative force and about which there was no dispute. Of course, the committee did not do it. If such a bookkeeping transfer as the evidence shows had been contradicted, there might have been some reason in summoning the bank.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator says that Truman H. Newberry knew nothing about this transfer of accounts. Does the Senator recall the conversation he had with Smith in which he wanted to know when this expense was going to stop, and Smith said he was kicking about the low balances in his account?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Arkansas is again mistaken. There was no such conversation with Smith. There was the passage of a telegram between New York and Detroit when Truman H. Newberry was in New York and Smith was in Detroit.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator yield further? Does the Senator say that Smith did not have any telephone conversation with Newberry, and then send a telegram saying: "I misinformed you about the date"? And did not Smith there say that Newberry was complaining about this transfer of funds from his account and wanted to know when this expense was going to stop? Did not Smith say that?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has now stated the circumstances of the telegram and telephone message but is again mistaken as to what occurred.

Mr. CARAWAY. In substance, did he not say that?

Mr. SPENCER. Here is the fact with regard to that: If the Senator from Arkansas wants the fact, I can give it to him; but I see that he walks away when the mention of a fact is made.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did that because I despaired of getting it.

Mr. SPENCER. I can give the Senator from Arkansas the facts in the case, and here is exactly what they were: Do not let me detain the Senator, however, if he does not care to know the facts.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, I hear the Senator.

Mr. SPENCER. Here are the facts in the case: When that primary campaign was waxing warm the newspapers of the State were loudly proclaiming as to the amount of money that was spent. Let no man think that anything was done in secrecy. Every fact was published; and before the primary was completed upon every billboard the alleged illegal and extravagant use of money was put before the people of Michigan as the reason why Truman H. Newberry should not be nominated.

Mr. CARAWAY. Now, may I—

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator be good enough to let me finish? When those facts were all before the people of Michigan, they rendered their verdict upon those facts, and here is what the fact was in regard to which the Senator from Arkansas is inquiring:

When all that newspaper notoriety arose, when everybody was crying out as a matter of political argument that great sums of money were being used—and they were, as I shall show in a moment—Truman H. Newberry, in New York, communicating with his confidential man, Mr. Smith, wanted to know when these expenses were going to stop, and Smith told him that the primary would end on a certain date; that the expenses would cease at a certain time; and then he found that he was mistaken as to the date, and then he telegraphed Mr. Newberry and said:

I was mistaken as to the date. The primaries end upon a certain date, and the expenses, etc., will cease at that time.

There is the fact in the case. Mr. Smith said, "I do not know what the conversation was" as he referred to the long-distance telephone conversation with Mr. Newberry, but Mr. Smith distinctly said (Rec., p. 269) that the conversation was not about the campaign. "He—Mr. Truman H. Newberry—never talked to me about the campaign that I recollect," but the impression of Mr. Smith was that the conversation had some reference "to the drain on the balances in the office," for in the same office the testimony shows that the accounts of John S. Newberry and others were kept. It is this impression of Mr. Smith, in which, as a matter of fact, he was mistaken, that seems to impress the minority members of the committee so strongly. In direct contradiction of that "impression" is the positive, direct, sworn testimony of every witness who frankly and fully testified that the money which was spent in this campaign was their own voluntary contribution, without either solicitation or knowledge of Truman H. Newberry. It is hard to believe that any Senator will place greater weight upon an indefinite impression as against the positive sworn testimony of one whose character and standing are of the highest.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I confess that when I read the record I wondered why the committee did not summon the bankers with the books to show the transfers of which the Senator has been speaking; and I want to get a little fuller explanation from the Senator on that point.

One of the claims, as I understand, made by those who are opposed to Mr. Newberry is that he had knowledge of the use of this money, and he claims that he had no knowledge. I think I am right in that.

Mr. SPENCER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The only testimony was that of this confidential agent of Mr. Newberry in regard to these transfers.

Mr. SPENCER. In regard to that transfer.

Mr. NORRIS. It struck me that the bank's books would have thrown additional light upon that question. It was a controverted and I thought a very material point in the case, and it was in dispute. Why did not the committee summon some officer of the bank to bring the books which would show what actually did take place in regard to those transfers from Truman H. Newberry's account, if there be such, to John S. Newberry's account?

Mr. SPENCER. I can tell the Senator from Nebraska precisely the reason. There was not before the committee a scintilla of testimony or of evidence of any kind that indicated any transfer of funds from one Newberry to the other with either the knowledge or the consent of either Newberry. The uncontradicted testimony before the committee was that, as a matter of bookkeeping in the office, the confidential man of the Newberry estate and of several of the heirs frequently transferred money from one account to another for a day or two, and then retransferred it back, and that the parties knew nothing about it. It was a part of his duty, as occasion required, and he had a power of attorney from each interested party to do this very thing with many other powers of management. If that was true, what difference would it make whether the transfer for the day was a thousand or ten thousand dollars?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. If that was true—

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator allow me to finish the sentence? If there had been the slightest testimony that would have connected Truman H. Newberry with this transfer or if the fact of such transfers had been disputed, of course anything that threw any additional light on it would have been looked into.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the reason why it seemed to me that testimony ought to have been admitted. It seemed to me that if the Senator had been a judge in the trial of a case where that became material he would have said that while there was no other evidence except that of this confidential agent the other side had a right to have such evidence produced; and if it was not within their control the court would compel the production of any evidence that would throw additional light on it. It is true, as the Senator says, that the only evidence of that was the evidence of this confidential man, but that was on the Newberry side of the matter. As a matter of ordinary fairness and as a matter of right, if that had occurred in a court of justice the other side would have been entitled to the examination of the bank's books, which would have thrown light on it. The production of the books might have added to the conviction that one would have of the truth of the testimony of this witness, but at least that was proper evidence and would have been the natural place where one opposing the contention of this confidential witness would first make his assault in order to ascertain whether any light would be thrown upon the subject by an examination of these books.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska has been himself a distinguished judge upon the bench, and I submit to him that the only evidence was that Fred Smith drew his check possibly from one account to another, or it may be transferred cash in the office and made the record of it on the books. The express testimony was that the principals knew nothing about it, and that in due course the account was equalized by a retransfer. There was no dispute about it.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. CARAWAY addressed the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. There was no dispute, because the only witness who testified about it, and probably the only one who had knowledge of it, was a Newberry witness. Would not the Senator say that the other side had a right to controvert that? They were claiming that Newberry had knowledge of it, or that he had knowledge of certain circumstances that would put him on guard and give him notice. It seems to me that they had a right to go further and get the books of the bank and ascertain whether they would throw any additional light on the matter. Possibly if the books had been examined, if they were right, they might have shown an actual knowledge on his part; or, on the other hand, if the witness was right, they might have corroborated his testimony.

Mr. SPENCER. The witness's testimony was that Mr. Smith drew all checks, and that the principals knew nothing about it.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. It was admitted that Mr. Smith made the transfer of funds from time to time and the principals knew nothing about it. How could Mr. Newberry, in common fairness, be even remotely held responsible for what he knew nothing about?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator refer to the part of the record which makes Smith say that these men knew nothing about it? I am astonished at that statement.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has no need of great astonishment. I am sure I can relieve his mind of it in a moment.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall be very glad to have it done.

Mr. SPENCER. The whole testimony of Frederick P. Smith, as the Senator from Ohio well knows, was to the effect that he, and he alone, had to do with those accounts, and that he made the entries and the transfers and the deposits and the withdrawals under his power of attorney. Mr. Smith testified, on page 768 of the record, that Mr. Truman H. Newberry never even made any inquiry about the expenses. As a matter of fact, Mr. Truman H. Newberry knew nothing about it. He did not at any time talk with Mr. Smith—his confidential man—about the campaign. (Record, p. 769.) How unfair to attempt to make Mr. Truman H. Newberry—in the East during the entire campaign—responsible for what was thus done in Detroit without his knowledge and in his absence.

I do not mean to say that in express language Frederick P. Smith said, "I did not notify the principals of it." I made the statement that under the uncontradicted testimony of Smith, he was the only man who had anything to do with it; and that is borne out by the fact that one of the principals was in New York and the other of the principals was in the east, both of them in the service of the country, and neither of them in Detroit.

Mr. POMERENE. And telephone lines between the two, and constant conversations about the matter.

Mr. SPENCER. You can not draw a check by telephone.

Mr. POMERENE. No one suggested that. The Senator, of course, can be very facetious about this matter, and perhaps he wants to inject into it some of his very fine humor; but that is not going to enable us to get at the facts.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to show the Senator that he is mistaken; that Truman H. Newberry did know that his money was being transferred; and I have the sworn testimony right here before me, if the Senator will let me read it.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall be glad to have the Senator read it.

Mr. CARAWAY. In the telegram he said:

I misinformed you this morning—

Mr. SPENCER. The telegram that who sent?

Mr. CARAWAY. That Smith sent. I am talking about Smith.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator say from what page he reads?

Mr. CARAWAY. Page 24 of the minority report.

I misinformed you this morning—

He is telegraphing now to Newberry, with whom he had had the telephone conversation—

I misinformed you this morning the date of close of regular expenses. Should have said August 27. The circular work, advertising, clerical help, postage, and all regular overhead expenses will naturally continue until primary. Have written.

FRED P. SMITH.

(R., 769.)

Did you send that telegram?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Then, it was not about when the primary was; it was when the expenses would cease that you were talking with him and writing him about; is that right?

Mr. SMITH. That is probably it. I do not know what the conversation was, but I had told him July 27. I misinformed him as to the month.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You had been talking to him. He wanted to know when these expenses were going to stop, did he not?

Mr. SMITH. I do not believe so. I think his conversation was about the drain on the balances in the office, and he was complaining about the money that was being spent.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Complaining about the large amount of expenses being drawn?

Mr. SMITH. Or the money that was being spent and drawn from the account all the time and put into his brother's account to keep from being overdrawn.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And his funds as well as his brother's were used?

Mr. SMITH. And everybody else's.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. To keep up the amounts that were on the books charged against John?

Mr. SMITH. To keep his account from being overdrawn.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he wanted to know when this thing was going to end; is that the idea?

Mr. SMITH. I think that is right.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has read accurately. It has been already brought to the attention of the Senate several times.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, I can do that. Let me read just a little further.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You got the date wrong in your talk, and so you sent this telegram to him?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; that is right.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you say:

"I misinformed you this morning the date of close of regular expenses. Should have said August 27."

In other words, you should have said that the expenses would then be cut off?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. A little bit further.

Mr. CARAWAY. I read again:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING (reading):

"The circular work, advertising, clerical help, postage, and other regular overhead expenses will naturally continue until primary."

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And that is what he had been talking with you about over the phone?

Mr. SMITH. He was kicking about the balances.

Yet the Senator says he knew nothing about it.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has read correctly again.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; I have.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no dispute about the telegram.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why did the Senator say that Newberry knew nothing about it?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator can draw his premature inferences and form his judgment thereon, if he desires so to do, but I submit that if he will wait until I get through, if he will look at all the facts in the case, there will be no doubt in his mind.

Some grave questions came up in regard to the primary expenses. First, did Truman H. Newberry conduct that primary himself? Was it his money? Was he familiar with the campaign, guiding, directing either the primary itself or the expenditure of the money in connection with which complaint was made?

Senators, here are the facts in regard to Truman H. Newberry's connection with that primary: He was not in the State of Michigan from the beginning to the end of the primary. He went away, enlisting in the Navy of the United States early in the year, and during the whole of that year of the primary election he was not once in the State of Michigan.

I am speaking to Senators of the United States, everyone of whom has had a campaign of his own, both primary and general election, and at the very outset I observe that to suggest that any man could have the management of the details and the control of all the circumstances of a primary campaign when every minute of his time was taken up in the naval service of his country 2,000 miles away is ridiculous upon its face. Undoubtedly he kept himself familiar with the general course of this campaign. Undoubtedly there was sent to him again and again, daily, if you like, information as to what was going on and as to what the prospects were; but the management of that campaign was in the hands of a young man named King, and the testimony shows that he had the undisputed control of that campaign, and he was acting under a voluntary committee of business men who were intensely interested in the election of Truman H. Newberry, and over the acts of this committee Mr. Newberry had no control and its creation was without his direction.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator speaks of Admiral Newberry, or whatever he was at that time, being 2,000 miles away. Will the Senator please locate him at the time he was 2,000 miles away from this country during the war?

Mr. SPENCER. I thought, when I said 2,000 miles, that perhaps some Senator more familiar with geography than myself would give me the distance between New York and Detroit. He was located in New York. The election was in Michigan, and the headquarters in Detroit. I ask the Senator from Kentucky how many miles away that is?

Mr. STANLEY. He was about six or eight hundred miles away. Detroit was about six or eight hundred miles from the deck of the wooden ship in Central Park where he had his picture made, as a naval officer 2,000 miles away.

Mr. SPENCER. Was that the purpose of the Senator's interruption?

Mr. STANLEY. My purpose was, Mr. President, to show that this oratorical claim that Newberry was baring his brave breast to the enemy 2,000 miles away, when he was on dry land opening his pockets to a corrupt campaign fund at home, was all "bunk." That was my purpose, and I showed it.

Mr. SPENCER. I think the Senator showed his purpose. The fact remains as a fact that Lieut. Commander—not Admiral—Newberry, who had offered to enlist as a junior lieutenant if there was no other way by which he could give every hour of his service to his country, was enlisted, was commissioned, was in the service, sent by the Government to the State of New York, and that this campaign was in Michigan, and that not once during the campaign, primary or general election, was Mr. Newberry in the State of Michigan.

It is claimed that he controlled that primary election entirely himself. The testimony shows that Paul H. King, a man who had been Newberry's opponent in the Roosevelt campaign, was selected, not by Newberry, but first by Scott, and then by others, as a desirable man to manage the campaign.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SPENCER. I will ask the Senator to bear with me just a moment, and I will then yield to him.

The testimony shows that before King would undertake the work he said, "I have been at outs with Mr. Newberry." As a matter of fact, Mr. King had kept Mr. Newberry out of the Roosevelt State convention in Michigan, out on the steps, not even letting him in the building. In view of this fact Mr. King said: "I do not know whether it would be at all acceptable to Mr. Newberry for me to undertake his campaign, and I will go to New York and find out," and after he had gone to New York and had a talk with Mr. Newberry he undertook the campaign. Again and again, as I will show in a moment, after I yield to the Senator from Tennessee, the big things of the campaign were decided alone by King, and against the known wishes of Mr. Newberry.

Talk about his managing the campaign! He had information as to what was going on, but he had no control or direction of that campaign, and I submit that no man can read that record as it exists and find evidence of any control or management or direction of that campaign by Truman H. Newberry. It was a campaign handled and directed by his friends and not by himself. That will apply also to the money situation, of which I will speak in a moment. Now I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri what amount he admits was actually expended in behalf of Mr. Newberry in this primary campaign?

Mr. SPENCER. I am very glad the Senator asked that question, for within a moment or two, if the Senator will be good enough to have patience, I will take up that question and will show the exact sources of the fund, the exact amount, and the method of its expenditure.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will listen to that with a great deal of interest; but just now I want the Senator to give me an idea of the amount. I think he has it in his mind, having studied this case. I want him to give me his estimate of the total amount, so that I can ask him one other question. Will the Senator give me the amount he concedes was expended in the campaign?

Mr. SPENCER. The account which was filed showed that there has been collected a little over $178,000, and that there had been expended a little over $176,000, and I think there will be shown some additional amounts, though not so large.

Mr. McKELLAR. About how much does the Senator think was collected—as much as $200,000 altogether?

Mr. SPENCER. I should say between ten and fifteen thousand dollars additional to the amount set out in the report.

Mr. McKELLAR. Say $190,000, altogether. Does the Senator believe that this body ought to set the precedent of stating that $190,000 is a reasonable sum for a man to have expended for him in his primary campaign for the Senate? If the Senator believes that, I have been mistaken in my opinion of the Senator.

Mr. SPENCER. I am in hopes, knowing the candor and fairness of the Senator from Tennessee, that before I have finished he will agree with me that, large as was the amount of money, regrettable as is the expenditure of such an amount of money in any case, to unseat Truman H. Newberry under the facts of this case, as the Senator learns them to be, would be the rankest injustice and the arbitrary exercise of power in the absence of right, and I hope the Senator will let me proceed to demonstrate that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one other question, and I will not interfere with the Senator's argument further; I know he does not want to be interrupted. Let us put the Newberry matter aside for a moment, for the sake of this question, disregard it entirely, and consider that there is no such case before us. Does the Senator believe that the expenditure of $190,000 in the primary campaign of a candidate for the United States Senate is a reasonable expenditure?

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator be good enough to let me answer that a little later, in its regular order in my argument?

Mr. McKELLAR. I would prefer to have the Senator answer that general question now. It need not apply to the Newberry case, and I would not want to hold the Senator to the Newberry case, but I am just asking the Senator about setting the precedent of the expenditure of $190,000 in a primary campaign for the Senate, and especially in view of the fact that we had passed a bill declaring a reasonable amount to be $10,000.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I take it that the question propounded by the Senator from Tennessee would depend upon the character of the man the candidate was running against and what his operations were, whether he was running on two tickets. If so, that might have something to do with it.

Mr. SPENCER. Between the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Minnesota my speech will be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will answer my question and then answer the question of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SPENCER. I intend to take up the question the Senator from Tennessee has asked, and I am sure that he will agree with me, whether he agrees with my answer or not, that I have answered it fully and fairly. First, we had to deal with the management of that campaign, and I have stated, and I repeat, that no man can show by this record, except by the merest inference or suspicion, that the management, direction, or control of that campaign was in Truman H. Newberry. I venture to say that there is not a Senator in this august body to-day who ever had his campaign managed with anywhere near as little direction or control from himself as in the case we are now examining.

Information was furnished to Mr. Newberry. It would have been ridiculous not to have so furnished it. It was a campaign for his own election. Telegrams as to what was going on, as to the prospects, as to circumstances, there were, but there was neither the opportunity nor the time nor the circumstance when Truman H. Newberry could have directed or did manage the campaign either in the numberless details which every Senator knows are incident to such a campaign or in general feature of its control and conduct.

I remember there was some question at the start as to whether Mr. Helm should be encouraged to run on the Democratic ticket, because, Senators, there was a condition in Michigan at that time new to me, and, so far as I know, never paralleled in the history of the United States. With the express sanction of the then President of the United States, as the record shows, Henry Ford was to become a candidate for the Senate, and to become a candidate for the Senate upon the Democratic ticket with no opponents. If he were a candidate upon the Democratic ticket with no opponents, here was his plan: One hundred votes on the Democratic ticket would nominate him. There was to be no opposition to him on the Democratic ticket. It would leave every other Democrat in Michigan free to vote for Mr. Ford as a candidate on the Republican ticket for Senator from Michigan. And Mr. Ford, while offering himself as a candidate at the Democratic primary, also offered himself at the same time as a candidate at the Republican primary—because in the State of Michigan it is true—not true, I am glad to say, in my State; but it is true in the State of Michigan—that a man can vote at a primary as he likes—that a Democrat can vote at a Republican primary, or a Republican can vote at a Democratic primary.

See how simple the plan was: "Nominate Henry Ford upon the Democratic ticket with no opposition. Let a handful of Democrats vote for him. That will be enough to nominate him because there will be no opposition. Then let him come in on the Republican ticket and seek for the Republican nomination, and he will get a lot of Republican votes. In addition, he will get a lot of Democratic votes, and let us hope that the addition of the Republican and the Democratic votes will nominate him upon the Republican ticket, so that at the general election he can run as a Republican upon the Republican ticket and as a Democrat upon the Democratic ticket at the same time."

When that condition of affairs confronted the friends of Mr. Newberry they said, and it seems to me with great wisdom and propriety, "We must encourage as far as we can some one to run upon the Democratic ticket, so that the Democratic votes shall be cast in the Democratic primary." So Mr. King took up the matter. The record shows that Truman H. Newberry was opposed to interfering with it at all. Certainly that was a crucial point in the campaign. If he had had any control or management of his own campaign, he would have decided what should be done. The record shows that King said, "We must have a Democrat to run on that ticket," so they encouraged the running of Mr. Helm upon the Democratic ticket, whom certain Democrats in Michigan were proposing because of their opposition to Mr. Ford, and this frustrated the original plan of Mr. Ford to secure the Democratic nomination without opposition.

I could go through the record and show here and there these illuminating incidents which will convince any fair-minded man that in the management, control, and direction of that campaign the guiding hand of Truman H. Newberry was not present. He was busy about other things, not about his campaign. There is no foundation in the record for the statement that underneath that campaign, guiding, directing, and controlling it, was the mind and hand and purse of Truman H. Newberry. It was the campaign of his friends, who voluntarily assumed the entire management and independently conducted it.

Now, we get to the money, and this will come near to answering the question of the Senator from Tennessee. Here was the condition that confronted the friends of Mr. Newberry: Originally the record shows that Newberry himself had said, in answer to a letter that had been written to him, away back when they were urging him to become a candidate—for, mark you, Senators, he was not seeking the nomination. The record shows that it was a consensus of the Republicans of Michigan that forced it on him. In that preliminary conversation he said words to the effect that "there must be no barrel campaign, there must be no great expenditure of money in the election," evidencing how he felt about it. Then he said, "If I run, my friends must run the campaign." He had already enlisted in the Navy of the United States, and obviously he could not run the campaign, but there were those in Michigan who thought that the possibility of Henry Ford in the United States Senate was a danger to the country—

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has just made a statement suggesting two questions to me. The Senator has stated that the Republicans of Michigan were insisting upon Mr. Newberry being a candidate, and that that fact is shown by the record. Will the Senator please refer Senators to the parts of the record which show that to be a fact?

Mr. SPENCER. I can give the Senator the pages. He will find it upon page 479 and following of the record. Does the Senator deny that Mr. Ford was a candidate upon the Democratic ticket and a candidate upon the Republican ticket?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President, I am a lawyer and the Senator from Missouri is a lawyer. The Senator can not answer my question by asking me another question. However, I shall answer him.

The record shows that Ford became a candidate on June 14. There was some little talk about it before that. Mr. Newberry announced his candidacy or at least his organization began in March. The foundation was laid for this financial campaign long before Mr. Ford was considered as a candidate.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no doubt about the fact that Mr. Ford was a candidate upon the Republican ticket and upon the Democratic ticket, I am sure.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, there is no question about that.

Mr. SPENCER. That is all I said.

Mr. POMERENE. No; but that does not answer the question. Mr. Ford did not become a candidate until about the middle of June.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The 14th of June.

Mr. POMERENE. And the Newberry account starts on the 6th of March. There were a number of preliminary meetings called by Mr. Newberry at his headquarters in New York for the organization of his committee in March, nearly three months before Mr. Ford became a candidate, and Gov. Osborn called attention to that very fact. When Mr. Newberry sought to give the excuse to the public that there was great danger of Mr. Ford being a candidate, Gov. Osborn called his attention to the fact that his money campaign had begun long before that. Before I get through with my argument I shall read that part of the letter.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator knows well enough from the testimony that before Mr. Ford formally entered the lists and announced it was known, and long before it was known it was rumored, that he would become a candidate. The Senator speaks of the technical day when an announcement was made. Long before that day it was known what the purpose was in the heart of Mr. Ford, and it was to guard against that that those arrangements were made.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have searched the record on that particular point with special care, and I am sure the Senator is in error.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will find it in the testimony of Paul H. King.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In the report of the majority and in the brief for Mr. Newberry it is stated that it was generally understood prior to that time that Mr. Ford was to be a candidate. The brief filed by Mr. Newberry refers to the record, and the record is absolutely silent on the subject as to the reference given in the brief. All there is in the record on the matter is that Mr. King, the manager for Mr. Newberry, said that he had always counted that Mr. Ford would be a candidate—not that it was generally understood, but that he, Mr. King, was speculating that Mr. Ford would be a candidate. In another place he said it was rumored that Mr. Ford would be a candidate. That is the state of the record.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has referred to that portion of the record to which I had reference. It was a statement of Mr. King that there was a general rumor, and there was that understanding on the part of Mr. King.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The statement that it was generally understood Mr. Ford was to be a candidate is entirely supported by the record.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not know the difference between a rumor and a general understanding.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, a moment ago I referred to what Gov. Osborn said on the subject.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator would save that until he makes his own speech—

Mr. POMERENE. I would be glad to do that, but it is just a sentence or two.

Mr. SPENCER. Very well. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Gov. Osborn was a Republican, ambitious to be Senator, and there was some correspondence after the primary, which was August 27. Under date of September 17, 1918, Chase S. Osborn wrote to "My Dear Commander" Newberry as follows:

The plea can not be honestly made that you spent money in excess because you were fighting Ford, because you had begun your reckless campaign long before Ford was mentioned and had already transgressed the law. Nor can you plead "you did not know." That would prove you to be both an ass and a liar, which I choose to think you are not.

Mr. SPENCER. Now, Mr. President, so much for the management and control and direction of the campaign. I proceed to discuss the money side of the matter. I fancy that in the minds of more Senators, of the larger number of Senators, the question of money is the question that is uppermost. I desire to lay before the Senate precisely the facts in regard to the amount of money and the source of it and the reason for it and the use of it, and then see if it lies in the heart or conscience of any Senator to unseat a man in the face of those facts.

Here was the situation in Michigan: Much has already been stated about the primary tickets. There is no need to refer to that further. Here was a man, Henry Ford, whose name was a household word because of his industrial relationship. Every hamlet had his name over some shop in that vicinity. Ford was known everywhere, and every night of every week all over the State moving pictures, ostensibly with regard to the Ford machine, were calling attention to Ford, Ford, Henry Ford. Everybody knew him by name and picture. Senators know the value in a campaign of the mere knowledge of a name. In my State a man whose name happened to be McKinley received thousands of additional votes, for he ran at a time when that name was especially dear to tens of thousands of people. I know of men, and so do other Senators, who have carried thousands of votes in an election just because of the sound of their name or the approving familiarity of the people with a similar name, irrespective of its application to the candidate. It was an asset which made the friends of Newberry afraid. They said, "Newberry is a man comparatively unknown in Michigan, a man somewhat reserved in his method of life." Mr. Newberry had been Assistant Secretary of the Navy; he was for a little while Secretary of the Navy; but he was comparatively unknown. As one of the witnesses put it, one of the best and wisest known men in the State of Michigan was the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], and compared with him Mr. Newberry was comparatively unknown in Michigan.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator, I believe, is maintaining that one of these men was famous or notorious and the other was obscure and unknown. Does the Senator maintain that where two candidates run and one is well known, popular, and distinguished, and the other is obscure and unknown, that the unknown can make up that difference in popularity or distinction by the expenditure of cash?

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will listen to me, I will answer that question now, for it was the next thing in my mind.

What I have stated was the situation in Michigan. The friends of Mr. Newberry said, "How can we make known to the people of Michigan what Truman H. Newberry is and what he has done, for when they once know his record and realize the kind of man he is there will be no more doubt about the election?" There is only one way to make that known to the people of a State, as the Senator from Kentucky knows, and that is by publicity.

Mr. STANLEY. By the expenditure of money.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has well answered the question in the way I would have answered it in a moment.

Mr. STANLEY. If the Senator will pardon me for just one moment—

Mr. SPENCER. Let me say to the Senator it takes publicity; it takes publicity of speech, of meetings, of newspapers, of circulars, of letters, and, yes, the Senator from Kentucky knows as well as I do that publicity costs money.

Mr. STANLEY. Lots of it.

Mr. SPENCER. Lots of it. And lots of publicity costs lots of money.

Mr. STANLEY. Where a man is obscure and has to buy a bogus fame, it costs by the inch. As I understand, this was a race in Michigan between a "tin Lizzie" and a golden chariot. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPENCER. Is the rule as to the necessity of publicity any different in Kentucky?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I will say "Yes," the rule is different in Kentucky. No man from Kentucky has ever bought a seat in the Senate. My great State has been represented by good men and bad men, wise men and weak men, eloquent men and men who were slow of speech, but Kentucky is incorruptible. It takes a stained State as well as a dirty man to buy or sell a seat in the Senate.

You can not buy fame in Kentucky; you can not buy a seat in the Senate from Kentucky. Kentucky has her faults, but, thank God, that gallant State is as incorruptible as a star and Newberrys do not run in Kentucky. [Manifestation of applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, if I may get back to the facts in this case, I desire to join with the Senator from Kentucky in every word of praise he has said about his great State; but the Senator knows as well as I do that what he has said has no bearing upon this case. In regard to the money that was spent and the condition in Michigan which required publicity, I know Senators have no desire to let their minds wander off from the facts in this case. I know well enough that upon the other side of the Chamber there is not a Senator who consciously wants to do a brutal, cruel, or unjust thing. The difficulty comes in presenting facts to men whose circumstances and inclinations interpose a barrier to the reception of those facts. I would not have a minute's doubt about leaving this case to the Members on the other side of the Chamber sitting as a court if the question of politics and environment were left out of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. In a moment I will yield to the Senator from Tennessee. The facts in this case must speak for themselves, and as fairly as I know how to do it I want to present to the conscience and to the judgment of Senators upon this floor what are the actual facts in the case.

When it was found in the State of Michigan that a situation such as I have indicated existed, of a man who was known in every hamlet as against a man who was unknown, they said just what you and I would have said, "The one thing to do is to obtain publicity; let us, by newspapers, by circulars, by letters"—do what? "Present to the people of Michigan what the facts are with respect to Truman H. Newberry." Take this record of expenditures—it is large—

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. In a few moments I will yield. These items of expenditure are large, and I will take them up in a moment, but I desire now to say, Senators, that out of an expenditure of $176,000, as shown by the original report, approximately $150,000 of it was for newspaper and other publicity, and no one disputes it. Is there anything wrong in that?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. On that point will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. Is it wrong—

Mr. STANLEY. If that is a question—it is wrong; yes, infamous.

Mr. SPENCER. Is it wrong to present to the people of a State the facts about a candidate? If it is wrong to present to the people of a State what are the actual facts concerning the candidacy of a man who seeks their suffrage, how can the people be enlightened about the campaign? In sober thought, I submit, there can be doubt in any reasonable mind that full publicity is not only not wrong but exceedingly desirable.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. SPENCER. In a moment.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to ask a question right in that connection.

Mr. SPENCER. In a moment I will yield to the Senator from Alabama, but he will bear with me, I am sure, for a moment, because I want to follow the immediate line of thought that is now in my mind.

Under the condition of affairs as I have stated them to exist in the State of Michigan, the friends of Newberry said: "We must have publicity, and publicity costs money." Senators will find from the record that day after day there were printed at length in the newspapers of Michigan facts about Truman H. Newberry; and for this advertising money was necessary. One of the papers which was loudest in its complaint against Mr. Newberry is the paper which itself took in cash for advertising in his behalf more money than they said could be expended in the whole campaign.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I will yield in a moment to the Senator, but not now. So there was inaugurated a campaign of great publicity over every part of the State of Michigan; but I throw out the suggestion here that Senators may look at the entire record from beginning to end, and they will not be able to find that one dollar was ever used for bribery or corruption or for any purpose that in the conscience of a Senator could be called even improper.

Mr. STANLEY. Has the Senator not just described the corruption of the press itself?

Mr. SPENCER. If the newspapers of Michigan are corrupted because $100 or $200 are spent in advertising in those newspapers the facts about a candidate the newspapers of Michigan are different from those in my State, and I do not for a moment believe such a charge with regard to the newspapers of Michigan. It is as unreasonable as it is ridiculous. There is no evidence of corruption of the press. When publicity is so brought about that every man can see what is written and read it for himself in the daily newspapers, it does not bear upon its face the earmarks of corruption of the press. This publicity campaign was continued. Senators, that was the burden of the cost; and when the final report was compiled it showed that $176,000 had been expended.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. I think that that amount was large; I think it was too large; I regret that at any primary election there should be that much money expended; but, Senators, I call your attention in passing to two facts: First, That not one dollar was spent illegally in connection with the object for which it was used; and, second, it was not, as I shall show in a moment, the money of Truman H. Newberry directly or indirectly. He had nothing to do with this publicity which an independent and voluntary committee was so extensively carrying on.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator yield now?

Mr. SPENCER. Not now; in a few moments.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to interrupt the Senator to call his attention to the facts in that regard.

Mr. SPENCER. I will ask the Senator not to interrupt me now, but will yield in a few moments.

That list of expenditures at the primary election was finally completed, but it was hurriedly compiled, for, as every man familiar with a campaign knows, there are not generally kept in a temporary campaign such books of account as are usual in permanent commercial undertakings; but in this case the testimony shows that every item of expense was carefully kept, largely upon memorandums and voucher checks that were filed. No book ledgers such as are common in industry or in commerce were kept, but every item of receipt and every item of expense was jotted down, and at the end of the campaign they took all of those items of expense, every one of them represented by checks, and they made out a complete record of every check that was given, so that every item of contribution and every item of expense appeared. That was the original book of account. They then filed it. Paul King, the manager of the campaign, said in speaking of that—

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. In a moment I will yield; not now. Paul King, in speaking of that account—and he had managed the campaign of the senior Senator from Michigan when he was a candidate for election, and was therefore familiar with political campaigns—said that, in his judgment, it was the most comprehensive, the fairest, and the fullest account that had ever been made in any political campaign.

Senators will find a great deal of criticism made in regard to that account, but I will lay before the Senate the facts as to how it was kept and the Senate may determine whether or not they approve of it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. Not now, but in a moment I will yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Before the Senator goes further I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. SPENCER. There are differences of opinion in regard to the wisdom of the method employed in keeping that account. This is the way in which this account was kept: Every dollar that came in was noted as a receipt, and the evidence shows that every dollar of receipts was accounted for, and then, as money was paid out, it was not as a matter of bookkeeping and directly charged to the man who received the money, but charged to the general purpose for which that money was used.

I desire briefly to make this perfectly clear and then I shall leave it. Some criticism has been made in connection with the method of accounting which was thus employed. Here is the way they conducted that accounting. They said, "We will have six general items of expense: First, for advertising and other publicity; second, office expenses, including rent, furniture, light, and clerk hire; third, telephone, telegraph, and other charges; fourth, traveling expenses; fifth, keeping of election registers and the canvassing of voters; and, sixth and last, salaries and compensations not otherwise charged. It seemed to that committee that it would be fairer and more public to make particularly clear just what the exact object was for which every dollar was expended. The name of the recipient was shown on the checks, and could easily be ascertained from an examination of the account. Every dollar of expenditure was charged up under one of those six heads, and it was deemed wiser and fairer to so combine the expenditures with regard to the objects for which they were made rather than with regard to the man to whom they were paid.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. In a moment I will yield to the Senator from Ohio. So that if $100 was paid to John Smith for advertising and other publicity the entry of that expense would be, in the first place, not to John Smith, but to advertising and other publicity. The check would show that John Smith received the money, but the bookkeeping would charge that account to the object for which it was used, and, therefore, when it came to the combination of all the expenses it would be shown just how much had been expended and for what purpose. Mark you, every dollar of expense is accounted for:

Advertising, $147,000. (I am omitting the odd amounts.)
Office expenses, including rent, $9,000.
Telephone, telegraph, and other charges, $1,000. (I am omitting the odd dollars.)
Traveling expenses, $9,000.
Copying of election registers, $4,000.
Salaries and compensations, $4,000.
The aggregate is $176,568.08.

After that account was filed, bills came in largely from newspapers, almost entirely from newspapers, which had been overlooked in making up the account. The testimony shows that the committee tried in every way, by letter and telegram, to get in every bill when they filed that account on September 6, when, under the law, it was necessary for them to file it; but though they thought they had every bill in, after the account was filed bills came in from a number of sources, mainly from newspapers, aggregating something between ten and fifteen thousand dollars, so that the aggregate amount of expenses runs up to something between $190,000 and $200,000, and of that amount $165,000 was spent for publicity.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I yield, first, to the Senator from Arkansas, as I said I would.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, he was saying that all the money was spent legitimately. The record shows that part of it was spent for beer and part of it for cigars. Does the Senator think that is a legitimate expenditure—liquor and cigars in a campaign?

Mr. SPENCER. This is the first time I have heard about "liquor and cigars." The Senator can not be serious in the matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator will read the record he will find out that the witness swore to it; and then another thing: The record shows that they paid $7 a day to have workers at the polls on primary day, and that they paid some men large sums for their influence. I remember that Senator Tufts was paid $800 merely for his influence. Is that all necessary in publicity?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not know how cheaply they work in Arkansas, but we have to pay more than $7 a day in St. Louis for many classes of labor.

Mr. CARAWAY. In Missouri do they pay workers to go to the polls?

Mr. SPENCER. Not in the sense which the Senator seems to infer.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then why does the Senator say that?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly men have been paid to use their machines on election day to bring in voters in Missouri, and I certainly would do it again, and I have not a particle of doubt that the Senator from Arkansas or his friends have done the same thing.

Mr. CARAWAY. They never did.

Mr. SPENCER. I made that statement from what I had heard in regard to the elections in Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Whoever told the Senator that did not know anything more about it than the Senator knows about the record in this case.

Mr. SPENCER. That remark does not do the Senator from Arkansas justice.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the Senator thinks that the payment of $800 to one man for his personal influence was all right?

Mr. SPENCER. It depends entirely upon what he did. I should say it would be a very small payment if he gave his time for many months.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator is ready to yield to me—

Mr. SPENCER. Yes; I agreed to yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator said a little while ago that this publicity was necessary by newspapers, by circulars, by meetings. I wondered how he spelled the word "by"—"b-u-y" or "b-y"?

What I wanted to ask the Senator, however, was this: He says: "Is there anything wrong in carrying on this publicity to make this man Newberry known?"

Yes, Mr. President; there is something wrong in it. The statute of Michigan has fixed $3,750 as the amount that can be expended in primary elections and in general elections. Is not the voice of the sovereign State of Michigan to be considered in the matter of publicity as well as other things? The United States statute at that time, solemnly enacted by Congress, was in force upon the statute books, making the limit $10,000; and the Senator admits that they spent many times $10,000. Is there not to be a limit somewhere? Has not the State the right and has not Congress the right to fix some limit upon these expenditures?

Mr. SPENCER. Do not let the Senator and myself get into a dispute about the facts. The Senator knows just as well as I do that the law—both the law of the United States and the law of the State—limits the amount of money which may be spent by the candidate himself, and that there is no limit whatever as regards the amount of money that may be spent independently of him and by his friends; and the Senator knows that that was the decision of the Supreme Court, and that is the unquestioned law in the case, and is at the same time the common sense of the matter.

I hope, however, that the Senator will let me go on, and that the Senator will make his speech a little later.

Mr. HEFLIN. Just this word, if the Senator will permit me: It resolves itself, then, into this—that a candidate may have a campaign launched for him, and the money put up by Wall Street, maybe, to buy the election, and he know nothing about it, so he says, and come here and take his seat.

Mr. SPENCER. Is the Senator particular that the source shall be Wall Street?

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, $50,000 of this fund came from Wall Street.

Mr. SPENCER. No; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have a newspaper clipping in a scrapbook that I expect to look up and to refer to, where two contributions of $25,000 each were made by two gentlemen in New York to the campaign fund to buy this seat in Michigan.

Mr. SPENCER. I am satisfied that the Senator's only source of information will be his scrapbook and newspaper clippings.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is more information than the candidate whom the Senator is espousing seems to have had. He did not know anything.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I agreed to yield to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and then I will yield to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL].

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator made the statement a while ago that the campaign committee distributed the various expenditures under seven different heads. Will the Senator refer to the record which will show that to be the fact? I think the Senator will find that out of this account which was filed by the committee some one connected with the management distributed it in that way for the purposes of explanation to the public.

I want to make another observation here. The record is replete with statements showing the employment of workers at the polls and in the preprimary campaign. There are quite a number of instances—I say "quite a number;" I have in mind at least four or five now, to which I shall advert a moment later—in which the parties testifying said that they spent their money in part for cigars and beer and liquor and treating, the word "treating" being used. Will the Senator advise us under what one of these seven heads or classes of expenditure the various amounts of the character I have indicated were properly distributed?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I want to say a word in answer to the Senator from Ohio.

It may be that cigars were bought and that treats were given somewhere by some one in some townships of Michigan in connection with this campaign. I do not now recollect the particular witness who did it, if any such there be, but there never has been a campaign in the world when something of that kind has not been done. I have no doubt that the Senator himself, if a cigar had been given to him which he did not care to smoke, might give it to a constituent at a meeting which he held in the State of Ohio. Those incidents are negligible. We are dealing with the right of a Senator of the United States to hold his seat. Is it fair to lay any stress upon the fact that some friend or supporter of Mr. Newberry may have given a cigar or treated some one when it is undoubted that Mr. Newberry did not even know either the event if it happened or the man? Let us get close to what is the great, vital fact.

The money was spent, nearly $200,000. In the brief of the contestant I notice that they have added up a lot of assumed amounts, that made, I think, $263,000. The amounts, as the Senators will find out from an examination of the testimony, are fictitious above $195,000. What difference, however, does it make whether $195,000 or $260,000 was expended. Either of the amounts are too large for a primary election. There is a mere difference in degree, not in principle. It does, however, show the animus back of this whole case when you come to look at the figures by which they seek to arrive at a total of $260,000. They include, for example, in the total an item of $20,000 as being paid to a Mr. Oakman. The fact of the case was that a Mr. Montgomery told the grand jury that he once heard Mr. Oakman say something to the effect that it was worth $20,000 and that he had been promised that sum, but he did not say by whom any such promise was made, and admitted on cross-examination that he did not know whether Mr. Oakman was serious or not; so Mr. Ford's counsel promptly added this $20,000 as a Newberry expenditure, although there was no evidence whatever that any amount was ever paid to Oakman. More than that, while Milton Oakman's name was on the list of witnesses that they wanted to subpoena, before he ever came his name was canceled by Mr. Ford's counsel, so that his testimony was not heard, but it indicates how the fictitious amount was made up.

I do not care a rap whether the aggregate amount was $220,000 or $195,000. As a matter of fact, the amount expended in that election was approximately $190,000 or $195,000. It was too large, but who solicited it? Who spent it? Whose money was it, and how was it gathered together, and who was responsible for it? Fortunately, we have a record of every man who contributed to the fund, and we have the testimony of every man who contributed the larger amounts to that fund.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator excuse me for a moment? These are not witnesses on behalf of Mr. Newberry. These are the witnesses, Senators, who were subpoenaed by Mr. Ford. Every lawyer in this body knows that when a witness is subpoenaed, the party who subpoenas him vouches for his credibility; but there was no need of vouching for the credibility of these witnesses.

The man who gave by far the largest amount for the primary campaign was John S. Newberry.

He was the younger brother—by less than two years—of Truman H. Newberry.

His frankness in answer, his appearance and manner could not fail to convince anyone familiar with the handling of witnesses of the truth of what he said.

He testified that he and Truman H. Newberry had been interested together in many business operations.

The witness left Detroit in the spring of 1918 to enter the United States Naval Reserves and was stationed at the Great Lakes training station, Chicago, and did not even see Truman H. Newberry from February, 1918, until "way along in the fall." Truman H. Newberry was in New York and the witness was on duty in Chicago and other places in the Middle West.

The witness did not even know Paul King, who managed the primary election (R., p. 306), and never had any conversation with Mr. Blair, the treasurer of the committee who managed the primary campaign and whom he only knew by sight.

He had no conversation or cooperation or identification with any of those who were managing the primary campaign, and, as we shall see in a moment, also acted in what he did without any knowledge whatever on the part of Truman H. Newberry as to what the witness was doing.

Some time in March, 1918, shortly before the witness left Detroit, he told Mr. Fred P. Smith, his confidential agent, that he, the witness, wanted to finance the campaign of his brother if his brother should run for Senator.

The question was asked him:

How did you know your brother was going to run at all?

To which he answered:

I did not know. (Record, p. 309.)

I did not know whether he was or not. I never talked to my brother about it. I only knew what I saw in the papers. (Record, p. 318.)

The only knowledge that the witness had was what he learned from the newspapers that his brother's name was being mentioned. When asked for the reason why he wanted to finance the campaign, he said:

He (Truman H. Newberry) has always done a good deal for me, and the love and affection and loyalty I had for him was a sufficient reason to my mind to finance his campaign.

The witness had no connection with the campaign; did not in the slightest degree cooperate by word or act or suggestion. He did not know about any other contributions or about how the money was used or about anything in connection with either contributions or expenditures, and did not even talk or write to Truman H. Newberry at all about the campaign. All that he knew was that because of his love for his brother he wanted, in case his brother should become a candidate and a primary campaign ensue, to finance that primary campaign.

He was asked, "But did not your brother know about it? Did not Truman H. Newberry have some knowledge of it?"

He answered, "He knew nothing about it. I did it voluntarily, because of my love for him."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SPENCER. In a moment, if the Senator from Tennessee please. Senators, if your conscience leads you to do it, you can substitute suspicion and inference for the established facts brought out in the testimony, but I challenge you to produce a single line of testimony from a single witness who appeared before us, or who testified at Grand Rapids to the effect that a single dollar of the money which he gave was the product of the suggestion or invitation or solicitation or knowledge of Truman H. Newberry.

I yield now to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. Senator Newberry was a native of Michigan, was he not?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not know where he was born.

Mr. DIAL. Had he not been Secretary of the Navy before that election?

Mr. SPENCER. For a few weeks, or a day or two. He had been Assistant Secretary of the Navy, as I stated, for a somewhat longer time.

Mr. DIAL. Then, Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has a poorer opinion of the intelligence of the people of Michigan than I have if he thinks it took all that money to make Mr. Newberry known to the people of Michigan.

Mr. SPENCER. I should not like to ask the Senator from South Carolina who was Assistant Secretary of the Navy even eight years ago.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. Newberry was not Assistant Secretary; he was Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SPENCER. He was the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. He was Secretary of the Navy for only a very short time—about four months. If the Senator from South Carolina can tell me the name of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy eight years ago, I shall be surprised.

Mr. CARAWAY. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. SPENCER. Unless the Senator from Florida, who sits next to him, has just told him.

Mr. DIAL. We remember the names of the Cabinet officers who come from our State.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me now?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator said that Senator Newberry knew nothing about the funds which were being used, and did not contribute to them. I want to call the attention of the Senator to this testimony by Mr. Fred Smith, whom the Senator has just quoted:

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir. It is a procedure that has been current for years. When one account gets low it is fed from the others.

I will state, in parentheses, that this refers to the transfer of accounts from one member of the Newberry family to another. He continued:

We have 12 different accounts. Of course, we do not feed from the corporations, but the personal ones. I have done it this last week.

Senator WOLCOTT. How many of those personal accounts were there?

Mr. SMITH. There were 10 at that time.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you transfer funds from Truman H. Newberry's account over to John S. Newberry's?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

And again, I call the Senator's attention to Senator Newberry's knowledge of the fact.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Tennessee was probably out of the Chamber at the time that was read, commented upon, and explained a while ago.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I was here. Part of what I am about to call to the Senator's attention was read. This part has been read:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You had been talking to him. He wanted to know when these expenses were going to stop, did he not?

He was referring there to Senator Newberry.

Mr. SMITH. I do not believe so. I think his conversation was about the drain on the balances in the office, and he was complaining about the money that was being spent.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Complaining about the large amount of expenses being drawn?

Mr. SMITH. Or the money that was being spent and drawn from the account all the time and put into his brother's account to keep from being overdrawn.

The question I want to put to the Senator is this: Here is his own witness, Mr. Smith, who testified that he transferred money from Senator Newberry's account to his brother, John S. Newberry's account, and that Senator Newberry was complaining of it. Does not that show absolutely and beyond the peradventure of a doubt that Senator Newberry's money was used, that it was transferred by his own agent to his brother, John S.

Newberry, and that Senator Newberry was complaining of the transaction?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I said a moment ago that the Senator from Tennessee was probably out of the Chamber, for what he has just read was read earlier in the afternoon; it has been commented upon and explained. That method was a mere method of bookkeeping and there was no permanent transfer from one fund to another. It was a mere temporary expedient to keep bank balances intact and was what the office of the Newberry estate had done frequently, what it had done for years. When one account was low it was supplemented from another account, and the accounts balanced in a day or two by a retransfer of the amount. It was nothing but a mere matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will pardon me, I want to proceed quickly with what I was saying.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well, if the Senator does not want to yield.

Mr. SPENCER. We have a record of every man who gave any large amount to this campaign. I had said, when I yielded to the Senator from Tennessee, that John S. Newberry was the largest contributor. He gave approximately $99,000. Did his brother have anything to do with the giving of it? No. Did his brother know about his gift. No. Was there any communication between the two about it? No. What was it? It was the voluntary gift of a brother for the campaign of Truman H. Newberry.

If you like, you can substitute a suspicion and an inference for a fact, but you can never fairly come to the conclusion that Truman H. Newberry knew about, solicited, or consented to the gathering together of this fund which was used in his campaign.

What did he say about it under oath to the Senate? Truman H. Newberry said, "The campaign for my nomination for the United States Senate has been voluntarily conducted by friends in Michigan. I have taken no part in it whatever and no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent."

I sometimes think that many of the members of the minority in this case, for whom I have the greatest esteem, fail to appreciate the consequences into which their position drives them. You have the sworn testimony of every contributor as to how he gave the money and as to how much he gave, and every one of them under oath testified that Truman H. Newberry had nothing to do with it and did not know about it.

Listen to the testimony of John S. Newberry. Read the testimony of Henry B. Joy, who gave $25,000; of Alfred Victor Barnes, who gave $25,000; the two items, probably, in the mind of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], both those individuals being residents of Detroit, Mich., though I understand Mr. Barnes did or does now reside in New York. Read the testimony of Mrs. Joy, who gave $10,000; of Mr. Brooks, who gave $2,500, who I think lived in or near New York; of L. D. Smith, who gave $7,500. There is the bulk of it. The rest was in smaller amounts. Every one of those men was on the stand under oath before the committee, every one of them a man of the highest character, whom you and I would be delighted to meet with socially or to be identified with commercially or industrially.

Those men are not liars. If the minority report is true, every man of them is a perjurer and ought to be in the penitentiary of his State. Truman H. Newberry is not a liar. Those men told the truth. The fact of the case was that the friends of Truman H. Newberry voluntarily said to themselves, "We will manage and finance and run this campaign, and we will see that it is done so that the people of Michigan shall understand the facts about it," and they did it. Truman H. Newberry knew nothing about how much money was being spent, except that such a great scheme of publicity would have indicated to any man that large sums of money were being used. Truman H. Newberry did not know who gave it. Truman H. Newberry did not know the amount, either in any individual case or the aggregate.

Senators, will you unseat a man whose friends loved him enough or believed in him enough to spend for him a sum of money which you and I think is too large?

We can think without difficulty of men in the history of this Republic who could not themselves have furnished from their own resources even the $3,750 which the statutes of Michigan allow to be spent, an amount which would not permit the sending of a single postal card once to all the citizens of Michigan. We can think of men who could have spent nothing for themselves, and yet who when they ran, if publicity were needed, if money were needed for proper purposes, would have had from us and from their friends an unlimited amount, and if the need were great enough there would have been no question as to how much we spent.

I fancy that if Gen. Robert E. Lee had ever run for office in the South under conditions which had demanded publicity there would have been no stint from the pockets of the thousands who loved and revered him, and without any solicitation or knowledge of Gen. Lee. In the North, Abraham Lincoln would have had any amount of voluntary assistance to his campaign contributions. If friends voluntarily conduct a campaign that is not illegal under the law and in which there is no taint of injustice or immorality or wrong, will you unseat a Senator because he was fortunate enough to have such friends? Every Senator on this floor knows that the language of the statute of the State of Michigan, as well as the language of the law of the United States, limits the amount of money which a candidate himself can spend; but if his friends, for proper purposes, want to spend money in his campaign, they can spend it in unlimited degree.

If you do not like that law, if I do not agree with that law, if it is unwise, if there ought to be a limitation upon the aggregate amount of money which can be spent by the friends of a candidate, or under any circumstances, let us put it upon the statute books. It is not there now. If it is a wise policy, let us write it into law.

In the name of justice shall we unseat and punish a man because his friends did that which is not illegal? There was not a thing done in the campaign of Truman H. Newberry, either with regard to the primary or with regard to the election, that was illegal or improper. Why not leave camouflage? Let us go for a moment into the Supreme Court of the United States, where camouflage vanishes. Listen to Mr. Justice McReynolds, who is, may I say to my brethren upon the other side of the aisle, one of their political own.

When that case came on for trial Justice McReynolds made inquiry of the attorney representing the Government who was seeking to send Truman H. Newberry to the penitentiary. When the question came up whether it was Newberry's money Mr. Justice McReynolds said to Mr. Frierson:

Mr. Newberry is not charged with spending this of his own money? Mr. FRIERSON. He is charged with causing it to be expended. Justice McREYNOLDS. It was not his money? Mr. FRIERSON. No, sir.

No doubt in the mind of any fair man as to fact, for when the question came before a tribunal, where camouflage ceased, what Frierson admitted is what any lawyer in the Senate would do, and that is to admit the truth. There was not a dollar of Truman H. Newberry's money spent in that primary campaign. Every dollar of money that was spent in that campaign was by the voluntary contribution of friends, some of them bound to Truman H. Newberry by ties of love and affection, some of them by bonds of gratitude because of prior relationship, some of them because they believed that the advent of Henry Ford into the political history of Michigan was a menace to the country, and they could not forget what he had said about the boys who were fighting overseas or about the flag of the United States never to be again put up over his buildings. When we take a combination of those three things—love and affection and patriotism—we have the source of every dollar that was spent in Truman H. Newberry's campaign. Unseat him, when there is not one line of testimony of a single witness to show either that Newberry spent a dollar of his own money or that he knew or consented to a dollar of money that was spent? It is inconceivable in the Senate of the United States, where conscience and judgment reign as they do in this august body.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The statement now made by the Senator is a highly interesting one about how these contributions came to be made from patriotic motives, but if the Senator will turn to the bill of exceptions, page 281, it will be discovered that until the 16th day of August—and, bear in mind, the primary was held on the 27th day of August and the campaign was begun on the 6th day of March—not a dollar was subscribed by man, woman, or child except John S. Newberry. Thereafter large subscriptions were made by Lyman D. Smith, a broker of New York. Subscriptions of no particularly great amount were made by Victor Barnes, of New York. Victor Barnes is a brother of Mrs. Newberry. Large subscriptions were made by one Joy. Mr. Joy married a sister of Mr. Newberry.

I wish the Senator would have the kindness to turn to the list of subscribers and point out those who subscribed because of motives of patriotism and terror about the menace of Henry Ford to the State of Michigan.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall be glad to do it. It is in the record.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of the $99,000 given by John S. Newberry, $86,000 was actually contributed before anybody else ever gave a dollar.

Mr. SPENCER. I have no doubt of that, and I am wondering why the Senator from Montana, with that judicial ability which characterizes him, thinks that this circumstance is enough to brand with the stamp of perjury every man who gave that money and whose testimony under oath is before us, and to unseat from this body the man whose sworn testimony that he had no part in the management or control of the campaign is on file. The Senator from Montana is a lawyer of distinction. There is not one witness who has been produced who testified that a dollar of that campaign money either belonged to Truman H. Newberry or was solicited, given, or used with his knowledge or consent. Senators may infer and suspicion as much as they like. I am thinking of my own campaign. Perhaps the Senator from Montana may think of his. I have no doubt in the world that if the State of Missouri were raked over as the State of Michigan has been and from every precinct and township anything that any man who might have believed in me or wanted to help my candidacy did or said or gave, that there would be made a record in the aggregate which, though I knew nothing of it—and if I had known of it would never have consented to it—might be difficult of explanation and embarrassing in effect.

That is what we have here—a combination of suspicion and inference, without the testimony of a single sworn witness to substantiate it. I submit that to the judicial mind of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator avoids the question which I asked. I asked him to point out the subscriptions that were secured by reason of the patriotic impulses of the subscriber.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am reminded that Dr. Johnson once said that "patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel." I observe that the brief of Mr. Newberry starts out with an encomium upon his patriotic purposes and impulses and a denunciation of the want of patriotism in his antagonist at the polls. I do not believe, however, that the Senator from Missouri would make an argument along those lines.

Mr. SPENCER. I am sure the Senator from Montana does not himself believe in the cynical quotation which he made. I think it is quoted in one of the briefs, and he and I have often heard it. Patriotism is not the last refuge of a scoundrel. The Senator and I both know that patriotism is the corner stone of this Republic, and any such remark as he quoted (though I am sure he had no such intention) neither tends to promote patriotism nor to exert an influence for good in the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But modesty characterizes the patriot. He does not capitalize or boast of it.

Mr. SPENCER. No; nor did Truman H. Newberry. I can speak for what he did. I can speak of his sons who were in the service. I can compare him with Henry Ford and Henry Ford's son. The Senator never heard a word of it from Truman H. Newberry and he never will, but it is a fact, and I am free and glad to speak of it.

The Senator asks me as to any contribution that had patriotism back of it. There was one witness about whom I started some time ago to speak, whom the contestant, Henry Ford, by his attorney said we must have before us, that there is "no doubt" about the fact that the money which this witness (Henry B. Joy) gave, and which aggregated $25,000 in amount, came from Truman H. Newberry personally. Just in proportion as they thought it was impossible to secure the attendance of that witness they became vehement in their demands for his attendance and in their certainty that he would tell the truth and that they could rely upon just what he said, for the record so shows.

Mr. Joy is one of the most important witnesses in this case (Rec., p. 347). We feel it is absolutely essential to have Mr. Joy here (Rec., p. 358). He is an honorable gentleman—he will tell the truth (Rec., p. 347).

It turned out that the man—Henry B. Joy—was sick in the city of Detroit and could not be brought to Washington to testify. We finally ascertained through his physicians that they thought if he was interrogated in the presence of his doctor, without the disturbing elements of a trial or cross-examination, it might be safe. So we said to Mr. Ford's counsel, "Find out everything you want to know, write out your questions, and we will see that they are presented to him in the presence of a notary and of a doctor whom you select, and we will find out what this witness has to say." This was entirely satisfactory to both sides. I will read for the information of the Senator from Montana some of the evidence of Mr. Henry B. Joy. He will find it set out at page 942 of the record. Mr. Joy put in as one of his answers a letter which he wrote in connection with his contribution, in which he said:

DEAR SIR: Some little time ago Col. Hecker called my attention to the fact that a righteous effort was going on to picture before the people of Michigan the propriety of nominating in the primaries Commander T. H. Newberry instead of Henry Ford for United States Senator. He suggested—that I make a subscription, which I promptly did, in the sum of $1,000. Since the discussion in the papers and the statements of Mr. King as to the size, financially, of the task, I feel it my duty to enlarge my contribution if it is needed, as I am sure it must be.

He is writing to the treasurer of the committee:

I inclose you my check, No. 3105, of August 31, 1918, on the National Bank of Commerce for $5,000 to aid "as the bills come in," as I know they do. If the financing has been covered, I shall cheerfully accept the check back; if not, it's yours for the good work.

Notice the absence of Newberry. Joy was a relative of his.

I have tried to get both Mr. King and Mr. Smith on the phone to ascertain the condition of your "war chest," but both are gone for the day, and, as I am leaving for an absence of several days, I want my feelings known to you.

I feel that Mr. King's work was carried on on a high plane and on a scale none too large, as I judge from his statements in the papers, to overcome the sedition, treason, and pacifism preached by Ford in his million-dollar advertising campaign.

I have spent a good deal of money in this work of "boosting" patriotism and true Americanism in recent years. Now everyone is working at it, and I am glad to be able to furnish some "fuel for the boiler," and I will go further if you want it. That is where I stand. We have got to do this job.

It is not pleasant, but it is necessary.

This good, true State of Michigan must not go on record as indorsing for Senator any man who has ever said, whether for advertising purposes or because he believes it, that the word "murderer" should be embroidered on every soldier's uniform.

I do not think that his son is any dearer to him, or more needed by him, than the sons of others are as supporters and workers to their fathers, mothers, and wives.

If Ford could spend a million dollars in advertising to prevent and delay America's "preparedness" for war, we ought to raise whatever amount is necessary to counteract that vicious, wicked, treasonable campaign against our country's welfare.

I have nothing against my good friend Henry except that he does not think straight.

That he should become the Senator from Michigan now in this time of war, after his attitude as expressed in his public sayings upon matters connected with the war work, would in my judgment be a national disaster.

I see by the paper that he is a candidate at the President's personal request. He will be a hard man to beat, because camouflage is so popular to-day, but if the truth is put straight out to the people of Michigan the State will certainly elect a wiser and more far-seeing man to represent it in the Senate of the United States.

The numbers of sons and brothers and husbands who will die or be maimed or suffer untold tortures from the gas or in the prisons of the Germans, due to the doctrines preached by Henry Ford, because he could not see or think straight, will be legion. They are so dying and suffering to-day.

The people of Michigan will not indorse such a man to be Senator, if his vagaries are exposed. But they must be exposed. And at once.

Your people at home have a task on your hands which must be met.

That is the reason why he contributed; and if I may, I desire to conclude this branch of the discussion with reference to his testimony. When Mr. Joy was asked particularly and repeatedly, "Did Truman H. Newberry solicit a contribution?" "Did he know of your contributing?" "Did he have anything to do with it?" His answer was, "No, sir." And no man can say Henry B. Joy would tell a lie. His character is vouched for expressly by Mr. Ford's counsel himself. His answer was, "No; it was my own suggestion; it was my own act; there were reasons which impelled me to do as I did." Then he recites those reasons, which I have read in part. Now, I say that is substantially the testimony of every witness who contributed to this campaign. Not one dollar—

Mr. WALSH of Montana rose.

Mr. SPENCER. Let me complete the statement, and then I will yield to the Senator from Montana. Not one dollar came from the pocket of Truman H. Newberry; not one dollar was solicited by him; not one dollar was given either with his knowledge or consent. Every dollar that was used was contributed, without solicitation from him, as the voluntary act of individual friends who believed that his election was as necessary for the State as it was for the Nation. These are the facts in regard to the money used in this campaign. To hold Truman H. Newberry responsible for things with which he had nothing to do is so monstrous an injustice as to be inconceivable.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. These are very noble sentiments on the part of Mr. Joy, but the fact remains that he is the brother-in-law of Mr. Newberry.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no doubt about that; I have admitted it; I have just repeated it. John S. Newberry was his brother and Mrs. Joy was his sister and Victor Barnes, who gave largely, had been his friend and associate for years, during which they had loved and known each other.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And he was his wife's brother.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. Barnes was Mr. Newberry's wife's brother. I know all that; but does that make every one of these men a perjurer in the judgment of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am referring to those contributions being made from patriotic impulses. I am able to report that of $178,856, contributed as shown by the report, there came from John S. Newberry, the brother of Truman H. Newberry, from Henry B. Joy and his wife, the sister of Truman H. Newberry, and from Victor Barnes, the brother-in-law of Newberry, $168,500, leaving $10,350 from other sources.

Mr. SPENCER. I have no doubt of the correctness of the computation, though I have not followed it; I will admit it without looking at it; but does the Senator from Montana think that we ought to unseat a man who is elected by the people of a State because his brother or his wife's brother saw fit to contribute to his campaign funds?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not at all.

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator from Montana believe that contributions come from men's enemies?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not at all.

Mr. SPENCER. Or from their political opponents?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not at all.

Mr. SPENCER. Contributions naturally come from relatives and friends and from social and business and political associates.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What the Senator from Montana does contend is that the reasonable inference is that these people contributed for personal reasons rather than from patriotic impulses.

Mr. SPENCER. If by that inference of the Senator he means personal reasons of affection, of confidence, and esteem, I think there is a great deal of merit in the conclusion of the Senator from Montana. I submitted the testimony of Mr. Joy as to how he felt about the campaign and what the reasons were which influenced him, and I think we will agree that patriotism was the controlling motive.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Contributions are sometimes made because of consanguinity.

Mr. SPENCER. But no man can listen to what I have just read from Henry B. Joy and not believe that patriotism had much to do as the controlling motive with his contribution. There were different motives for the making of contributions; some were because of affection, as I have said; some were because of confidence; some were because of the conviction that his opponent ought not to be elected either for the sake of the State or of the Nation. There we have the whole facts in regard to the money which was contributed in the Newberry campaign.

Senators, I do not want to take up time unduly. There will undoubtedly be some questions asked or statements made which may require some further statement from me; but I want to say, with all the emphasis that I can put into the statement, that the record in this case, whatever else it shows, establishes, first, that there was not a dollar spent for an illegal or an improper purpose.

In the trial at Grand Rapids the fifth count in the indictment charged that money was spent for bribery and corruption, but before the trial was concluded even the judge who presided in that case was compelled to say to the jury that there was not a word of testimony which sustained the charge of bribery or corruption, and he withdrew from the jury the consideration of that count. So all they had to pass upon was the question whether there was a conspiracy between Truman H. Newberry and 134 others to spend more than $3,750 in connection with his election, for on the only other count which was left for the consideration of the jury, and which charged fraudulent use of the mails, the jury promptly acquitted all the defendants.

Why did not the committee summon the junior Senator from Michigan before them as a witness? The Senator from Arkansas has asked me that question. I can give my version of the matter and state what influenced me as a member of the committee in taking the position that I would not invite or force Mr. Newberry to come before it. No one asked that Mr. Newberry be summoned. The minority of the committee wanted the committee itself, of its own accord, to invite him to come before the committee. This would, of course, have admitted that the committee believed the record was such as to require the attendance of Mr. Newberry. The committee believed no such thing. Everything that could be said by him had been said under oath in his report to the Senate under the law of the United States. Here was his stand from the beginning: "Not a dollar has been solicited or spent with my knowledge or consent; my friends voluntarily managed the campaign." There was no substantial evidence to contradict this position and there was a vindictive purpose clearly and often manifest in the paid emissaries of Mr. Ford to torture and harass, as only an experienced lawyer knows how to do with a witness. Months of torture had already been endured, and I can see how the Senator from Michigan could have said to himself, "I have said all I can say. If there is no evidence to disprove it, why, for mere purposes of publicity, should I come forward again into the case and undergo examination without anything to be gained by it?" I for one would not require him to do it. He could have done it if he had desired, but his judgment led him not to do it, and I can see the force back of his judgment.

Oh, Senators, you and I look at this case to-day cold-bloodedly in the Senate Chamber. I have sometimes tried to fancy what it would have meant to me if I had been attacked as has the junior Senator from Michigan. There are some upon this floor who know the bitterness of unjust persecution; and shall we expel from the Senate Chamber, with the brand of disgrace upon him forever, a Senator of the United States because his friends voluntarily got together and spent more money than you and I think ever ought to be spent in a primary campaign, and when not a dollar of it was spent for any illegal purpose or for bribery or for corruption?

While the trial was on at Grand Rapids—and which I maintain to-night in its inception, and in its purpose, and in its conduct was malevolent, malicious, and vindictive—there was many a man and woman throughout the United States who, unaware of the true facts, believed that Truman H. Newberry was a corrupter of youth, was a briber of voters, was a menace to the Nation, for the purpose of that trial was to brand him and to stamp disgrace upon his family and himself. He was convicted and sentenced, and it was not until the Supreme Court of the United States finally came to consider the case that justice was done. When the justice of that august tribunal spoke, divided amongst themselves as to the technical effect of the law, the Supreme Court were unanimous in the conclusion that there had been an unfair trial; that the judge had misled the jury and wrongfully interpreted the law, and that the judge gave to the jury charges that had no foundation in right; and when the Supreme Court of the United States thus spoke, the infamy of that trial fell upon the shoulders of those who instigated and conducted it and upon the judge who tried it, where it ought to have rested from the beginning. I can not help but believe that when the Senate of the United States gets through with the spectacular and the camouflage and the mere eloquent oratory of men who will speak and comes to consider the facts in the case, they will, in conscience and in judgment, come to the conclusion that Truman H. Newberry did nothing wrong and that under the law and the evidence he can not be and ought not to be deprived of his seat in this body because friends of his contributed more money than you and I think ought to be contributed.

Most Senators on this floor believe that the sum of money spent in this primary was altogether too large. I think so myself. I doubt if there is much difference of opinion on either side of the Chamber as to that. I remember a statement of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] when he said, "If sums of money like this are to be expended, no poor man could ever run for office"; and it is true. There are Members of this body who believe that if a candidate, through the instrumentality of his friends or of others, should use a larger sum of money than the law provided, he ought to be punished; that his friends, even without his consent, ought not to be allowed to spend an undue amount in a primary or in a general election. There is merit in that position; but that is not the law to-day. If we want to make it the law, there is a way to do it. It is neither right nor fair to punish a man for something that is not illegal to-day. There is no law to-day upon the statute books that prohibits a voluntary association of friends from contributing any amount of money they like for the campaign of the Senator from Mississippi or of any other Senator, or from making as much of an effort in his behalf as they see fit to make.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SPENCER. Not now. I will finish in a moment. I can go into any man's State, either for or against him, without his knowledge or consent, and I can make such a campaign as his friend or his enemy, as I like, and spend as much money for proper purposes as I like, and there is no law against it.

If there are those in this body who think that this ought not to be the law, that under no circumstances ought a larger sum of money to be spent in a primary or general election than a given amount, let us write it into the law; but for God's sake let us not unseat a colleague on this floor for doing something that neither has the taint of illegality in it nor was done with a single unfair, immoral, or illegal purpose.

There can be few Senators whose conscience and whose judgment would lead them to say: "We will punish a man if his friends contribute to his campaign more than we think they ought to contribute; we will punish him, we will brand him and his family with disgrace, and we will oust him from this body." For what? For anything he has done? No. For anything he has consented to? No. For what? Because his friends loved him enough, or thought the emergency was great enough, to contribute and use a sum of money larger than you and I think ought to be used; and, Senators, in conclusion may I say not one dollar of this campaign fund was used for a single improper or illegal purpose during the whole primary campaign or at the general election.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bursum	Harris	New	Sutherland
Calder	Harrison	Oddle	Swanson
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Townsend
Caraway	Kenyon	Phipps	Wadsworth
Curtis	Keyes	Poinexter	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	King	Pomerene	Warren
Ernst	La Follette	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	McCumber	Shortridge	Watson, Ind.
France	McKellar	Smith
Gerry	McLean	Spencer
Hale	McNary	Sterling

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. MCKINLEY, and Mr. TRAMMELL answered to their names when called.

Mr. CAMERON, Mr. BALL, Mr. ELKINS, Mr. BORAH, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. KENDRICK, and Mr. NICHOLSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators are recorded as present. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senate has been in session now since 12 o'clock. Quite a number of us did not even have time to get lunch, but were kept here continuously. This is the first day this matter has been on. I do not feel that I ought to be required to go on to-night, and I want to ask Senators on the other side of the Chamber to consent either to an adjournment or to a recess until to-morrow. I shall be ready to proceed then as expeditiously as I can.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I very much dislike to inconvenience the Senator, but I have just had a consultation with a number of Senators on this side, and the fact of the matter is that the announcement having been made this morning that we would continue the session to-night, at least for a time, and our information being that there are a number of Senators on both sides who want to be heard at length, the situation of the Calendar of the Senate leads this side to the general impression that we ought to go on at least for a time. I am sorry if it inconveniences the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, why can we not have a recess. There is no use in trying to conceal the real purpose in this matter. The fact is that there was a little bit of feeling because a unanimous-consent agreement could not be had. I was one of those who were willing to enter into that agreement.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. POMERENE. Just a moment, please. Some Senators—I am not finding fault with them at all—have felt that it was unwise at this time to do it. They were within their rights. I am not finding any fault with that. I am simply alluding to the fact. It seems to me that after the long sessions we have had here during the last two or three weeks there is not any reason why at this particular stage of this matter we should be compelled to go on at these unseemly hours. If it should develop later on that there is any disposition to unduly prolong the discussion, it will be time for us to take counsel of the situation as it may then develop.

This is a serious matter, whichever view we may take of the question, and there should be a full discussion of it. It is a very grave thing to challenge the seat of a Senator. I think Senators know that I have not been in the habit of unduly prolonging debate or anything of that sort, and I am not going to do it in this case. Necessarily, it is going to take me some time. There is a record here of 2,000 pages. There are questions of law, as well as questions of fact, to be discussed, and I regret that we can not agree as to what this record shows; but it seems that that is the situation, and I make an appeal to the Senate now not to compel me to go on at this particular hour. I will be ready to go on in the morning at any time the Senate may agree upon.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. This is the second or third time that an allusion has been made to the objection raised this morning to a postponement of the case so as to have it run into another year. I thought the case ought to be disposed of now, in justice to the great State of Michigan, in justice to the Senate, in justice to the country, and, least of all, to the Senator who now occupies a seat, and whose seat is contested. We have taken hold of the plow; let us plow the row out. Let us settle the thing now. I am an older man than the Senator from Ohio, and I am willing to come here and stay with it and stay by it. My mind is open on the subject; I make no secret of that, and very probably his argument will decide my opinion; but I am going to try this case like a juror.

Mr. POMERENE. That is right.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If I had any bias or prejudice in my mind for or against the accused, I would disqualify myself, and refuse to sit on the case.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia entertains the proper frame of mind toward this case. Every Senator ought to approach its consideration in that way, and I hope that will be so, but I again ask the Senate to either recess or adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, personally I am very anxious to accommodate the Senator from Ohio, who is always fair in committee and in the Senate, but to-day the word was passed out that there would be a session to-night. I have taken two-thirds of the Members on this side into the cloakroom and asked their views about it, and they say that they have canceled engagements for one thing or another under the impression that they were to stay here to-night, and they insist on staying.

Therefore, I think the only thing we can do is to go on with the session. I regret very much to say that to the Senator from Ohio, but I have no other alternative, and I am wondering whether some one on the other side can not at this time take the Senator's place in the discussion.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I have been told that a number of Senators on the other side want to speak, and, knowing that the Senator from Ohio is suffering with a sore throat, I was anxious to see him relieved. I hope that even yet he can find some one over there to take his place during the night discussion. If Senators would fix some time for a vote so that we might know that there would be no undue prolongation of the disposition of this matter we might agree upon a recess.

Mr. POMERENE. I was in hopes that perhaps, if we were to adjourn or recess now, by to-morrow some arrangement of that kind could be made. I think I am justified in saying, from what I have heard within the last hour on this side of the Chamber, that the opportunity of entering into an agreement of that kind is very much better now than it was, and my belief is that by to-morrow we can enter into some unanimous-consent agreement. I hope so, at least.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. To what effect?

Mr. POMERENE. To fix a time to vote finally upon this case.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I do not think we can. I think we ought to settle it right now, before we stop.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate adjourn, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a pair for the day with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. McKINLEY (when his name was called). I have a permanent pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. SIMMONS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. He is paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD].

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK. Has the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a pair with that Senator, and not being able to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], and vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 34, as follows:

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I was appointed a member of the subcommittee on Privileges and Elections and after hearing part of the testimony, but not all of it, I read all of the testimony and submitted what I termed "additional views."

I understand that the majority report and the views of the minority are by order of the Senate to be printed in the Record at the point where the pending resolution was laid before the Senate. I ask that my additional views as I wrote them be printed in the Record in 8-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I wish to appeal to Senators on the other side, in view of the present situation, to take a recess or to have some one upon that side of the Chamber consume the time in speaking. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is prepared to reply to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], but he is not prepared to speak now. He has stated that at the hour to which we may adjourn or take a recess tomorrow he will be prepared to go on.

This is the first day this case has been brought before the Senate. It is the first time in my long experience in the Senate when I have ever seen evidence of any such high-handed proceeding as this. What does it mean? It means that if the other side can not get a unanimous-consent agreement on any measure they bring before the Senate, they intend to hold continuous sessions. That is the substance of it. I have never seen the Senate sought to be coerced in any such way as that before. The first day that this matter is brought before the Senate, the very first day, an effort is made to hold a continuous night session and to force the Senator from Ohio to speak.

It has been stated that Senators on the other side of the aisle are desirous of speaking before this matter is concluded. All we ask is that if we stay here until to-morrow morning you shall occupy the time on your side and permit the Senator from Ohio, who has carefully prepared the case, to speak to-morrow. He has frankly said that he can not proceed to-night, and he does not desire to proceed to-night. I have never known a request of that kind presented in the Senate to be denied before.

I have always been a conservative Senator. I have never tried to be radical; I have never filibustered or done anything tending in that direction. But let it be distinctly understood now that the Senate can not be run by coming in here and stating that if you do not get a unanimous-consent agreement when you want to get legislation through we are going to have continuous sessions.

Any Senator who objected to the unanimous-consent agreement was within his right. That is the substance of your conduct here to-night. If you can not get a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on this measure you propose, the first day it comes before the Senate, regardless of debate, regardless of the convenience of Senators, to force a continuous session. I can understand why you may have objected to a motion to adjourn, because that would have forced a morning hour. So I move that the Senate now take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BORAH (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. In his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN. I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS], who is paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I will let this announcement stand for the night.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—22.

So the Senate refused to take a recess until noon to-morrow.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I simply wish to make one more motion, not with any purpose of filibustering but to see if the other side are disposed to treat the Senator from Ohio with any consideration or any fairness. He will be ready to proceed to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock. I have never known a request in an important matter like this to be denied in my long experience in the Senate except where a filibuster had been developed. No one can charge that there is any filibuster involved in this matter.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] consumed the entire afternoon in speaking on the pending case. It is unfair now to compel a reply to be made to-night, when it is now a quarter after 6, when the Senator who is prepared to make that reply is tired and has stated to the Senate that he does not feel well enough and is not disposed to go on to-night. That Senator from Ohio has studied the matter for this side of the Chamber and for those who are not favorable to the majority report. It is an act of injustice to try to compel him to speak to-night. I am going to make a final appeal to the fairness of Senators on the other side of the aisle. There is no desire to delay, no effort to delay the early consideration of this case.

I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BORAH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. McKINLEY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with regard to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before concerning my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], which I transfer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

So the Senate refused to take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am impressed with the fact that this method of transacting business is neither in the interest of the country nor for the benefit of the American people. It is merely for the purpose of trying to maintain some little party advantage which our friends upon the other side feel that they might have by forcing us into a night session. I see no use of getting so very busy all at once when Congress, controlled and directed by a Republican majority, has loafed along here a great deal during the past year and has failed to give attention to important public business, and yet, when we come to this election case, which has been pending here for a year or two, we have got to crowd it practically into one day's session and stay here with it into the night. This election case has been pending here for about a year and a half, I am informed.

I am always anxious to expedite the public business when it is for the public interest, but I do not see any reason why we should be forced to go ahead at this time, and I move that the Senate recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BORAH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore in regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore concerning my pair and its transfer, I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as heretofore made, I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Ashurst	Harris	Pomerene	Trammell
Borah	Harrison	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	King	Shields	Walsh, Mont.

So the Senate refused to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the other side of the Chamber if it is really the intention to go on to-night, and not to recess or adjourn? Will you not really open up your hearts and adjourn over until to-morrow, in view of the circumstances?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the Senator accused us this morning of starting many times and doing nothing, and never completing any program. We announced this morning that this matter ought to be kept before the Senate to-night. I do not think there is any intention upon this side to keep it before the Senate unduly, to a very late hour; but if there are as many Senators who want to speak as the Senator from Mississippi thinks, I felt on this side that we ought to make progress with this matter. Of course, we all recognize how important it is. If the Senator felt that we could vote to-morrow night or Friday morning, there would be no question about fixing the hour to suit the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, is it the intention of the Senator, if nobody on this side wants to speak to-night, to proceed to a vote at once?

Mr. SPENCER. Oh, if there is no Senator ready to speak on the other side, and no one cares to speak on this side, obviously there is only one thing to do, and that is to vote.

Mr. SWANSON. Then, unless the Senator from Ohio or some other Senator on this side wants to speak to-night, your purpose is to have a vote, as I understand?

Mr. SPENCER. I can not say that to the Senator from Virginia, because I do not know who may want to speak on this side; but certainly if there is no one—

Mr. SWANSON. I want to ask the Senator for his idea of fairness. He has charge of this matter, I understand.

Mr. SPENCER. I think there ought to be ample opportunity for discussion on both sides.

Mr. SWANSON. Just as a question of fairness, senatorial courtesy, and proper dealing between Senators, does the Senator from Missouri think it is fair for him to consume four or five hours in presenting this case on the affirmative side to-day and compel the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to follow him at this late hour, without supper, almost without lunch, when the Senator has consumed all day? I just want to know if that is the Senator's idea of fair discussion in the Senate.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President—

Mr. SWANSON. I did not ask the Senator from Indiana. I asked the Senator from Missouri, who has charge of this matter, whether he thinks that is fair. I should like to get his idea of fairness.

Mr. SPENCER. I think the Senator from Virginia will realize that a good part of the time that was ostensibly charged to me was taken up by the questions and the remarks upon the other side. Certainly I have no disposition in the world to interfere with a full discussion of this case. The announcement has been made that there are 25 Senators upon the other side who want and intend to be heard. Why can not some of them be heard now? I do not want to impose upon the Senator from Ohio—who is my personal friend, and whom I admire—the duty of making a speech if he does not feel able to do it; but there are 25 other Senators on the other side, so we have been informed, who intend to speak. Why can not some of them speak?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know any of the 25 who are going to speak. The only question to-night is whether or not you are going to compel the Senator from Ohio to proceed. Does the Senator think it is fair to compel him now to do it when he states that he is not prepared—he is not well enough? I should like to know if the Senator thinks that is proper courtesy to be extended to the Senator from Ohio—to compel him to go on to-night or else to vote on this matter?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President—

Mr. SWANSON. I am asking the Senator from Missouri. I am not asking the Senator from Indiana. I simply want to find out his idea of fairness.

Mr. SPENCER. I have answered the Senator's question as fully as I can.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me while I ask a question?

Mr. SWANSON. I will.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Why can we not have a unanimous-consent agreement to take a vote on this matter next Friday afternoon?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am tired, for one Member of this body, the first day a matter is brought before the Senate, of having a demand made for unanimous consent for a vote. You have been trying to coerce us by having night sessions. I am tired of being coerced in that way myself.

Mr. McKELLAR. And we are not going to do it.

Mr. SWANSON. You come here to-night and say you are going to have a continuous session and compel a vote on this case to-night unless you can get a unanimous-consent agreement.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; you have not a chance to get a vote. We are not going to have a vote to-night.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I trust that everybody will keep in good humor about a proposition of this kind.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think this is almost a case where a Senator is justified in losing his good humor. I think it is carrying it to a very, very excessive extent. The improper attitude that the majority has taken toward the Senator from Ohio is something that I have not seen here on either side since I have been here. I regret very, very much to see it, and I want to say in all frankness that we are not going to have a vote to-night.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Indiana, apropos of his suggestion that we take a vote on Friday, that the beer bill will be voted on upon the 18th, and I am told that a number of Senators intend to argue legal phases of the question, particularly in reply to the very able legal argument submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and one or two other arguments that have been submitted upon the other side. I know that a number of Senators upon this side intend to speak upon that subject, and, as the Senator knows, by unanimous consent entered into some time ago, that matter will be voted upon on the 18th; so the Senator can see that it would not be quite fair—and I know that he wants to be fair—to suggest, even, that we vote at so early a date as that.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I forgot that.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, did the junior Senator from Indiana want to ask me a question?

Mr. NEW. No. My colleague said what I was about to say.

Mr. HARRISON. So it is understood that we must go on to-night?

Mr. NEW. Is the Senator addressing that question to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I was addressing it to all of the other side.

Mr. NEW. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to answer that question, if it is addressed to me.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator was included. I consider him one on that side.

Mr. NEW. All right. If I am included, I am ready to answer for one Senator. I say, let us proceed with the consideration of this question now.

Mr. President, this is all fatuous. It is nonsense and worse to talk about an attempt to rush this case through. It has been before the Senate of the United States for two years. It has been through the Supreme Court of the United States to a conclusion. It has been before a committee of this body for months and months officially, and now it is brought here, and every effort is made by the minority to delay it. Motion after motion is made on the other side, the same thing over and over again, except with a difference that is almost imperceptible, for the very purpose of delaying consideration of this case.

Mr. CARAWAY. And we are going to keep it up.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I for one am tired of that way of conducting the business of the Senate of the United States. Moreover, I am here to say that the country is tired of it.

Mr. HARRISON. We are going to let the Senator rest.

Mr. NEW. All right. The Senator from Indiana will be here for some time; let the Senator from Mississippi make no mistake about that; but he asked me a question, and I have answered it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield? I should like to know why it is after you have delayed bringing this matter in here for a year or two that you then want to speed it up and finish it all in one day?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, it does not make any difference what question is brought into the Senate; efforts are made by those who are opposed to it to prevent a vote on it at all—to prevent the settlement of the question. What I want, and what I insist upon, is the settlement of a question that is once before the Senate, and not to have it deferred by all sorts of dilatory motions.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator says this matter has been before a committee of the Senate for two years. That is an indictment against the Senator's own party in the management of affairs here upon the floor. It should have been out sooner. It should have been taken up sooner. A good many people would criticize a Senator for voting with a sword like this hanging over him, so I am sorry, too, that it has been here for that long; but the Senator can not fuss with us about that. He must quarrel with the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], who this afternoon made a very long speech, and a very eloquent speech, and a very able speech from his standpoint, after which he was congratulated by most of the Senators over there, and a love feast was held on that side.

The Senator, though, in stating that this matter had been before the committee and before the Senate for a long time, failed to tell us that it had also been before a jury—a jury in Michigan; a jury composed, perhaps, of Republicans and of Democrats, peers of the distinguished Senator who now sits here and upon whom we are soon to vote—and that jury after full consideration passed a verdict. I think in Michigan a verdict must be passed unanimously. I do not think they have the three-quarters rule up there. I have not heard about it; so evidently 12 men, all of them who heard the evidence, said that he was guilty; and then the presiding judge—I take it he must have been a Republican, too, because there are very few Democrats up in Michigan—passed judgment on it and the penalty; so the Senator should have alluded to that also.

We are not trying to delay this matter unnecessarily. We merely ask that it be put off so that the Senators who have not had access to the record may study it in an orderly way, like other cases such as this which have come before the Senate before. It seems, however, that the leadership over there would cram it down our throats. They desire not to be courteous to the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the ranking Democrat on the committee. They want to force him to-night to speak, when he perhaps is not physically able to speak. He will be ready to-morrow to speak.

Those are the tactics that you have adopted over there. You know that you will not get anywhere to-night. I look at the pleasing countenances of my friends there. You can retire to the cloak room. You can sing songs, as you did the other night when you passed that iniquitous tax bill which the people will condemn you for the first opportunity they get, and so to-night you can retire if you please, unless you want to stay here, because I am going to read some of the testimony. You have not seen it before—only a few of you. Few of you have read the report that has been filed. Few of you have read the briefs of counsel, and so, if you insist on this, we are going to read it to you and try to inform you and inform ourselves, because that is about the only opportunity and way in which we can inform ourselves about this matter.

Mr. NEW. I am glad to know that the time of the Senator from Mississippi will be so well occupied.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator's time will be well occupied if he will sit here, because no doubt he has not read a line either of the reports or of the testimony.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HARRISON. In one moment. There was a poll taken over there, so I am informed, and only six Senators over there said that they were going to vote against the sitting Senator, and eight, as I understand by the poll, said, "Well, we want to hear the testimony; we want to sit as jurors," and would not commit themselves; but you think you have enough votes to seat the distinguished Senator from Michigan without reading the record, many of you, or the report.

Now I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I simply wanted to suggest that the Senator from Indiana stated that the case had been before the Senate for some two years. As a matter of fact, we know that it has been tied up in committee, and that it has only been before the Senate for five hours. That is the length of time that it has been here—just five hours. All the other time has been spent in whatever was going on in the committee room.

Mr. HARRISON. They finally got the consent of their conscience, but they had quite a wrestle with it before they did.

Mr. President, this report is quite illuminating. I hope Senators will sit here and listen to it as I carefully, slowly, and accurately read it; and I promise you that if you do not sit here to-night and hear it, we will see that you are brought here, so that the public business can be transacted. If I read too slowly at times, call my attention to it and I will rush it up, maybe, a little bit; but catch the words, because this report was written and drafted by Senators who heard the testimony, who gave full and fair consideration to the question, and their views will be quite influential if you are fair and just in the matter, with open minds to render a real verdict in this matter.

The first report I want to read is the report containing the views of the minority. That was filed by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who will to-morrow speak on this question. I do not blame Senators upon the other side for not wanting him to speak to-morrow.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. Let me ask the Senator a direct question.

Mr. HARRISON. I will be glad to answer it, if I can.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. What is the reason, the candid, frank, and, of course, the true reason, why the distinguished Senator from Ohio does not open up and proceed with his argument? I assure the Senator from Mississippi and I assure the Senator from Ohio that I shall be very attentive to his argument. What is the reason? What is the true reason?

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure the Senator asks that question in all sincerity.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sorry that the Senator was not in the Senate this afternoon, when for about four hours that proposition was discussed, and when the Senator from Ohio explained why he could not speak to-night.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. In a word, what was the reason?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Ohio says that his throat is in such a condition to-night that he can not go ahead; that he is tired; that as this matter is one of great importance he concentrated his thoughts when listening to the able speech of the Senator from Missouri this afternoon, which was quite lengthy and went quite into detail. To-morrow the Senator from Ohio will feel refreshed and can go on, feeling that he can deal with this subject as the subject should be dealt with.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. May I then make this observation: That being so—and I am not questioning the accuracy or the truthfulness of the statement—why is it that among the many able Senators on the other side not one can, so to speak, come to the rescue or to the aid and proceed with thoughtful argument of the matter we have here to consider and determine? May I say here that I have voted upon these several motions, as against adjournment and as against recessing. Requests have come to this side, but according to my notion each and every request has been accompanied by an insult. Gentlemen seek adjournment, or seek a recess, and along with the words expressing their wishes, those of us who have voted as against their wishes are accused of wrong purposes and an attempt to rush or to jam this proposition forward to a conclusion.

In all sincerity, without any desire to indulge in irony or sarcasm or make any point one way or the other, I do not say that Senators upon the other side who think, as their words indicate, contrary to me ought to be ready and willing to proceed, but it does seem to me that among them there should be at least one or more who could take up the burden of the argument. If it be that we are judges, if we are going to be governed by the evidence, persuaded or convinced by argument, is there not one among you who can go forward?

Mr. HARRISON. Has the Senator now finished his question?

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. I am through; but I say this because I voted in the negative on those questions. I have not done so to embarrass anybody or to offend anybody.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator could not be guilty of offending or embarrassing anybody.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. I thank the Senator, but I do not wish to have it imputed to me that my motives are other than what I have indicated.

Mr. HARRISON. Whatever was said against the other side the Senator is exculpated.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. Why can not some Senator on the other side go forward and spend an hour or two in legitimate argument? If I desired to, I could say more; but I merely wished to give expression to these thoughts.

Mr. HARRISON. I would be very glad to have the Senator continue.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. No; I have said this in the hope that some gentleman over there would take up the argument and go ahead.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator, before he takes his seat, because I am very anxious to know if he heard the explanation of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], another member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on yesterday, as to why he did not desire to proceed at this time?

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. I do not recall that I did.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sorry the Senator was not here, because that was quite fully discussed, and the Senator from Montana said that he had not yet had time to study the matter as he desired, and that he preferred that it be put off a few days so that he could discuss it fully. That is the reason why Senators on this side are not now ready to proceed, except the Senator from Ohio, and I have stated the reasons why he does not desire to proceed at this time. I might propound the same question to the Senator from California which he has propounded to us; why does not some Senator on the other side proceed to discuss the proposition to-night, in view of the situation? I would be glad to yield the floor.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I can imagine a very good reason. We have listened this afternoon to an elaborate discussion of the matter by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER]. There were a good many interruptions, questions, and observations, which consumed some time. But the case of Senator NEWBERRY has been presented. It would naturally follow, in the order of discussion and debate, that those opposing the views expressed by the Senator from Missouri should take up the burden of the argument.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It seems to me that is the logical and natural order of procedure.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree with the Senator, and for that reason we desire that the Senator from Ohio, the ranking member of the minority of the committee, shall proceed to-morrow, when he is fresh, and when we hope that he can convince, perhaps, the Senator from California, who, of course, has not prejudged the matter, because the Senator is always open-minded and fair. But since no one else is to proceed, and since the other side seem to want to jam the proposition through to-night, we have to utilize the time, and I know of nothing which would contribute more to the edification of the Senators who could not read the testimony than to read it to-night, or to read the reports, or the briefs of counsel. I am sure the Senator from California will agree with me on that.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator contemplate reading those now?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. SWANSON. I think there ought to be a quorum present when those are read, and I raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, has any business been transacted since the roll call showed a quorum present?

Mr. SWANSON. A point of no quorum has not been made this evening.

Mr. HARRISON. There was a vote on a motion to recess.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But that roll call showed a quorum present, and as no business has been transacted since, I make the point of order against the point raised by the Senator from Virginia. I would like to have the point of order passed upon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I would like to say a word in relation to the point of order. The Senator from New York, I dare say, will not contend that if a vote is taken on a matter pending, and that vote shows a quorum present, subsequent thereto the suggestion of the absence of a quorum can not be made, and that the presumption obtains for an indefinite period thereafter that a quorum is present. The Presiding Officer will certainly not hold that way, for that would be a most unfortunate ruling.

The fact that a quorum voted upon business is of no consequence at all. The question is, was business done, and of course no business could be done unless a quorum were present. So the argument of the Senator from New York would destroy the opportunity to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SWANSON. In connection with this point of order, I will say that it has been repeatedly decided that after a quorum has been disclosed, a point of no quorum can not be made until business has intervened. If a point of no quorum is made, and a quorum is disclosed, business must intervene before the point can again be made, for the simple reason that if the rule were otherwise the time of the Senate might be consumed in continually calling the roll to ascertain whether a quorum were present. It has been held that debate is not intervening business. The Senate has transacted business since the point of the lack of a quorum was last made. Action on a motion to adjourn or a motion to recess is the transaction of business, and consequently this is not the repetition of the point before the transaction of business. After a motion to adjourn has been voted down, another motion to adjourn can not be made until there is intervening business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is prepared to rule that it is in order to make the point of no quorum at this time. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Nicholson	Sterling
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Sutherland
Cameron	Keyes	Oddie	Swanson
Capper	King	Phipps	Townsend
Curtis	McCumber	Polindexter	Wadsworth
Ernst	McKellar	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	McKinley	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Shortridge	Watson, Ind.
Gooding	McNary	Smoot
Hale	New	Spencer

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Thirty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, pending that I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is that motion in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of absent Senators.

Mr. ELKINS and Mr. FRANCE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, pending that I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SWANSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. Has the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. BALL. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and vote "nay."

Mr. McKINLEY (after having voted in the negative). Has the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. McKINLEY. Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STERLING (after having voted in the negative). Has the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. STERLING. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], and let my vote stand.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FERNALD. Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—6.
Harris	McKellar	Sheppard	Swanson
La Follette	Pomerene
Ball	Frelinghuysen	New	Sterling
Bursum	Gooding	Nicholson	Sutherland
Cameron	Hale	Norbeck	Townsend
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Wadsworth

Fletcher	Lodge	Shields

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call failing to disclose a quorum, the Secretary will continue the roll call.

Mr. CURTIS. I renew my motion that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. KENYON, Mr. LADD, Mr. NELSON, Mr. BALL, Mr. BRANDEGEE, and Mr. CUMMINS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

After some delay Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. RANSELL, and Mr. HARRISON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Fifty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in the rush on the other side of the Chamber to jam this matter through, I would like to observe that there are now nine Republican Senators in their seats. I notice that they are now coming out of the cloak-room, of course, to augment the number, and there seems to be a difference of opinion as to the number present. Some suggest that there may be as many as 11.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator has just commenced to speak, and, of course, he would expect them to come in now.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the Senator can go out if he desires.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is my intention to stay.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to read to the Senate the report, which doubtless the Senator has not read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes; I have read it. I am on the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has read both the minority report and the majority report. I wonder if the Senator has read the testimony?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator from Mississippi cross-examining me?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I would not cross-examine the Senator, but the Senator said that he had read the report. That is what I understood. Of course the Senator need not stay in the Chamber while I am reading the report.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had hoped to stay to listen to the dulcet tones of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. That is very sweet of the Senator. He is very kind. The Senator is always agreeable.

Mr. President, this is the report which was filed by the minority members of the committee that investigated the charges preferred against the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], and it is with reference to those that the resolution is now offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] presented the minority report. I am glad the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is going to listen to it. I note that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] is present, and I hope he will remain so that he may listen to it also.

Certain Senators signed this report. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] filed a separate report. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] signed the report, with additional views presented by Mr. ASHURST.

Mr. President, I would like to have quiet in the Chamber while I am reading this important document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. HARRISON. The report states that—

The undersigned members of the committee dissent from the report of the majority for the following reasons:

In 1918 there were 83 counties in Michigan, containing 2,320 voting districts or precincts.

The primaries were held on August 27. Mr. Truman H. Newberry was nominated by the Republicans, Mr. Henry Ford by the Democrats.

At the November election, according to the official returns, 432,541 votes were cast. Of these Truman H. Newberry received 220,054, and Henry Ford, 212,487. Mr. Newberry's plurality, according to the official returns, was 7,567.

Upon the recount a total of 429,836 ballots were examined, with the result (including the returns in the few precincts where the ballots were not available and where the official count was accepted) that Mr. Newberry received 217,085 votes and Mr. Ford 212,751 votes, Mr. Newberry's plurality being 4,334.

PRIMARY ELECTION.

The record shows the charges in detail, and it is not necessary to repeat them here. We desire to call attention specifically to the following assertions set forth in the report of the majority:

"First. The clear result of all the testimony is that there is no evidence whatever to sustain the charge of improper use of money at the primary or general election.

"Second. There was expended in the primary election in the interest of Truman H. Newberry approximately $195,000, which was largely contributed by John S. Newberry, a brother, and other relatives and friends of Truman H. Newberry. Such contributions were not solicited by Truman H. Newberry, nor was the fact that they were given or were to be given or used known to him.

"Third. Truman H. Newberry was absent from the State of Michigan continuously during the entire time from the early spring of 1918 until late in the fall of 1918, and long after the primary election had been held. He took no part whatever either in the financial or other features of the primary campaign or its direction or control.

"Fourth. He was kept fully informed from time to time as to the progress of the campaign in Michigan, but he had no knowledge of the financial management of the campaign. He did not know the amount of money being expended, nor by whom contributions were made, nor the purposes for which the money was used.

"Fifth. From his general knowledge of the character of the campaign that was being conducted in Michigan and the extent of publicity given to his candidacy through the newspapers, it is presumed that he had a general idea that a large sum of money was necessarily being spent.

"Sixth. The evidence shows conclusively that the financial cost of the campaign was voluntarily borne by relatives and friends of Truman H. Newberry, and was entirely without solicitation or knowledge upon his part.

"Seventh. The amount of money spent at the primary was large—too large—but there was no concealment whatever with regard to it."

The report filed by the Newberry senatorial committee showed contributions aggregating $178,856 and expenditures of $176,568.08.

"Eighth. Later on some bills which had been delayed in presentation, mainly for advertising, amounting to between ten and fifteen thousand dollars, were presented and were paid by the Newberry campaign committee. But the fact that approximately $195,000 was used in the primary was frankly and freely admitted, and nothing in the testimony has materially changed this admission."

The report further says:

On the contrary, it is claimed by the contestant's attorneys, and, we think, with very great force, that the proved expenses totaled very much more, the exact amount of which can not be ascertained from the record because of the indefiniteness of much of the testimony and the incompleteness of the records kept by the Newberry campaign committee. The amount of proven expenditures, as claimed by the attorneys for the contestant, amount to $263,060.67.

And yet the leadership here would jam through this proposition within a few hours after it is presented.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Incidentally they are setting the precedent that a reasonable price to be paid for a United States senatorship is the sum of $263,000. I do not know how it strikes other Senators, but I am afraid there would be some of us who could not raise that much money if such a price were fixed.

Mr. HARRISON. Why, Senators, do you believe that the American people, in the first place, would sanction action upon your part even in voting to seat a Senator who had expended $263,000 in a primary election? But when you drive it through with spur and whip without giving a small minority the opportunity of studying the record or time even to read the reports of the minority and the majority, keeping us here night and day and only granting us permission to listen to the chairman of the subcommittee which investigated the matter present his side of the proposition, do Senators think that is fair? If they do, they are not in accord with the public opinion of the country. They had better make a survey of the situation.

The American people, in the first place, do not believe in allowing an expenditure of $263,000 by a candidate for the United States Senate at a primary election. They will condemn that. Already a jury has condemned it. But when you Republicans take upon yourselves the responsibility of not allowing a free and full discussion of the proposition and choose a time of your own liking when, because of the peculiar circumstances confronting the country, as the disarmament conference is now meeting and people's minds and hearts are wrapped up in the consideration and result of that conference and the papers are naturally desirous of feeding to the people the news that the public is interested in to a greater extent than anything else or any other matter, you know that this case and the facts in the case will not go to the people; and for this, when it is known, the people will condemn you in stronger terms.

I have an interest in your party. I do not desire to see you go on the rocks too quickly. I do not want the people to exercise the recall on you in those States which have the recall. I like a fair fight. I would like to have it done in an orderly way and I want it to come about next November when we have our regular election. What we will do to you when that election comes around will be a plenty.

The election in New York the other day will not compare with it. I hope that the distinguished Presiding Officer [Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair] agrees with me in that. A little while ago there was an election in New Mexico and next day we heard much talk about it; but we have not heard Republicans saying anything about the election the other day. Even the city of Marion, that is famed now throughout the world for having during the last presidential campaign entertained Al Jolson, the black-face comedian, and other actors and great baseball players, whose expenses were paid by Mr. Wrigley, the chewing-gum man, who contributed liberally to the Republican campaign fund and offered to the Republican campaign committee last year all the electric signs in all the cities to be transformed from "Wrigley's" to "Harding and Coolidge," and whose services the Finance Committee rewarded so liberally in the consideration of the tax bill by taking off the tax on chewing gum, which action was sanctioned and approved by a majority in this Chamber—I say that the city of Marion, which was made famous by Al Jolson and Wrigley and George Harvey, who sat around the front porch advising and counseling and who since has disgraced America, and which was made famous also by being the home of the President of the United States, the other day turned out a Republican and went Democratic by a big vote. We did not hear anything about that from the other side.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not a word was published about it in any Washington paper. We had to go outside of the Washington papers in order to get the news.

Mr. HARRISON. I know that was not sweet news to Senators on the other side of the Chamber. The tide is turning against them really too rapidly, but I ask them not by their actions in the Newberry case to exercise their power to such an extent as will compel the people of those States where the recall may be exercised to have the recall invoked against them. We want them to wait until the next election, because we shall fix them then.

So I read further:

Ninth—

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is leaving out a sentence of the report, is he not?

Mr. HARRISON. I am mighty glad that that struck the eagle eye of the Senator from New York.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Evidently the Senator can get but little out of the reading of this report if the Senator leaves out anything, and I ask him to yield to me in order that I may make a motion to adjourn. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the demand for the yeas and nays supported?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators in favor of the motion to adjourn will say "aye."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. No debate is in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. One-fifth of the Senators present may call for the yeas and nays—

Mr. WADSWORTH. No debate is in order pending a motion to adjourn.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it is proper to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there are not 25 Senators present and that—

Mr. WADSWORTH. Nothing is in order pending a motion to adjourn.

Mr. McKELLAR. I rise to a point of order. The rules of the Senate provide that one-fifth of the Senators present—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I respectfully suggest that the Senator from Tennessee is out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is out of order. The question is on the motion to adjourn. The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The question being put on a division, the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I counted them, there are 23 Senators present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee say that business has been transacted since the last roll call?

Mr. McKELLAR. A motion to adjourn has been made and voted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Dial	Hale	McKinley
Brandegee	Elkins	Harris	McLean
Bursum	Ernst	Hitchcock	McNary
Cameron	Fernald	Jones, Wash.	Nelson
Capper	Fletcher	Keyes	New
Caraway	France	Ladd	Nicholson
Cummins	Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Norbeck
Curtis	Gooding	McKellar	Oddie

Phipps
Poindexter
Ransdell
Sheppard

Shortridge
Smoot
Spencer
Sterling

Sutherland
Townsend
Wadsworth
Warren

Watson, Ga.
Watson, Ind.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] is necessarily absent on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KENYON and Mr. ROBINSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. HARRISON answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. There is a rule, of course, that no Senator can speak more than twice on the same matter on the same day. If I should yield for a motion to be made, it might count against me in the record. I just want to get the status of the proposition. The parliamentary inquiry is, Can I, holding the floor, make a motion, and if action is taken on the motion, would that preclude me then from continuing the discussion? I take it that there is no question that if I should yield to some Senator to make a motion, it would; but if I have the floor and make the motion, as I have interpreted the rule—and I think that is correct—I do not yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator say that he can keep the floor while the Senate is deciding his motion? Suppose the roll were called?

Mr. HARRISON. I am propounding the parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will answer the Senator for the time being—understanding that it is a question that has been decided both ways heretofore by the same Presiding Officer—that if the Senator makes a motion the Chair will understand that he has yielded the floor for the purpose of having the motion decided.

Mr. HARRISON. I have seen a ruling the other way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator, having been put on notice, of course, will suffer no inconvenience. If the Senator had not been put on notice, then perhaps the Chair might give the Senator the benefit of the doubt, always intending to rule so that debate can proceed.

Mr. HARRISON. So I made a mistake in propounding the parliamentary inquiry. [Laughter.] I notice in the precedents that it was ruled by Mr. Clarke, of Arkansas, that a Senator may not be taken from the floor by another Senator asking a question and then making a motion; and I had hoped that the Presiding Officer would follow that ruling, because I have some motions that I shall perhaps want to make to-night.

The Chair understands that I am occupying the floor now merely to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I was just propounding a parliamentary inquiry. I was not taking the floor in my own right at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's inquiry has been answered.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I have not taken the floor. The Senator from Tennessee is claiming the floor in his own right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thought the proposition of the Senator was that he kept the floor while the motion was being decided.

Mr. HARRISON. That was the parliamentary inquiry; but, in view of the answer of the Chair, I have not the floor. I may have it later.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Continuing the reading of the minority report—

The report filed by the Newberry senatorial committee showed contributions aggregating $178,856 and expenditures $176,568.08.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator say where he is reading?

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 2.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has not that been read once?

Mr. McKELLAR. I understood that it had been; but when the Senator from Mississippi overlooked it, his attention was called to it by the Senator from New York, as I recall.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I want to have this thing absolutely accurate, because the Senator from Mississippi assured the Senate that he would read the report just as it was, and wanted us all to listen. The Senator from Mississippi left off a little farther down, beginning in the middle of the next paragraph. He ended with the numerals "$263,060.67."

Mr. McKELLAR. In order that there may not be any mistake about it, I will continue it from where I started.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the Senator read it all again.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; there is plenty of it here, and it is all very excellent reading. There is plenty of it here to keep us until, say, 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Go to it.

Mr. McKELLAR (reading):

Eighth. Later on some bills which had been delayed in presentation, mainly for advertising, amounting to between ten and fifteen thousand dollars, were presented and were paid by the Newberry campaign committee. But the fact that approximately $195,000 was used in the primary was frankly and freely admitted, and nothing in the testimony has materially changed this admission.

I stop here long enough to say that this is an admission in the report of the majority that I am reading. They frankly and freely admit that $195,000 was paid for this senatorship—a very goodly sum—to which I called the attention of the Senator a while ago, and stated that if the price were fixed at that sum there were some of us who were not well off in this world's goods who would be unable to keep up the pace, and the result would be that we would soon have a Senate composed exclusively of those who were able to buy their places in this body. If there were no other reason, as it seems to me, why this majority report ought not to be concurred in by the Senate, there is the reason that we ought not to fix the price of a senatorship at $195,000. I do not know how many Senators here would be able to keep up that pace. I do not know how many are able to pay or even with their friends would be able to pay $195,000, if you are going to fix that as the price for the future; and if we do fix it as the price, so that it is perfectly right and proper and honest and patriotic and American to pay that much for a senatorship, of course those who are able to buy in the future will buy.

There are a great many people in this country who would be willing to pay $195,000 for a seat in this body. Whether they ought to be here or not is another matter, but I doubt if this body ought to set the precedent. If everything else were stripped from this case, here is a man who admits that $195,000 was paid for the senatorship that he has in this body, and that ought to be sufficient.

Then the minority go on to say:

On the contrary, it is claimed by the contestant's attorneys, and we think with very great force, that the proved expenses totaled very much more.

It has even been claimed by many newspapers—I have seen the claim put forward, with how much truth I do not know—that $800,000 was paid in this case for the senatorship from first to last. I merely know what the newspapers have stated about it.

Quoting from the majority report:

Ninth. Your committee—

The majority—

condemns the use of such a large sum of money in any primary campaign—

I stop here long enough to say that the majority of the committee condemn the use of this money, and yet they want you to vote to make it a fair and an honest and an upright and a straight thing to do. They condemn it and at the same time uphold it by their votes—condemn it in their words and uphold it in their actions. The truth is that no man can defend it. No man can defend the expenditure of $267,000 in a campaign for a senatorship in any State in this Union. He can not defend his vote for it, even if he does condemn it with his words; and it will be a harder thing for him to defend his vote after having condemned it in his words.

Continuing:

but there is not the slightest foundation to connect Truman H. Newberry with its solicitation, its acquisition, or its use, or to condemn him because of the amount. While the aggregate was large, it was not spent for any purposes that were in themselves illegal or improper, and its use was wholly managed by a campaign committee entirely free either in its selection or control from Truman H. Newberry.

Tenth. That with the exception of a few Democratic newspapers advertising was placed in practically every newspaper, daily, weekly, and monthly, published in the State of Michigan.

I notice that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] complained that one of the newspapers that accepted a large sum for advertising afterwards took the position that it was not right; and, as I understood the Senator, he condemned the newspaper for its change of front.

I continue reading:

That a series of 13 advertising announcements covering the entire 13 weeks of the primary campaign were carried in upward of 500 papers and publications and going into every portion of the State. (R., pp. 422, 639.)

Eleventh. In addition to this a very general and systematic plan of publicity was carried on through correspondence; thousands and thousands of form letters being sent into every county in the State; the names of the persons to whom sent being alphabetically arranged in card indexes. (Record, p. 644.)

Twelfth. More than 80 per cent of the money spent in the primary campaign was, according to the evidence, spent for advertising and other publicity.

The majority report further declares:

"Thirteenth. Two facts which are decisive of the present case stand out clearly in the record as entirely established:

"First. That none of the money spent in the primary election, large as was the amount, was spent for corrupt, illegal, or improper purposes. It was spent for publicity and for ordinary campaign purposes, and expenditures which are perfectly familiar to every man who has ever been a candidate for office, and which are generally regarded as necessary and proper."

Mr. President, I stop here long enough to add something to the report. It is said that this money was spent legally, and yet the laws of Michigan, to which these candidates owed obedience, prohibited the expenditure of any more than $3,750 by any candidate in such a campaign. They put a limit upon campaign expenditures of that sum, and yet the State law was disregarded. No action seems to have been taken, but Mr. Newberry was indicted in the Federal court for Michigan, and he was tried before a Republican judge and jury. I am informed that 11 of the 12 jurors were Republicans, and that the presiding judge of the court was a Republican. Those 12 jurors held that Mr. Newberry had violated the law, and found him guilty, and the judge held that the verdict of the jury was right and proper, and entered a judgment upon it. It is true that that case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court did not hold that Mr. Newberry's conduct was proper; it did not hold that as a matter of right that case should have been reversed. The Supreme Court did not hold that there was a right and proper expenditure of money, but it held that the effort of Congress when it passed the law was nugatory, and that the law was unconstitutional.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is that all it held?

Mr. McKELLAR. That was the principal thing it held. At all events that is what caused the court to reverse the case. It was reversed on account of the unconstitutionality of the act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Was nothing else held by the court?

Mr. McKELLAR. There was a good deal to the opinion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator not state what the court held?

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not state it from memory.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator has a very convenient lapse of memory.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not the book before me; but that was the principal thing it held, and that was the point on which the case was reversed. If the Senator can recall the other points decided by the court in that case, I will yield to him for the purpose of stating them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did not the court have some observations to make as to the fairness of the trial?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not recall.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thought the Senator would not recall.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not recall.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. When President Wilson and his noble wife contributed to the campaign fund of Gov. Cox, does the Senator think they did so upon the idea that the money would be improperly used in buying votes?

Mr. McKELLAR. I never heard of a charge that any votes were bought for Gov. Cox.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Then what is the Senator's idea of the use of the $8,000,000 which were spent in Gov. Cox's campaign?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will excuse me, I do not know that there was that much used.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The reports are that they used that much, and the campaign committee still owes $130,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have heard that.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I have, too.

Mr. McKELLAR. And I have heard that the Republicans used several times that amount; but I do not know that that has anything to do with a case of this kind, where a candidate for office was indicted, tried, and convicted—

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Under an illegal statute.

Mr. McKELLAR. He was convicted under a statute which was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, as it had a right to do; but it was a statute which this body had passed.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I gave half as much to the campaign fund of Gov. Cox as the President did, and my wife gave an amount equal to that given by Mrs. Wilson. The Senator would not imply that we were trying to corrupt the Government and the electorate, would he?

Mr. McKELLAR. Quite the contrary. I feel absolutely sure that the Senator and his wife are both of the highest type of honesty, just as I believe that former President Wilson and Mrs. Wilson are two of the best people in the land, perfectly honest and sincere in their convictions, and that the money was given for a proper cause. I have no doubt that the Senator's money and his wife's money, as well as the former President's money and his wife's money, was absolutely, honestly, and faithfully spent in the campaign of Gov. Cox.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. What did they do with it?

Mr. McKELLAR. I really do not know. Of course, if the Senator knows what they did with his money and with the former President's money and his wife's money, I should be glad to have him state it to the Senate. I will not at all hurry him but will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I do not know.

Mr. McKELLAR. Nor do I; so that settles it. I know that no charge of wrongdoing was ever made about it of any kind, nature, or description.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. They were so badly beaten that it was not worth while.

Mr. McKELLAR. Probably so; probably that is right. For all that, Mr. Newberry got off on a technicality. The reversal of the case by the Supreme Court was on a technicality. This body fixed the maximum amount which might be used by a candidate in a campaign for the Senate in a primary and in the election at $10,000. They thought that was a proper amount—that all proper expenses could be brought within that sum. The Congress felt that way, and so provided in the law.

This is a case where they admittedly spent in the neighborhood of $200,000. The minority of the committee contend that it was some $286,000, the majority that it was $195,000. It makes no difference whether it was $195,000 or $286,000. Certainly either sum is much more than the amount provided even in the State statute, $3,750, or the amount fixed in the United States statute, $10,000.

The Senate, at all events, fixed a rule of conduct for candidates for seats in this body, and the Senate thought it was passing a constitutional act. They fixed on that sum as the reasonable sum, and though under our Constitution the Supreme Court has declared that particular law unconstitutional it does not change the rule which this body established. This body established the rule that the maximum amount properly to be spent by a candidate in a campaign for election to the Senate was $10,000. This Senator came in after an expenditure of $195,000, as claimed by the majority of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Expended by himself?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. I judge from Mr. Smith's testimony that a very large part of it was paid by himself. Mr. Smith's testimony was read here this afternoon, and I gathered from his testimony that it was something to this effect: It seems that the Newberry family, being a very wealthy family, had one of these interchangeable accounts, so that whenever one account would run down a check would be drawn on another account to bring up the one which had gone down. I believe there were 10 of those accounts. Mr. John Newberry paid the first seventy thousand and odd dollars of the campaign fund, and thereupon Mr. Smith began to transfer the funds of Mr. Truman Newberry over to Mr. John Newberry's account. How much he transferred was not stated before the committee. There is no evidence as to that.

If he had not transferred any, what man under the face of the shining sun would know it better than Mr. Truman Newberry? The man above all other men in the world who would know whether or not he spent any money in this campaign was Truman H. Newberry. He did not come before the committee and, as I understand it, he did not go before the jury which tried him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did he not file his statement of expenditures under oath?

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it not true?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to think it is. I have never seen the statement, but I am inclined to think that is so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator must be a little bit more than inclined to think it is true. Is it not true?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator says he has seen that statement, filed here in the record or in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, I take his statement, and will say it is true, because I know what the Senator would say would be true; but I say that this candidate for the Senate, the contestee in this case, had two opportunities to tell how much of his own money he spent and he did not take advantage of either one of them. He had the right to go before a jury of his peers in Michigan, and he did not go before them. He submitted his case without testifying. He stood mute when the charges were made against him. There is not a Senator in this body who, if confronted with a similar charge, so far as I know or believe, would not go before a jury and testify to the facts.

So, when the case came before the committee he did not himself say that he was innocent. He is asking you gentlemen to do something for him which he would not do for himself. He had an opportunity to come before the committee and to say exactly how much money he had spent. No one knew the facts better than he did. Why did he not come before the committee? He is asking you to do something for him which when the crisis came he would not do for himself.

Is that exactly fair? How do we know what the fact is? If he was innocent of the expenditure of this money, why did he not say so? He had the power of speech. Nobody had a gag on him; nobody had a handkerchief over his mouth. He was here in the Capitol. He was invited to come before the committee. Are you going to find a man innocent who will not himself say that he is innocent? Are you going to say something for him by your votes which he was not willing to say for himself?

Senators, this principle is wrong. I think there was another senate in ancient times, that flourished as long as honesty and patriotism flourished, but when those senatorships began to be sold to the highest bidder then it was that that senate went down and down and finally sunk into ruin and oblivion. Oh, Senators, do not let us permit the United States Senate to be a place where a membership in it can be bought.

I continue to read:

If the testimony contained in the record sustained the facts as stated by the report of the majority, we would be compelled to come to their conclusion touching the merits of this case.

CLAIMS OF MINORITY.

We affirm, however, that the conclusion of facts as stated by the majority is not sustained by the record.

On the contrary, it shows clearly:

First. That Mr. Truman H. Newberry participated in, if he did not dictate, the organization of his campaign committee.

Second. He knew in advance that this campaign would cost "his friends" at least $50,000.

Third. Reports almost daily were made to him by his campaign manager, Mr. Paul King, and others.

Fourth. Almost daily reports were made to him by his attorney in fact, Fred P. Smith, as to the business and financial affairs of himself, his brother, John S. Newberry, the chief contributor to the campaign fund, and of 10 other Newberry interests. He knew that Fred P. Smith, who was acting under his power of attorney, was checking money out of the bank accounts of Truman H. Newberry and other Newberry interests and depositing them to the credit of John S. Newberry and then issuing checks on this fund payable to the Newberry campaign fund committee as its demands might require.

I stop here long enough to make this comment: It is claimed for Mr. Newberry that he did not pay any of the campaign funds, and yet the undisputed proof is that his agent, Mr. Fred P. Smith, had the right and did, as a matter of fact, put Mr. Truman Newberry's money to the credit of his brother, Mr. John S. Newberry, and that Mr. John S. Newberry drew checks against that fund and turned them over to the Newberry campaign committee, and they were thus expended. Can any grown man with the power of thinking at all be deceived into believing that that was not an expenditure of Mr. Truman H. Newberry's money?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator I am sure desires to be fair. I have always kept my own mind open on the question. However, I have studied the Pomerene report more closely than I have the Spencer report, and the Senator will find on page 69 of the Pomerene report that Mr. Newberry swore, according to the laws of his State—

I have taken no part in it—

That is, the campaign—

whatever, and no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent.

That is what he swore to. Let us be fair to the man.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a vague and general statement made in a report to the Senate.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Oh, no; Mr. President, that is made according to the laws of his own State.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Tennessee does not think that all Senators make vague and general reports to the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I read what he said and I want to show how vague it is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is that the Senator's idea of the report which he himself makes, that it is vague and general?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the Senator may look at mine and he will see how very carefully it is prepared, just as I know the Senator's is carefully prepared; there is no doubt about it. But listen to this—

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment. Had the Senator made a similar report in exactly the same language as that made by the Senator from Michigan, would he regard it as vague and general?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am reading this. I do not know. I have not looked at mine. One question does not answer another. I will read from page 69, which was referred to by the Senator from Georgia. He said the report was not made to the Senate, and I read just exactly what it says there:

True, Mr. Newberry, in his sworn statement filed with the Secretary of the Senate—

Filed with the Secretary of the Senate! That is just the statement I made—says the campaign was voluntarily conducted by "his friends."

And then it goes on to say, in quotations:

I have taken no part in it whatever—

Meaning no part in the campaign—and no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent.

Listen to that. I am glad the Senator called my attention to that. Let us examine it for a moment.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Look at the preceding page.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am reading from page 69. That is the one I am talking about. The Senator called my attention to that. Let me reply to it, and then I will meet him on the other. Here is what Mr. Newberry said:

I have taken no part in it whatever, and no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent.

That does not say that none were made by him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They could not have been made by him without his knowledge and consent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment. One would have to repudiate practically all the evidence in this case before coming to the conclusion that this statement made by the contestee is a correct statement of the facts. Why? Because his principal witnesses, Mr. Smith and Mr. King and other witnesses, as shown by the undisputed evidence, stated time after time that they had daily telephonic and telegraphic communication with Senator Newberry, and that they kept him advised. Mr. Smith testified that when Senator Newberry found these amounts were being taken from his account and turned over to his brother he complained of it and said that the expenditures ought to stop. That is what the undisputed proof is here, and yet this candidate said:

I have taken no part in it whatever, and no contributions or expenditures—

Not "some may have been made by my friends," as is now claimed by him; not "some may have been made by my family," as is now claimed for him; but what he said is:

No contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent.

Is there any Senator so ignorant of the record that he believes that statement to be a correct statement of fact? The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Watson] called my attention to the fact that it was sworn to. How was it sworn to? It was sworn to in the report that he may or may not have written, but probably signed without looking at it. There was no chance of cross-examination. He has not put himself in a place where he could be cross-examined. He would not go before the jury when he was tried for this offense under the law.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. In one moment I will yield. He would not go before a committee of Senators, a majority of whom were members of his own party, and I have no doubt every one of whom felt most kindly toward him personally, because we all know he is a most likeable man. Every man on the committee feeling exceedingly friendly to him, no doubt would have been glad to have given him opportunity to acquit himself of the charges that were made, but instead of doing it he stood mute and did not go before the committee.

I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. I merely desired to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he thought a Senator would tell the truth only under cross-examination?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but has the Senator read the record?

Mr. NEW. Yes. Has the Senator from Tennessee read it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. I will ask the Senator if he takes this statement to be correct from his reading of the record, and this is Mr. Newberry's statement:

I have taken no part in it whatever, and no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent.

Mr. NEW. I am quite certain that it is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, what does the Senator do with the testimony of Mr. King and Mr. Smith, the confidential friends and managers of Mr. Newberry, who swore that they reported almost daily to Commander Newberry? What does the Senator do with that testimony?

Mr. NEW. They did not testify that they reported details of expenditures or anything of that kind.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has been read two or three times, and I will read it again, because it is important. I will give it to the Senator again in a moment. We have plenty of time.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Suppose the Senator starts at page 3?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will take that up again in a moment.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Borrow my copy and look at page 3.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am looking for Mr. Smith's testimony here. I have a copy of the report which has not been marked by me. I will look in my desk and see if my marked copy is there.

Mr. President, I shall have to read that when I get to it. I will proceed further with the reading of the claims of the minority of the committee.

Fifth. He aided in the preparation of the publicity material—

Not knowing anything about it, yet he aided in the preparation of the publicity material—received constant reports concerning it, and regarded himself responsible to Mr. Templeton, Mr. King, and Mr. Oakman "for actual travel and publicity costs."

Citing the page of the record—

Sixth. He knew for weeks in advance of the primary that the extravagant expenditure of money had gone to such an extent as to be a common scandal in the State, and that he was the beneficiary thereof.

Almost every newspaper in the State was publishing the reports of these vast expenditures of money in favor of this candidate for the Senate, and yet the candidate himself, as is now claimed, did not know anything about the expenditure, although he was complaining to Mr. Fred Smith, one of his managers, and to Mr. King, another of his managers, that the funds were taken from his account and put to the credit of his brother, and in that way passing to the Newberry committee.

Seventh. This extravagant expenditure of money was called to his attention not only by the public press of his State but by letters written to him personally by some of Michigan's most honored citizens.

Eighth. A careful study of this record will show that the campaign committee was composed of his close personal and business friends, and that they were in fact his very "alter ego," or at least they were so closely allied with him, and he was in such close touch with every phase of the campaign that it does not lie in his mouth to claim the usufruct of their work and deny the responsibility for the way in which it was brought to his door.

Ninth. With all of this knowledge brought to him in the way disclosed by this record, we fail to see how Mr. Newberry could honorably say, as he did in his affidavit of August 14, 1918, filed with the Secretary of the Senate:

"The campaign for my nomination for United States Senator has been voluntarily conducted by friends in Michigan. I have taken no part in it whatever, and no contributions or expenditures have been made with my knowledge or consent."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will the Senator read the next statement?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly; it is as follows:

Tenth. Nor do we understand how, in his further affidavit filed with the Secretary of the Senate on August 29, 1918, he could honorably say—

His statements, I digress long enough to say, were in the form of affidavits, where there was no opportunity for the other side to ask questions about the matter. His affidavit in part says:

The following is a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by me, or by my agent, representative, or other person for or in my behalf with my knowledge or consent.

None with my knowledge or consent.

I have read the general published statement of Paul H. King concerning expenditures made by a volunteer committee of my friends, but these were made without my knowledge or consent.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me in that very connection, I desire to say there was a statement made under the statute law of Michigan by the manager of the campaign which showed the full amount spent at the time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and it was upon that, or it was upon information similar to that cited in the report which caused the grand jury in Michigan to indict Mr. Newberry, which caused a jury of Mr. Newberry's peers to convict him in Michigan, and which caused the judge of the court to sentence him.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. And which caused the Supreme Court to do what?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Supreme Court, as I have heretofore said, reversed the decision in the case on the ground that the law was unconstitutional.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee if the decision of the Supreme Court did not go very much further than to hold that the law was unconstitutional? I should like to ask the Senator, if he will permit me, if there were not two important points in that decision; the first of which went to constitutionality of the law, which the court held was unconstitutional; and the other that the trial court committed so many errors in the course of the trial that the case was reversed upon error; and that, as a matter of fact, the decision of the Supreme Court was that the whole trial was a judicial outrage?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention—

Mr. McKELLAR. One moment.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If the Senator will yield—

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well; I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I wish to call his attention to one item of expenditure, in order to show the range of expenditures. It appears from the views of the minority, submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], that Mr. Newberry had to pay $5,000 for circulating his pictures.

Mr. McKELLAR. He was a very handsome man. I do not know why it should have cost all that money to circulate his pictures.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I expected the Senator to say just that, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I think that has just the same bearing on this case as have the other suggestions which have heretofore been made by the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. There was certainly nothing corrupt in circulating a picture.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Georgia thinks there is nothing corrupt in paying about $200,000 for a seat in the Senate, he is entitled to his opinion. I have very grave doubt about it.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If I may answer the Senator in the same spirit, I will say that there is nothing of moral turpitude in him unless he was a party to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was not a party to it, so I plead not guilty; but if I were charged with being a party to it, I assure the Senator from Georgia and all other Senators that I would go before the jury and testify that I was not guilty.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I certainly did not mean the Senator from Tennessee. I meant the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Newberry].

Mr. McKELLAR. I misunderstood the Senator. It is all right.

I was asked about the opinion of the Supreme Court. I have the entire opinion here and will read the concluding paragraph of it:

We can not conclude that authority to control party primaries or conventions for designating candidates was bestowed on Congress by the grant of power to regulate the manner of holding elections. The fair intendment of the words does not extend so far; the framers of the Constitution did not ascribe to them any such meaning. Nor is this control necessary in order to effectuate the power expressly granted. On the other hand, its exercise would interfere with purely domestic affairs of the State and infringe upon liberties reserved to the people.

It should not be forgotten that, exercising inherent police power, the State may suppress whatever evils may be incident to primary or convention. As "each House—

I call the especial attention of the Senate to the fact that after reversing the case on the sole ground of the unconstitutionality of the act, the justice delivering the majority opinion of the court makes this suggestion, which is similar to that made by me earlier in the evening:

As "each House shall be the judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its own Members," and as Congress may by law regulate the times, places, and manner of holding elections, the National Government is not without power to protect itself against corruption, fraud, or other malign influences.

The judgment of the court below must be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

The opinion is stronger than I had intimated. The court proceeded to reverse the case upon the sole ground of the unconstitutionality of the act in that the Congress had no authority to legislate in regard to party primaries; that is the sole ground of the decision; and then, as if implying that, in the opinion of the court, the Senator was guilty, it proceeds to say that it must not be forgotten that the Senate has the power to decide as to the qualifications and election of its own Members. That is an intimation that this and not the Supreme Court is the body that was to decide that matter; in other words, there is no suggestion in the opinion of the majority such as has been stated. I had forgotten for the moment—I have not read the opinion for some time—that it had the other matter in it, but if it has, if such a statement is in the opinion, and I have no doubt it may be in the opinion of some member of the court, in a dissenting opinion or otherwise—

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator desires, of course, to indulge in a comprehensive discussion of the question, and as he has quoted from a portion of the opinion of the Supreme Court, may I suggest that the Senator read the opinion of the Chief Justice, or at least a portion of it, which can be found on pages 19 and 20, in which certain observations are made about the charge delivered to the jury by the judge who presided at the trial?

Mr. McKELLAR. I suppose that this opinion is almost as interesting as the report from which I have been reading, and I will be delighted to read what the Chief Justice said. The important thing, of course, is the majority opinion of the court which was rendered by Mr. Justice McReynolds, and which concluded with the words which I have read. It is possible that in concurring or dissenting opinions other justices, including the Chief Justice, may have said something along different lines. The Senator from New York calls my attention to the opinion of Chief Justice White, which was a dissenting opinion concurring with a modification in the judgment of reversal, but, as a dissenting opinion, evidently it was not the opinion of the court on this subject, for, if what is contained in Chief Justice White's opinion was the law as determined by the court it would not have been in a dissenting opinion; it would have been in the opinion of the majority of the court. What the Senator from New York has in mind, however, is not found in the opinion of the majority of the court; it is the view of the Chief Justice. It is entitled to respect, just as the opinion of any other member of the court is entitled to respect and as the opinion of any Senator is entitled to respect. Now, if the Senator will point out where he wants me to read I will be glad to accommodate him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am making the suggestion in order that the Senator may have complete information about the matter concerning which he is talking. On pages 19 and 20 the Senator will find the Chief Justice recites certain instructions delivered by the judge to the jury. Then he comments upon those instructions and reaches a conclusion which, to say the least, is not complimentary to the manner in which was conducted the trial as a result of which the junior Senator from Michigan was convicted.

I make this suggestion to the Senator because he has emphasized with considerable spirit and fire the fact that a jury convicted this man of a felony; that he was sentenced to prison as the result of that act; and I, therefore, suggest that the Senator from Tennessee inform himself as to what the Supreme Court thought of that trial.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is entirely mistaken about what the Supreme Court thought of that trial. The judgment of the majority of the Supreme Court determines—not what an individual member of that court states in a dissenting opinion.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Supreme Court granted a new trial, did it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course. That is old news. That has been done for nearly a year. I thought everybody knew that.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Upon what ground did they grant the new trial?

Mr. McKELLAR. On the ground that the act was unconstitutional, not on the ground that Mr. Newberry was innocent.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Upon the ground that there was an unfair trial.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; the Senator is totally mistaken. The Senator is reading a dissenting opinion. He is not reading the opinion of the court. I have read the opinion of the court which states the grounds, and the Senator will find it at the bottom of page 10 if he has the opinion before him.

Now, I want to read what Mr. Chief Justice White said about it:

Coming to deal with the statute, the court, after pointing out in the most explicit terms that the limitation on the amount which might be lawfully contributed and expended or caused to be contributed and expended in the case at hand was $3,750 (that being the limitation imposed by the laws of Michigan)—

Let me finish this anyway. I know the Senator is tired. We ought to have adjourned long ago—

*adopted by the statute of the United States just quoted), then proceeded, over objections duly reserved, to instruct as to the significance of the statute, involved in the prohibitions, (a) against giving, contributing, expending, or using, and (b) against causing to be given, contributed, expended, or used, money in excess of that permitted by the statute, saying on these subjects as follows:

"(a) It is important, therefore, that you should understand the meaning of the language employed in this corrupt practices act, and that you should understand and comprehend the effect and scope of the act, and the meaning of the language there employed, and the effect and scope and extent of the prohibition against the expenditure and use of money therein contained.

"The words 'give, contribute, expend, or use,' as employed in this statute, have their usual and ordinary significance and mean furnish, pay out, disburse, employ, or make use of. The term 'to cause to be expended, or used,' as it is employed in this statute, means to occasion, to effect, to bring about, to produce the expenditure and use of the money.

"The prohibition contained in this statute against the expenditure and use of money by the candidate is not limited or confined to the expenditure and use of his own money. The prohibition is directed against the use and expenditure of excessive sums of money by the candidate from whatever source or from whomsoever those moneys may be derived.

"(b) The phrase which constitutes the prohibition against the candidate 'causing to be given, contributed, expended, or used excessive sums of money' is not limited and not confined to expenditures and use of money made directly and personally by himself. This prohibition extends to the expenditure and use of excessive sums of money in which the candidate actively participates, or assists, or advises, or directs, or induces, or procures. The prohibition extends not only to the expenditure and use of excessive sums of money by the candidate directly and personally, but to such use and expenditure through his agency, or procurement, or assistance.

"To constitute a violation of this statute knowledge of the expenditure and use of excessive sums of money on the part of the candidate is not sufficient; neither is it sufficient to constitute a violation of this statute that the candidate merely acquiesces in such expenditures and use. But it is sufficient to constitute a violation of this statute if the candidate actively participates in doing the things which occasion such expenditures and use of money and so actively participates with knowledge that the money is being expended and used."

Let me stop there long enough to say that that is what the jury found to be the fact. That was the charge of the court, and that is what they found to be the fact.

The Chief Justice then proceeds:

Having thus fixed the meaning of the prohibitions of the statute, the court came to apply them as thus defined to the particular case before it, saying:

"(c) To apply these rules to this case: If you are satisfied from the evidence that the defendant, Truman H. Newberry, at or about the time that he became a candidate for United States Senator was informed and knew that his campaign for the nomination and election would require the expenditure and use of more money than is permitted by law and with such knowledge became a candidate, and thereafter by advice, by conduct, by his acts, by his direction, by his counsel, or by his procurement he actively participated and took part in the expenditure and use of an excessive sum of money, of an unlawful sum of money, you would be warranted in finding that he did violate this statute known as the corrupt practices act."

I stop here long enough to say that the corrupt practices act of Michigan was by the law of Congress made a part of the law of Congress, and it was under that law that this indictment was had against Senator Newberry in the Federal court. The Supreme Court in its judgment did not have anything to say about that being an improper charge to the jury; but Mr. Chief Justice White, one of the members of that court, in a dissenting opinion, said this:

Whether the instructions marked (a) and (b), if unexplained, were, in view of the ambiguity lurking in many of the expressions used therein, prejudicially erroneous, I do not think necessary to consider, since I see no escape from the conclusion that the instruction marked (c), which made application of the view of the statute stated in the previous passages (a) and (b), were in clear conflict with the text of the statute and were necessarily of a seriously prejudicial nature, since in substance they announced the doctrine that under the statute, although a candidate for the office of Senator might not have contributed a cent to the campaign or caused others to do so, he nevertheless was guilty if he became a candidate or continued as such after acquiring knowledge that more than $3,750 had been contributed and was being expended in the campaign. The error in the instruction plainly resulted from a failure to distinguish between the subject, with which the statute dealt—contributions and expenditures made or caused to be made by the candidate—and campaign contributions and expenditures not so made or caused to be made, and therefore not within the statute.

It is true that that was the opinion of the Chief Justice of the United States, but that was not the judgment of the court. The judgment of the court was simply what? That the statute was unconstitutional, and that the Senate ought to deal with the corruption if they found it to be corruption.

The jury, it will be found—and I am glad the Senator from New York called my attention to it—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the Senator will read the rest of the opinion.

Mr. McKELLAR. All of it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; put it in the Record.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will put the whole opinion in the Record a little later.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; just the remainder on page 20.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, would the Senator just as soon conclude his speech to-morrow morning, or would he rather continue to-night?

Mr. McKELLAR. It depends. I want to ask unanimous consent to put in the Record the remainder of this dissenting opinion, just as if I had read it. If the Senator will excuse me a moment, however, I will yield to him in a little while. I want to read it. I understand that we are to be here all night, so there is no use in being in a hurry. The Senator from New York wants this dissenting opinion of Mr. Chief Justice White read into the Record; and as it is probably a little more favorable to the defendant than the majority opinion of the court, the real judgment of the court, I am delighted to read it.

There can be no doubt—

Continues Mr. Chief Justice White—

when the limitations as to expenditure which the statute imposed are considered in the light of its context and its genesis, that its prohibitions on that subject were intended, not to restrict the right of the citizen to contribute to a campaign, but to prohibit the candidate from contributing and expending or causing to be contributed and expended, to secure his nomination and election, a larger amount than the sum limited as provided in the statute.

There is no finding here that the facts found by the jury were incorrect.

To treat the candidacy, as did the charge of the court, as being necessarily the cause, without more, of the contribution of the citizen to the campaign, was therefore to confound things which were wholly different, to the frustration of the very object and purpose of the statute. To illustrate: Under the instruction given, in every case where to the knowledge of the candidate a sum in excess of the amount limited by the statute was contributed by citizens to the campaign, the candidate, if he failed to withdraw, would be subject to criminal prosecution and punishment. So, also, contributions by citizens to the expenses of the campaign, if only knowledge could be brought home to them that the aggregate of such contributions would exceed the limit of the statute, would bring them, as illustrated by this case, within the conspiracy statute and accordingly subject to prosecution. Under this view the greater the public service and the higher the character of the candidate, giving rise to a correspondingly complete and self-sacrificing support by the electorate to his candidacy, the more inevitably would criminality and infamous punishment result both to the candidate and to the citizen who contributed.

As it follows from the considerations which I have stated that the judgment below was, in my opinion—

Not in the opinion of the court, but in the opinion of Mr. Chief Justice White, the dissenting opinion—clearly wrong and therefore should be reversed, it is not necessary that I should go further and point out how cogently under the case presented the illustrations just previously made apply to it. For the reasons stated, although I dissent from the ruling of the court—

Why, Mr. Chief Justice White dissented from the ruling of the court on the constitutionality of the act.

For the reasons stated, although I dissent from the ruling of the court as to the unconstitutionality of the act of Congress, I, nevertheless, think its judgment of reversal should be adopted, qualified, however, so as to reserve the right to a new trial.

"So as to reserve the right to a new trial." In other words, the sum and substance of the dissenting opinion of Mr. Chief Justice White was that he thought technical errors had been made by the judge in giving the charge to the jury.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why does the Senator say "technical error"?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have read exactly what he said.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does he say that it was technical?

Mr. McKELLAR. He says it might have been confusing to the jury to have stated in section (c) what seems to be contradictory of sections (a) and (b). Anyone who has had experience with juries all his life, as I have, knows beyond the shadow of a doubt that those jurors never had any such consideration in their minds. What they had in their minds were the facts which were adduced before the jury, and upon the facts they found Mr. Newberry guilty as charged in the indictment, and all that the Supreme Court of the United States did was to declare the act of Congress unconstitutional, and he escaped only because it was declared unconstitutional. The opinion of the court does not give any other reason for the reversal of the case except the unconstitutionality of the act.

Mr. SWANSON and Mr. WATSON of Georgia addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I promised to yield to the Senator from Virginia, who wants to make a motion; but if the Senator from Georgia desires to propound an inquiry, I will yield first to him.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Has not the evidence as so ably discussed by the Senator been confined to propaganda, campaign literature, articles published in newspapers, pictures, lithographs, and things of that sort? Is there any suggestion whatever that one dollar was used to corrupt a voter, that whisky or other undue influences were used to corrupt a voter, or did corrupt him?

Mr. McKELLAR. The record shows there was a lot of money used for treating. I forget how many thousand dollars were spent for that purpose, but I believe three thousand. If I am mistaken about it, I hope some Senator will correct me; but my recollection is that there were either three or seven thousand dollars used for treating. I do not know whether Michigan was a dry State at that time, but I think it was, and to use even such a sum of money as that for treating purposes in a dry State is "going some." I do not know whether the Senator would consider that illegal in Georgia or not, but I believe it would be considered illegal generally. As the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], who knows about such things, says to me, it depends upon the quality of the goods which are sold and drunk.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. It also depends on whether it is done before or after the election.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know how it is in Georgia. It is immaterial in Tennessee, where I come from, whether it is done before or after the election.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Sometimes people celebrate, you know.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know very much about that. We have a dry State, and we do not do much celebrating these days; we did none at all at the last election. I now yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield the floor?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the principal legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2170, to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States.

This is a very important measure. It is a bill which was reported out of the very important Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation by its chairman, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. It proposes to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States.

I have made this motion because it seems to me that if there is any piece of legislation which is important, and which should be enacted at a very early date, before this Congress adjourns, it is a measure to provide rural homes for the soldiers of the late war, or at least present an avenue of approach for them, so that they may be given some preference in the matter of the location of homes.

We have during the present Congress done really very little for the soldiers of the country. Senators on the other side have not forgotten, and we have not forgotten, and the country has not forgotten, the promises which were made to the people by President Harding, by a great many Senators, and by other standard bearers, at the time when the campaign was on, and to the soldiers particularly, that if the Republican candidates should be elected, they would see to it that some favors were shown to the soldiers. Indeed, they went so far as to say that they would pass an adjusted compensation bill, or a measure popularly known as the bonus bill. Some said they did not believe in that, but that they did believe that a plan of insurance might be provided for the soldiers.

Various schemes were suggested. The distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], powerful in the councils of the Republican Party and upon the great Committee on Finance, thought some time ago that it would be well if Congress could provide homes, or a land-settlement plan, for the soldiers.

Mr. President, if the Senate at this time desires to take a recess, I will just leave my motion pending, and let it go over until morning. I understand a motion will be made to take a recess.

RECESS.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to permit the Senator to make a motion that the Senate take a recess.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, November 17, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, November 16, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, we bow at Thy mercy seat, which is eternal in the heavens and forever in the hearts of Thy believing children. The work of life is too long and too arduous to be borne alone. The yoke of toil shall be made easy and its burdens shall be made light with Thy help. May nothing be allowed to weaken or weary our strength. O, behind the cloud and the care, where so often the definite outlines of duty are dimmed by the rush of the elements, bestow Thy counsel and lead with Thy wisdom. May our power to sacrifice and our willingness to labor become our great strength for the good of our fellow men and for the help of the world, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). For what purpose does the gentleman from South Dakota rise?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to have Senate bill No. 2210, which has been referred to the Committee on Claims, transferred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2210) be referred from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 2210. An act for the relief of Lucy Paradis.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if the matter has been submitted to the chairmen of the respective committees?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the gentleman from Tennessee I will say that this bill is identical with the bill I introduced in the House on July 17, 1921, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was introduced in the Senate about the same time by Senator STERLING and there referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It passed the Senate on Monday, but under the rules of the House I understand it has been referred to the Committee on Claims on account of the bill's providing that Paradis may present his claim to the Court of Claims for adjudication. There is no claim in this bill for the committee to pass upon. The facts are all on file with the Committee on Indian Affairs and it should go to that committee, because that is the committee which has had the bill under consideration. I understand there is no objection from either committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If this goes to the Committee on Indian Affairs will it have to go to the Committee on Claims again?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No; I understand not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request of the gentleman was that Senate bill 2210, the title of which has been read, be rereferred from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2232. An act in reference to a national military park on the plains of Chalmette, below the city of New Orleans;

H. R. 8298. An act to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to limitations in criminal cases;

H. R. 7108. An act authorizing a per capita payment to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota from their tribal funds held in trust by the United States;

H. R. 7051. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to execute deeds of reconveyance for certain lands in the city of Mount Pleasant, Isabella County, Mich.; and

H. R. 8442. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved March 12, 1914, as amended.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill and joint resolution:

H. R. 8643. An act to extend the tariff act approved May 27, 1921; and

H. J. Res. 151. Joint resolution to provide that deferred grazing fees received prior to December 31, 1921, shall be considered as receipts of the fiscal year 1921.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that I have unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by inserting a speech made by George C. Hazelton, at Chester, N. H., on the occasion of the memorial service of Corpl. Forsaith, who fell in battle in France, and whose body was brought back for burial in his native town. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Hazelton represented Wisconsin in this body with distinction, being a Member of Congress over 40 years ago, and delivered a very eloquent speech on the occasion mentioned. I therefore ask permission to extend my remarks by inserting this speech in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by inserting a speech made by former Representative Hazelton on the return of the body of Corpl. Forsaith to his native town in New Hampshire. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is clear there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ansorge	Faust	Kitchin	Riordan
Anthony	Fenn	Knight	Roach
Bacharach	Fess	Kreider	Rosenbloom
Bell	Fish	Kunz	Rucker
Bixler	Fitzgerald	Langley	Ryan

Doughton	Kahn	Periman	Wason
Drane	Kelley, Mich.	Peters	Weaver
Echols	Kendall	Petersen	Winslow
Edmonds	Kennedy	Porter	Zihlman
Elston	Kless	Rainey, Ala.
Fairfield	Kindred	Rainey, Ill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 317 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTRACTS CONNECTED WITH PROSECUTION OF WAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. It being Calendar Wednesday, the unfinished business in order is the bill S. 843, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 843) to amend section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the time of adjournment on last Calendar Wednesday the previous question had been demanded. The question now is on ordering the previous question. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The question then being on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, it was accordingly engrossed and read the third time.

The question then being on the passage of the bill S. 843, the question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BLACK. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Division is demanded.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Forty-eight gentlemen, not a sufficient number, have risen.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the other side so that the Chair may determine the number of Members present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands the other side. The Chair will state that the call of the House disclosed the presence of a quorum, 317 Members being present, and that in order to secure a vote by the yeas and nays it would have to be demanded by one-fifth of the number present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the fact that a quorum was disclosed several minutes ago, since which other business has been transacted, is no reason for holding that 317 Members are present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair assumes that, the call of the House disclosing a quorum, a quorum is present until its presence is doubted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers on the demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] demands tellers upon the question of ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is too late.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was demanding it right along, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman was demanding it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Wisconsin was on his feet and demanding tellers.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The rule, as I understand, provides that the yeas and nays may be demanded by one-fifth of those present. If the original number of those present pass through the tellers upon the call for the other side, or the negative of the proposition, as the case may be, nevertheless that does not demonstrate that one-fifth present demand a roll call. It only demonstrates that one-fifth of those voting, which is not what the rule says.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey does not state a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. It is too late to demand a division?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that a division was demanded and about to be had when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] demanded the yeas and nays. Forty-eight gentlemen rose to support the demand for the yeas and nays, which the Chair stated was not a sufficient number. Thereupon the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] demanded tellers on the question of ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. MONDELL. That is not in order. It is for the Speaker to decide whether a sufficient number demanded the yeas and nays, and the Speaker has decided that a sufficient number has not demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The precedent—I do not remember what it is—is that whenever there is a demand for tellers it is in order to definitely ascertain whether the count is correct, and the demand for tellers may be made on the question of whether it is or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] make the point of order that the demand of the gentleman from Wisconsin is not in order?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe that the Chair will find precedents which hold it is within the discretion of the Chair to allow the demand for tellers. The purpose of tellers is to ascertain definitely whether or not there is a sufficient number demanding the yeas and nays. Here we had a large number of Members rising and then taking their seats, some rising even after the Chair had looked over one side of the Chamber, and therefore failed to count them. There was much confusion. It is only fair that the teller vote be had to determine whether there is a sufficient demand for the yeas and nays. The demand for the yeas and nays is a constitutional privilege. The demand for tellers is not for the purpose of indulging in filibustering tactics. It is merely to ascertain the sense of the House as to whether the yeas and nays are desired by those present, a bona fide demand being made where confusion has resulted in the demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. Has the gentleman from Wisconsin concluded his argument?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I disagree entirely with the gentleman as to the purpose of the demand. It is very clear the rule states that the call can be had only when one-fifth of those present demand it. Now, the vote by tellers will not disclose whether one-fifth voted or not, because many men may not go through between the tellers. Therefore that vote will not disclose the total number who are sitting in this Hall. In my opinion the only question is for the Chair himself by actual count to find out how many men are here, and then whether one-fifth of those demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. In the judgment of the Chair a sufficient number not having arisen to support the demand for the yeas and nays vote, if a sufficient number arises in support of the demand for tellers, the Chair's count is subject to verification by the House, if he so desires, and the Chair overrules the point of order. As many as are in favor of seconding the demand for tellers on the question of ordering the yeas and nays will rise. The Chair will count all gentlemen standing. [After counting.] Sixty-seven gentlemen have risen, a sufficient number.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RHODES] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] will take their places as tellers. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays on the vote on the passage of the bill will pass between the tellers and be counted.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Had the Chair announced on the viva voce vote that the "noes" appeared to have it, or that the "noes" had it?
